Three Toronto Men Killed In English Railway Wreck

Crashes Into Freight Train and Turns Turtle at Entrance to Bridge Over River Avon—Graphic Description of Steamship Express Which Crushed Out the Lives of 23 Passengers—High Speed Undoubtedly the Cause of the Disaster.

Salisbury, Eng., July 3.—Driving at a mad pace over the London Southwestern Railway the American Line express, carrying 48 of the steamer New York's passengers from Plymouth to London, plunged from the track just after passing the station here at 1.57 o'clock Sunday morning and mangled to death in its wreckage 23 passengers who sailed from New York June 23, and four of the trainmen.

Besides those to whom death came speedily a dozen persons were injured, some of them seriously.

Graphic Description.

In reviewing Sunday's events, it is recalled that while all went well until the train reached Salisbury, some passengers at various points remarked on the very high rate of speed, one or two expressing some alarm, and those taking supper on the train experienced great difficulty in avoiding spilling the contents of their plates and cups.

A short distance out of Salisbury begins a remarkable curve, which sometimes has been described as the most dangerous in the world, and which certainly possesses elements of danger. Not only does the line enter and leave the station on a curve, but where it crosses Fisherton street the line takes a slight rise in order to afford sufficient headway to the dipping roadway below. It was practically at this point that the engine jumped the rails and brought about a disaster, both as regards the percentage of lives lost and the extent of the damage to rolling stock, almost without precedent in the annals of British railway accidents, and especially of boat expresses.

At the scene of the catastrophe there are five lines of rails. Two are main lines, two others are devoted to local traffic, and the fifth is a siding.

Of these five lines only two were occupied at the time of the accident. A milk train loaded with empty cans was leisurely entering the station in the opposite direction to the express, while at the entrance of the siding there is a solitary locomotive ready to furnish any service the milk train might require.

A Startling Sight.

In the meantime the express, which was due to run through with an ample line of rails on either side of her, came pounding along, swaying heavily owing to the enormous speed. The inspector on the station platform, watch in hand, followed her course with his eyes.

He was horrified to see the train leave the rails, jump to the vacant line on the right, and plunge into the rear of the milk train. A crash like the roar of artillery awakened many inhabitants of Salisbury, a mile away. Within some 20 seconds the whole train became a chaotic mass of wreckage, the ponderous engine having smashed the guards van of the milk train to atoms and killed a guard. Instantly all the carriages broke from their couplings. The engine hurled itself against the edge of the strong iron parapet which bounds the bridge over the roadway. Fortunately it struck the parapet almost end on and so probably was saved from carrying away the parapet and projecting the train into the street below. However, the iron work of the parapet was twisted out of all shape, and a portion of it was detached and fell with a crash to the pavement beneath.

Passenger Hurled 30 Feet.

The impact with the bridge was startling in its results. While the under parts of the railway carriages remained on the track, though off the rails, the woodwork of the carriages projected over the bridge and the street below was strewn with glass and splinters. One passenger was even hurled right through the side of a broken carriage 30 feet to the embankment and either killed and mangled by the fall or by the mass of wreckage that fell upon him.

The locomotive and tender rebounding from the parapet now hurled their immense weight against the stationary locomotive, which became a shapeless wreck, its boiler exploding and so severely scalding both the driver and the fireman that the latter has since died.

A Ghastly Pile.

The express engine finally turned turtle, broken-backed. Carriage was piled on carriage as though by giant hands, the stationary engine tilted towards the concrete platform with the wreckage of one carriage on its top, and the engine and tender of the express almost locked into the stationary engine, everything being smashed and splintered with the exception of the guards' van of the express, which, owing to the presence of mind of the guard who quickly applied the brakes, was not overturned.

The directions to engine drivers over this portion of the line is not to exceed a speed of 30 miles an hour, but it is alleged calculations based on the times at which different signal boxes were passed show that this speed was exceeded. Unfortunately both the engine driver and the stoker are dead, and therefore it may be difficult to obtain reliable evidence as to the speed the train was running when the accident occurred.

Flames Add Terror.

The horror of the scene which now presents itself was intensified by fears of the added calamity of fire. Flames shot up from the furnace of the overturned engine and set fire to debris in the vicinity and a considerable escape

Another Rake Off.

We have in a former article pointed out how a "rake-off" of some thousands of dollars was effected in the purchase and sale of files; now we have another of an equally flagrant character.

Additional land was required in Moncton, New Brunswick, for the use of the Intercolonial Railway. This fact was well known in and about that headquarters of the road, hence, a Mr. Lodge, who, no doubt, received a hint from the knowing ones, took steps to secure options on vacant lands, which he knew would be wanted, then sold to the Government, pocketing the round sum of about $8,000. The facts as given in Parliament, are as follows;

First Mr. R. W. Heuston, solicitor, told of the details of the arrangement. Adjoining the Government property was a piece of high lying land, which Mr. Hueston owned and which he had offered to the Government for $7,000.

Further on, and separated from the Government land by Mr. Heuston's land, was a piece of low-lying land.

In May, 1904, Mr. Lodge visited Mr. Emmerson, in Ottawa, and advised him that these two parcels of land could be got. About that time Mr. Heuston sold his land to Mr. Lodge for 35000 and acted as solicitor for him in procuring the other parcel from its various owners, paying in all $5,075, making a total of $10,075.

Then in September, 1904, the Government bought the whole property for $18,000, thus pocketing some $8,000 in profits in the transaction.

The Minister defended the transaction by declaring the land to be worth the money paid for it.

The reader may fairly ask, what more than doubled the value of the land in so short a time? The answer is plain. A friend had secured it at a few dollars over $10,000, and the Government wanted it, or said they did, and bought it, paying $18,000 for what a short time before had been purchased, or rather received options to purchase, by a friend, at $10,000. Is it any wonder that Government favorites, and some members of the Government grow rich rapidly.

These are evidences of how we are governed at the present moment. Tammany in its palmiest days under Boss Tweed, has been eclipsed.

Speaking of fishing, they say a funny incident occurred on Saturday last. Two visitors to the city went out fishing on the bay, and were out on the "wild waste of waters" when the weather man pulled the plug out and soaked things. Our two friends made their way to the city as speedily as possible, arriving at the wharf about as wet as they could possibly be. The disciples of old Izaak didn't wait for the rain to stop before they went home—they couldn't have got much wetter, anyhow. So they tied their fishpoles together, with an end on each man's shoulder, and went home in Indian file, with their catch — five consumptive-looking perch—suspended from the middle of the poles between them. They passed up Front and Bridge streets at a smart trot, and, as they are built on aldermanic lines, it was a refreshing spectacle to see them. Those who saw the incident say it beat any moving picture ever displayed in Belleville.

A gentleman who rides a bicycle for business purposes asks The Intelligencer to say a word of protest against the indiscriminate blasting which, it is alleged, is done. It is said that blasts are set off which break the glass holders around which the wires go at the top of the telephone and telegraph poles, and that the broken glass is allowed to strew the roadway, thus causing grave danger to rubber-tired vehicles. Our informant complains that he ruined an almost new tire by riding over a piece of one of those broken holders, and says that many streets are strewn with the dangerous material. He thinks the matter should be looked after by the authorities.

Rev Mr. Laidlaw, of St. Andrew's Church, in the course of his sermon last Sunday morning, took occasion to animadvert rather severely on the smallness of school teachers' salaries in this city. It was "scandalous," the Rev. gentleman said, that educated people should be compelled to work for so small a pittance. It was his opinion that school teachers should, one and all, be Christian workers, but how could the authorities expect to obtain the best under the present scale of wages?

It goes without saying, of course, that a man cannot expect cream if he pays for skim milk, but the fact remains that Belleville has, without exception, a most excellent staff of Public School teachers. The city could hardly expect to get a better staff, either mentally or morally, no matter what it paid. But the fact remains, so some of the teachers say, that salaries in Belleville are lower than those paid in other places, and, what is worse, perhaps, they are not justly distributed. This is a matter which might well occupy the attention of the Board of Education.

The gallant Fifteenth arrived back from Campbellford about 1.30 this morning, tired but happy. It was a brief but strenuous campaign, from 3 o'clock one morning to 2 o'clock the next.

Rev. R. H. Leitch, of Holloway St. Church, gave some societies rather a hard jolt last Sunday morning, when he insinuated that all their members did not live up to the principles of their various orders. Come to think of it, the insinuation is not entirely unjustifiable, either. Could you, do you think, throw a brick and hit a man who lives up to all the principles of the fraternal society to which he belongs? If you did you'd have to be a pretty fair marksman.

It will be remembered that, on several occasions, The Intelligencer has advocated the publication of the assessment rolls as a means of bringing about a fair equalization of the assessment. In other places the scheme is said to have worked with great success. Mr. W. E. Anderson, Reeve of Ameliasburgh, has long been an advocate of the plan, and has at last succeeded in persuading his municipality to adopt it. The assessment rolls of Ameliasburgh are now in the hands of the printer, and the experiment will be watched with interest. The municipality and its progressive reeve are to be congratulated on the fact that they are setting a good example, not only to their own county, but to many other places in this district.

The Cheese Board.

There was quite a little breeze at the local Cheese Board on Saturday, when one buyer complained that another buyer had violated the rules of the Board by a personal canvass of salesmen after bids were made but before they were accepted. The president ruled that the objection was well taken, and ordered that the incident must not be repeated. This naturally caused a little flurry, and there were some recriminations, but everything eventually resumed a peaceful aspect.

The offerings were 4397 boxes, of which 100 were colored. All but 640 boxes were sold on the board, the sales being, James Alexandre & Co 2500 at 11 7-16c; Hodgson Bros. 745 at 11 1-2c; Brenton & Son, 362 at 11 1-2c; J. C. Warrington, 150 at 11 1-2c. The balance refused 11 7-16c and 11 1-2c, but eventually accepted the same on the curb.

The offerings last year at the same date were 3320 boxes, against 4397 this year, and the best price last year at the same date was 9 11-16c, against 11 7-16c this year.

The pasture at present is excellent, and the outlook fine for a big season's make.

Fire at Tweed.

Tweed, July 1.—The B. of Q. Ry. engine shed here was totally destroyed by fire which broke out about 3 o'clock this morning. The fire had been raging half an hour before the alarm was given, so the brigade when they arrived poured water on the ruins. A force of men came up from Deseronto this evening to commence the work of clearing away the debris. The engine of the Kingston train was in the shed at the time and was ruined. Fortunately the C. P.R. local engine which also stops there was left outside and escaped.

Headed Off Future Scandals.

A somewhat domineering judge who formerly held an appointment in a small colony was sole occupant of the bench, so he carried everything his own way. One day a member of the local bar disputed his ruling upon a certain point and appealed to printed authority in support of his position, and the judge's account of the incident, as given by himself, is said to be this: "Would you believe it, one of my own bar had the impertinence to tell me that he was right and I was wrong, and he appealed to a law book to support him, his own book and the only one in the colony?" "And what did you do?" was the natural question. "What did I do?" was the indignant answer. "There was only one thing to do. I borrowed the book from him and lost it, so that we shall hear no more scandal of that kind."

Behind Him.

"Do you know your orders, sentry?" a not over bright Irish soldier on guard duty was asked.

"Yes, sor," was the reply.

"Know the points of the compass?" continued the officer.

"Yes, sor."

"If you face the rising sun your left hand would be on the north of you and your right hand to the south of you. What would be behind you?"

"Me knapsack, sor."—London Telegraph.

There is nothing more pleasing than praise if it is honest and you believe you have earned it.

Even the milk of human kindness may contain a few germs.

Every new like or dislike you form only adds additional discomfort to yourself.

THE PITY OF IT.

Alas, how easily things go wrong!
A sigh too much or a kiss too long,
And there follow a mist and a weeping rain,
And life is never the same again.

Alas, how hardly things go right!
'Tis hard to watch in a summer night;
For the sigh will come and the kiss will stay,
And the summer night is a winter day.
—George Macdonald.

HUMAN HAPPINESS.

Is It Couple With Love or Wealth or Ambition.

What is happiness? It all depends upon what you consider hapiness. The peasantry of the continent place money possession far above all other sources of happiness. Woman, art, music, power, ambition, are absolutely nothing to the peasant of France or Hungary compared with possession of money. Balsac, in "Eugenie Grandet," has drawn this terrible passion in the character of old Grandet, who lived and died for one thing—money.

The Greeks despised people who liked to live alone, the Cyclops, arguing that they could not be happy. Yet Diogenes of Corinth, according to Dionysius, was perfectly happy, for he had learned a recipe for happiness—"Despise the world, despise self, despise being despised." Why the Greeks were the happiest people the world saw was because they lived a life of only one dimension, while people to-day live in three or more—the state, society and the church.

To use a musical simile, the ancient Greek life was a legato; ours is a staccato. The Greek life was like an andante of Mozart; ours is like a furious, agitating scherzo. In some countries life is not only staccato, but ten times worse.

The middle ages invented women. In ancient Greece women had no standing at all. Plato knew nothing of the notion that women might make man happy.

Love is full of the most amazing contrasts and contradictions — the dark man passionately admires the blonde woman, the short man the amazon, the man of the north the beauty of the south. The young man whose youth has been solitary is shocked when he meets a young girl full of life and briskness. He should have danced and amused himself with the society of women. Men always love the same type. No matter how many different women they love, the type never varies.

The opposite of love is ambition. Men after forty or forty-five and women after twenty-five or thirty lose love and acquire ambition.—Lecture of Dr. Emil Reich in London.

The King and "Ragging."

King Edward's anger in connection with the recent case of "ragging" in the Guards has been directed not so much against the officers who did the hazing as against the commanders responsible for the admission to the brigade of Guards, even on probation, of subalterns of such unfortunate habits as Lieut. Clark-Kennedy. For he has given strict instructions that in future no subalterns are to be appointed, even on probation, to the brigade of Guards, until their names, their testimonials, and a memorandum dealing with their school life, past career, family connections, and their tastes have been submitted to him personally for his approval. Nor is this all. For the King insists that there shall be further submitted to him photographs, specially taken, of every candidate for a commission in the Guards. In order to understand his attitude in the matter, it must be explained that every officer of the brigade of Guards is, ipso facto, a member of the royal household, besides being intrusted with the protection of the reigning family. Under the circumstances the King does not wish to have among his entourage, and as a member of his household, persons of such frightfully uncleanly habits as young Clark-Kennedy.—Marquise de Fontenoy.

An Indian Shampoo.

Many city men regard a shampoo as a city luxury of modern times. Yet the shampoo is more common with some Indians than with us, and they enjoy it oftener than we do, says George Wharton James in Good Health. The Indian's wife takes the root of the amole, macerates it and then beats it up and down in a bowl of water until a most delicious and soft lather results, and then her liege lord stoops over the bowl and she shampoos his long hair and scalp with vigor, neatness, skill and despatch. I have been operated upon by the best adepts in London, Paris and New York, and I truthfully affirm that a white man has much to learn in the way of skillful manipulation, effective rubbing of the scalp and delicious silkiness of the hair if he knows no other than such shampooing as I received.

Oldest Man In World.

Stuurman, the Bushman, is believed to be the oldest man in the world. He is an old native of Cape Colony, said to be 146 years old. It is known for certain that 65 years ago he was a very old man, and that his son, still living, is over 90 years old. He is one of the few genuine Bushmen still alive, and talks of the days when he wandered over the veldt where Beaufort West now is. He holds that the farm of Stuurman's Puts and the country all round really belong to him, and, living as he does on the top of a hill in a queer shelter of bushes and rags, he is monarch of all he surveys. He is in full possession of his faculties, and has a wonderful set of teeth—without a trace of decay, though they are worn down to the gums by a century and a half of use.

An Island Classed as a Ship.

The island of Ascension, in the Atlantic, is the property of the British Admiralty authorities and is borne on the navy list as a vessel, being classed as a tender to one of His Majesty's ship of war. The island is governed by a naval captain, and the men stationed there (chiefly royal marines) are subject to the same rules as they would be on board ship. There is no private property in land, so there are no rents, rates or taxes. The flocks and herds are public property and the meat is issued in rations.

DOMINION DAY EVENTS

Banquet at Hotel Cecil, London, in Honor of Canada.

Lord Strathcona, Sir Charles Tupper, Dr. Parkin and N. A. Belcourt, M.P., Among Guests—All the Evening Papers of London Have Praise For Our Development — The Thunderer Is Most Generous In Its Tribute.

London, July 3.—(C. A. P.)—Over 350 sat down at the Dominion Day banquet at the Hotel Cecil. Lord Strathcona was in the chair and among the numerous company present were the Bishop of Ripon, the Earl of Derby, Sir Chas. Tupper, Dr. Parkin, G. W. Cockburn and Sir Thomas Barlow.

Lord Strathcona on rising to propose the toast to the King received great applause. N. A. Belcourt, M. P., proposed the toast to the Queen and the rest of the royal family.

The Earl of Jersey proposed the Imperial Forces. He said Canada had set an example the Empire should follow.

Admiral Hopkins responding to same toast said when addressing Canadians he was not addressing strangers. He referred to the C. P. R. steamers having beaten the Cunard steamers.

Of Canada's Best.

Lord Strathcona in proposing the Dominion of Canada referred to Sir Charles Tupper as one of Canada's best and greatest men. Lord Strathcona said Canadians at Bisley and Henley and the Chambers of Commerce and medical associations visit to Canada would draw the Dominion closer to the Empire.

Lord Elgin, responding, claimed the right to share the affection Canadians had for their country, as he was a Canadian born. He congratulated Sir Charles Tupper as the day was his birthday. Referring to the freedom of the British citizen, Lord Elgin said there was no better example to-day than the French-Canadian.

Colin Campbell, Attorney-General of Manitoba, proposed "Our Guests."

The Bishop of Ripon and the Lord Mayor of London responded.

A very large number of those at the banquet afterwards journeyed westward to the Imperial Institute, to Lord Strathcona's at home.

Praise For Canada.

London, July 3.—(C. A. P.)—All the evening papers observe Dominion Day with editorials prasing Canada's development, and noting her prosperity materially and morally. They comment on the growth of the imperial sentiment, and predict Canada's unlimitable future.

Canada's 20th Century Birthday.

London, July 3.—(C. A. P.)—Of Canada's birthday The Times says:

"Never have the auspices for Canada's future been fairer than to-day; never have the patriotic faith and confident assurance of Sir John A. Macdonald and his fellow-workers found more triumphant vindication. The long, disheartening winter of neglect at last is breaking up and to-day Canada bids fair to justify the proud boast that the twentieth century will belong to her."

The Times also points out the growth of imperial sentiment in Canada.

Canadian Pavilion at Milan.

London, July 3.—(C. A. P.)—The Canadian pavilion at the Milan exhibition was inaugurated on Dominion Day in the presence of local authorities, Canadian delegates and invited guests. Toasts were exchanged at the luncheon.

Tupper's Birthday.

London, July 3.—Yesterday was the eighty-fifth birthday of Sir Charles Tupper. In an interview with The News, he said, as compared with the conditions in his youth, the present development of Canada was enormous.

THE DAY IN CANADA.

In Toronto the stellar attraction of Dominion Day this year was the Horse Parade, in which there were over 700 turnouts, and 30,000 spectators in Queen's Park alone. Thousands left the city by rail and boat to spend the day elsewhere. A royal salute of 21 guns was fired by the field battery at noon. In Brantford a military celebration was participated in by the 57th Regiment and band of Peterboro'. At Ottawa the 7th Fusiliers of London trooped the color in the presence of 3,000 spectators. Petrolia had a calithumpian parade and a display of fireworks. At Hespeler the old boys from many places had a grand program of sports. In Old Quebec there was a parade of the 41st Regiment of Brockville and a salute from the citadel of 21 guns.

TIMELY TOPICS.

When you wake to-morrow morning,
will you please give me a call?
And if you fail to rouse me, shout
as loud as you can bawl,
For I must get up early to gather grasses sweet,
As I'll eat no more meat, mother, I'll eat no more meat.

I met a vegetarian; he told me straight away,
That men would be much stronger
if they always fed on hay,
He said we'd grow to like it, while straw would be a treat,
So I'll eat no more meat, mother, I'll
eat no more meat.

Have you read the awful stories that now are being told,
About the strange concoctions, as canned meats being sold.
They use up all the animals — heads,
tails, the hide and feet,
Oh! I'll eat no more meat, mother,
I'll eat no more meat.

They say that Mary's little lamb,
Poe's crow, the deckhand's mule,
And all the other living things we heard about at school,
Are mixed in vats together; labels
tell us what we eat,
Oh! I'll touch no more meat, mother,
I'll touch no more meat!

We'll get used to greens and herb-age; we may even take to weeds;
We'll find cornstalks and mangels are sufficient for our needs;
We'll laud the tender turnip and we'll praise the luscious beet,
But I'll eat no more meat, mother,
I'll eat no more meat.

Set your old alarm-clock going, for fear we might not wake;
Then a nice fresh dew-drenched breakfast from the meadows we shall take,
Now, in case you should forget it, let me just once more repeat,
That I'll eat no more meat, mother,
I'll eat no more meat.

Jacob H. Schiff, who was instrumental in bringing a part of the Japanese war loan to America, was talking to a reporter in New York about his European tour.

"London's courts of law have always interested me," he said, "and I revisited them for about the tenth time. A Q. C. whom I happened to meet there told me how Peter the Great had once gone through the law courts. He said that Peter, at the end of his inspection, said:

"These men are all lawyers. What can be the use of so many? I have only two in my empire, and I mean to hang one of them as soon as I return."

Calve, on the day she sailed for home, praised American servants. "A French writer," she said, "has been declaring that every kind of service in America is execrable. But that is not true. American service is in many respects the best in the world. French servants," said Calve, "incline to be impertinent. I remember a parlor maid I once engaged. This maid neglected her duty shamefully.

"Yolande," I said to her one morning, "there is a month's dust on this piano."

"Madame cannot blame me for that," Yolande retorted. "I have only been living with madame two weeks."

Sir Philip Burne-Jones, who has written a book in praise of America is a relative of the poet Kipling.

The collection of paintings that Sir Philip showed in America during his visit included a very photographic portrait of Kipling, and, as he stood by this portrait one day the young man said,

"Kipling talked about the sea while I was painting him. He was enthusiastic over a week's cruise he had once made on a battleship. He described the battleship's Sunday morning service. It was a very well attended service, every sailor not on duty being there, and after it was over Kipling said to one of the jackies.;

"Are you obliged to attend these Sunday morning services?"

"No—no-o," said the sailor, 'not exactly obliged, but our grog would be stopped, if we didn't."

A SCIENTIFIC ZEALOT.

U. S. Senator William A. Clark, a short time before he sailed for Europe, attended a banquet of scientists. In the course of this banquet the Senator said;

"Science is an admirable thing. In these latter days, indeed, it is a thing as interesting and marvellous as a fairy tale. I have but one fault to find with it. It imbues some of its votaries with too profound a zeal.

"I have in mind, when I say this, a scientific zealot of Scotland—a professor whose especial delight was insects and bugs.

"There once visited this Scotch professor a younger scientist. The visitor remained over night, and in the morning his host said to him:

"And did ye sleep the nicht?"

"Not very well," the visitor answered. "It was a strange bed, perhaps; but," he ventured, "I must confess—"

"Ah," said the professor, encouragingly "ye were juist bitten by something, eh?"

"Well, to tell you the truth professor, I was," the visitor admitted.

"Juist think of that!" cried the professor. "'Bitten, war ye? Noo, man, can ye say it was anything at all noteworthy that bit ye?'

"Fleas, I think, said the other. "But such fleas for biting I never met in my life before."

"I should think so, indeed," said the professor in great glee. "They're Sicilian fleas. I imported them myself."

Origin of Words.

To Milan is owed the word "millinery," a milliner having been originally a Milaner, an importer of feminine finery from Milan, just as a "cordwainer," shoemaker, was a worker in "cordouan," leather from Cordova. It is curious to note how many words have come from the geographical names of northern Italy. There is, for instance, "florin," the coin of Florence, and "pistol," from Pistoja.

Dr. Johnson said that the word "job" was "a low word now much in use, of which I cannot tell the etymology." It is supposed to be really identical with "gob," a mouthful or morsel. Pepys records how "my lord" said to him, "I will do you all the good jobs I can," and Pepys himself speaks of Tangier as "hitherto used as a jobb to do a kindness to some lord." But the simple monosyllabic ugliness of the word was too much for Johnson.

Many words of most august sound prove to be of quite commonplace ancestry when traced to their origins "Finance" is really only "settling up." Literally it is just "ending" and was formerly used in that very simple sense in the English language. Then it came to signify settling up with a creditor and acquired the special sense of ransom.

The Interior of the Earth.

A frequent remark is that mankind dwells on a thin crust encircling a molten mass and that the journey of life is practically on a fire ball incased in a fragile shell that has cooled and that, as it cools further, contracts with earthquake shocks. Much virtue in rhetoric, if the purpose is to elevate the hair and induce cold thrills and gooseflesh. The internal fire of the earth is an inference and, in any large sense, historically harmless if true. Persons who worry over cosmic problems might also keep awake of nights over the palpable truth that the earth moves through space without any visible means of support. On the planet are the plain marks of epochs of ice as well as of intense heat. Scientists agree that glacial ages will come again, but geology teaches that they are gradual and of limited extent geographically.

Microscopic Writing.

Thackeray could write the Lord's Prayer on a sixpence, which is the size of a dime, but it is now possible to write the prayer on a surface so small that one grain of sand would hide it completely. Microscopists sell copies of the Lord's Prayer written in a circle only the five-hundredth part of an inch in diameter. To read the prayer it is necessary to use a lens magnifying 500 times. Writing so incredibly small is accomplished by means of levers six feet long. These levers are so adjusted that the motion is gradually lessened as it travels along them till, when it reaches the delicate end, armed with a minute diamond pen that rests on a glass surface, it causes the pen to register on the glass writing so small as to be invisible.

A British Blunder.

There is an old story of the foreign office in connection with the small French colony of Chandernagore. This tiny possession is situated on the Hooghly, twenty-one miles from Calcutta. It extends two miles along the river and one and a half miles inland from it. During our wars with France the settlement was taken and added to our dependency, but when terms of peace were arranged our minister of foreign affairs, in total ignorance of its position and of the importance of its retention, agreed to its being restored to France. It turned out that he thought it was a small island in the West Indies and of no consequence!—Westminster Gazette.

Man never fastened one end of a chain around the neck of his brother that God did not fasten the other end round the neck of the oppressor.—Lamartine.

Queer Things About Flames.

There is a relation between the color of flame and the energy of the combustion causing it. The more vigorous and complete the combustion the higher the refrangibility of the light. A flame burning in a tardy and restricted way emits rays that are red. When burning in a more complete and effective manner the emitted rays change to violet. The flame of a candle or a lamp consists of a series of eccentric luminous shells surrounding a central dark core. These shells of flame emit light of different colors, the innermost one—that in direct contact with the dark core—being red and having a temperature of exactly 977 degrees F. Upon this and in their proper order of refrangibility are shells of light which are orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo and violet. The reason that such a flame does not appear to us as a nest of cones of different colored light is this: When we look upon such a flame all of the rays issuing from the different layers or strata of concentric luminous shells are received by the retina of the eye at one and the same time. This can only impress with the sensation of neutral or white light.

Rubies.

The finest rubies are still kept in Asia. The Great Mogul had 108 large rubies in his throne, and among them was one weighing two and one-half ounces. Of European rubies Charles the Bold, that luckless son of a fortunate father, had three rubies called the Three Brothers, of perfect color and worthy size. They passed into the possession of James I., who sent them to "Baby Charles." There is a large heart shaped balas ruby in the English crown. It has been neither cut nor polished, is only semitransparent and is of a dark red, like a morello cherry. Austria had, or has, an oriental ruby the size of a hen's egg, and Queen Elizabeth showed Sir James Melville one as big as a racket ball. Runjeet Singh had a large ruby with the names of many kings engraved on it. Among them was that of Aurangzeb. A king of Persia had one which he prized at the value of a city or even a kingdom. It was a table cut balas ruby of a beautiful color of at least a finger's breadth.

The virtue lies in the struggle, not in the prize.—Houghton

The Two Vanrevels

By BOOTH TARKINGTON,

Author of "The Gentleman From Indiana" and "Monsieur Beaucaire"

Copyright, 1902, by S. S. McClure Co.

Then Tom remembered the figure in the long cloak and the military cap and with a sick heart began to understand. He had read the Journal, and he knew why Crailey might wish to masquerade in a major's uniform that night. If Miss Carewe read it, too, and a strange wonder rose in her mind, this and a word would convince her. Tom considered it improbable that the wonder would rise, for circumstances had too well established her in a mistake, trivial and ordinary enough at first, merely the confusing of two names by a girl new to the town, but so strengthened by every confirmation Crailey's wit could compass that she would no doubt only set Cummings' paragraph aside as a newspaper error. Still Crailey had wished to be on the safe side.

Tom sighed rather bitterly. He was convinced that the harlequin would come home soon, replace the uniform (which was probably extremely becoming to him, as they were of a height and figure much the same) and afterward in his ordinary dress would sally forth to spend his last evening with Fanchon. Tom wondered how Crailey would feel and what he would think about himself while he was changing his clothes, but he remembered his partner's extraordinary powers of mental adjustment, and for the first time in his life Vanrevel made no allowance for the other's temperament, and there came to him a moment when he felt that he could almost dislike Crailey Gray.

At all events, he would go out until Crailey had come and gone again, for he had no desire to behold the masquerader's return. So he exchanged his dressing gown for a coat, fastened his collar and had begun to arrange his cravat at the mirror when suddenly the voice of the old negress seemed to sound close beside him in the room:

"He's settin' dah—waitin'!"

The cravat was never tied. Tom's hands dropped to his sides as he started back from the staring face in the mirror. Robert Carewe was waiting, and Crailey— All at once there was but one vital necessity in the world for Tom Vanrevel—that was to find Crailey. He must go to Crailey even in Carewe's own house. He must go to Crailey!

He dashed down the stairs and into the street. The people were making a great uproar in front of the hotel, exploding bombs, firing muskets in the air, sending up rockets, and, rapidly crossing the outskirts of the crowd, he passed into Carewe street unnoticed. Here the detonations were not so deafening, though the little steamboat at the wharf was contributing to the confusion with all in her power, screeching simultaneously approval of the celebration and her last signals of departure.

At the first corner Tom had no more than left the sidewalk when he came within a foot of being ridden down by two horsemen who rode at so desperate a gallop that, the sound of their hoof beats being lost in the uproar from Main street, they were upon him before he was aware of them.

He leaped back with an angry shout to know who they were that they rode so wildly. At the same time a sharp explosion at the foot of the street sent a red flare over the scene, a flash, gone with such incredible swiftness into renewed darkness that he saw the flying horsemen almost as equestrian statues illumined by a flicker of lightning, but he saw them with the same distinctness that lightning gives and recognized the former as Robert Carewe, and in the instant of that recognition Tom knew what had happened to Crailey Gray, for he saw the truth in the ghastly face of his enemy.

Carewe rode stiffly, like a man frozen upon his horse, and his face was like that of a frozen man, his eyes glassy and not fixed upon his course, so that it was a deathly thing to see. Once, long ago, Tom had seen a man riding for his life, and he wore this same look. The animal bounded and swerved under Vanrevel's enemy in the mad rush down the street, but he sat rigid, bolt upright in the saddle, his face set to that look of coldness.

The second rider was old Nelson, who rode with body crouched forward, his eyeballs like shining porcelain set in ebony and his arm like a flail, cruelly lashing his own horse and his master's with a heavy whip.

"De steamboat!" he shouted hoarsely, bringing down the lash on one and then on the other. "De steamboat, de steamboat! Fo' God's sake, honey, de steamboat!"

They swept into Main street, Nelson leaning far across to the other's bridle and turning both horses toward the river, but before they had made the corner Tom Vanrevel was running with all the speed that was in him toward his enemy's house. The one block between him and that forbidden ground seemed to him miles long, and he felt that he was running as a man in a dream and at the highest pitch of agonized exertion, covering no space, but only working the air in one place, like a treadmill. All that was in his mind, heart and soul was to reach Crailey. He had known by the revelation of Carewe's face in what case he would find his friend, but as he ran he put the knowledge from him with a great shudder and resolved upon incredulity in spite of his certainty. All he let himself feel was the need to run, to run until he found Crailey, who was somewhere in the darkness of the trees about the long, low house on the corner. When he reached the bordering hedge he did not stay for gate or path, but with a loud shout hurled himself half over, half through, the hedge, like a bolt from a catapult.

Lights shone from only one room in the house, the library, but as he ran toward the porch a candle flickered in the hall, and there came the sound of a voice weeping with terror.

At that he called more desperately upon his incredulity to aid him, for the voice was Mrs. Tanberry's. If it had been any other than she who sobbed so hopelessly, she who was always steady and strong! If he could he would have stopped to pray now before he faced her and the truth, but his flying feet carried him on.

Beside him knelt Miss Betty.

"Who is it?" she gasped brokenly from the hall. "Mamie, have you brought him?"

"It's I!" he cried as he plunged through the doorway. "It's Vanrevel!"

Mrs. Tanberry set the iron candlestick down upon the table with a crash.

"You've come too late!" she sobbed. "Another man has taken your death on himself."

He reeled back against the wall. "O God!" he said. "Crailey!"

"Yes," she answered. "It's the poor vagabond that you loved so well."

Together they ran through the hall to the library. Crailey was lying on the long sofa, his eyes closed, his head like a piece of carven marble, the gay uniform in which he had tricked himself out so gallantly open at the throat and his white linen stained with a few little splotches of red.

Beside him knelt Miss Betty, holding her lace handkerchief upon his breast. She was as white as he and as motionless, so that as she knelt there, immovable, beside him, her arm, like alabaster, across his breast, they might have been a sculptor's group. The handkerchief was stained a little, like the linen, and, like it, too, stained but a little. Near by on the floor stood a flask of brandy and a pitcher of water.

"You!" Miss Betty's face showed no change nor even a faint surprise as her eyes fell upon Tom Vanrevel, but her lips soundlessly framed the word, "You!"

Tom flung himself on his knees beside her.

"Crailey!" he cried in a sharp voice that had a terrible shake in it. "Crailey! Crailey, I want you to hear me!" He took one of the limp hands in his and began to chafe it, while Mrs. Tanberry grasped the other.

"There's still a movement in the pulse," she faltered.

"Still!" echoed Tom roughly. "You're mad! You made me think Crailey was dead! Do you think Crailey Gray is going to die? He couldn't, I tell you—he couldn't. You don't know him! Who's gone for the doctor?" He dashed some brandy upon his handkerchief and set it to the white lips.

"Mamie. She was here in the room with me when it happened."

"'Happened! Happened!'" he mocked her furiously. "'Happened' is a beautiful word!"

"God forgive me!" sobbed Mrs. Tanberry. "I was sitting in the library, and Mamie had just come from you, when we heard Mr. Carewe shout from the cupola room, 'Stand away from my daughter, Vanrevel, and take this like a dog!' Only that, and Mamie and I ran to the window, and we saw through the dusk a man in uniform leap back from Miss Betty—they were in the little open space near the hedge. He called out something and waved his hand, but the shot came at the same time, and he fell. Even then I was sure, in spite of what Mamie had said, I was as sure as Robert Carewe was, that it was you. He came and took one look—and saw—and then Nelson brought the horses and made him mount and go. Mamie ran for the doctor, and Betty and I carried Crailey in. It was hard work."

"SWISS FOOD"

Miss Betty's hand had fallen from Crailey's breast where Tom's took its place. She rose unsteadily to her feet and pushed back the hair from her forehead, shivering convulsively as she looked down at the motionless figure on the sofa.

"Crailey!" said Tom, in the same angry, shaking voice. "Crailey, you've got to rouse yourself! This won't do; you've got to be a man! Crailey!" He was trying to force the brandy through the tightly clinched teeth. "Crailey!"

"Crailey?" whispered Miss Betty, leaning heavily on the back of a chair. "Crailey?" She looked at Mrs. Tanberry with vague interrogation, but Mrs. Tanberry did not understand.

"Crailey!"

It was then that Crailey's eyelids fluttered and slowly opened and his wandering glance, dull at first, slowly grew clear and twinkling as it rested on the ashy, stricken face of his best friend.

"Tom," he said feebly, "it was worth the price to wear your clothes just once!"

And then at last Miss Betty saw and understood, for not the honest gentleman whom every one except Robert Carewe held in esteem and affection, not her father's enemy, Vanrevel, lay before her with the death wound in his breast for her sake, but that other, Crailey Gray, the ne'er-do-weel and light o' love—Crailey Gray, wit, poet and scapegrace, the well beloved town scamp.

He saw that she knew, and as his brightening eyes wandered up to her he smiled faintly. "Even a bad dog likes to have his day," he whispered.

CHAPTER XIX.

WILL CUMMINGS had abandoned the pen for the sword until such time as Santa Anna should cry for quarter, and had left the office in charge of an imported substitute, but late that night he came to his desk once more to write the story of the accident to Corporal Gray, and the tale that he wrote had been already put into writing by Tom Vanrevel as it fell from Crailey's lips after the doctor had come, so that none might doubt it. No one did doubt it. What reason had Mr. Carewe to injure Crailey Gray? Only five in Rouen knew the truth, for Nelson had gone with his master, and, except Mamie, the other servants of the Carewe household had been among the crowd in front of the Rouen House when the shot was fired.

So the story went over the town how Crailey had called to say goodby to Mrs. Tanberry; how Mr. Carewe happened to be examining the musket his father had carried in 1812 when the weapon was accidentally discharged, the ball entering Crailey's breast; how Mr. Carewe, stricken with remorse and horror over this frightful misfortune and suffering too severe anguish of mind to remain upon the scene of the tragedy which his carelessness had made, had fled, attended by his servant, and how they had leaped aboard the evening boat as it was pulling out and were now on their way down the river.

And this was the story, too, that Tom told Fanchon, for it was he who brought her to Crailey. Through the long night she knelt at Crailey's side, his hand always pressed to her breast or cheek, her eyes always upward and her lips moving with her prayers, not for Crailey to be spared, but that the Father would take good care of him in heaven till she came. "I had already given him up," she said to Tom meekly in a small voice. "I knew it was to come, and perhaps this way is better than that—I thought it would be far away from me. Now I can be with him, and perhaps I shall have him a little longer, for he was to have gone away before noon."

The morning sun rose upon a fair world, gay with bird chatterings from the big trees of the Carewe place and pleasant with the odors of Miss Betty's garden, and Crailey, lying upon the bed of the man who had shot him, hearkened and smiled goodby to the summer he loved; and, when the day broke, asked that the bed be moved so that he might lie close by the window. It was Tom who had borne him to that room. "I have carried him before this," he said, waving the others aside.

Not long after sunrise, when the bed had been moved near the window, Crailey begged Fanchon to bring him a miniature of his mother which he had given her and urged her to go for it herself. He wanted no hands but hers to touch it, he said. And when she had gone he asked to be left alone with Tom.

"Give me your hand, Tom," he said faintly. "I'd like to keep hold of it a minute or so. I couldn't have said that yesterday, could I, without causing us both horrible embarrassment? But I fancy I can now because I'm done for. That's too bad, isn't it? I'm very young, after all. Do you remember what poor Andre Chenier said as he went up to be guillotined?—'There were things in this head of mine!' But I want to tell you what's been the matter with me. It was just my being a bad sort of poet. I suppose that I've never loved any one, yet I've cared more deeply than other men for every lovely thing I ever saw, and there's so little that hasn't loveliness in it. I'd be ashamed not to have cared for the beauty in all the women I've made love to—but about this one—the most beautiful of all—I"—

"She will understand," said Tom quickly.

"She will—yes—she's wise and good. If Fanchon knew, there wouldn't be even a memory left to her, and I don't think she'd live. And, do you know, I believe I've done a favor for Miss Betty in getting myself shot. Carewe will never come back. Tom, was ever a man's knavery so exactly the architect of his own destruction as mine? And for what gain? Just the excitement of the comedy from day to day, for she was sure to despise me as soon as she knew, and the desire to hear her voice say another kindly thing to me, and the everlasting perhaps in every woman, and this one the heart's desire of all the world! Ah, well! Tell me—I want to hear it from you—how many hours does the doctor say?"

"Hours, Crailey?" Tom's hand twitched pitifully in the other's feeble grasp.

"I know it's only a few."

"They're all fools, doctors!" exclaimed Vanrevel fiercely.

"No, no. And I know that nothing can be done. You all see it, and you want me to go easily, or you wouldn't let me have my own way so much. It frightens me, I own up, to think that so soon I'll be wiser than the wisest in the world. Yet I always wanted to know. I've sought and I've sought—but now to go out alone on the search—it must be the search, for the Holy Grail—I"—

"Please don't talk," begged Tom in a broken whisper, "for mercy's sake, lad. It wears on you so."

Crailey laughed weakly. "Do you think I could die peacefully without talking a great deal? There's one thing I want, Tom—I want to see all of them once more, all the old friends that are going down the river at noon. What harm could it do? I want them to come by here on their way to the boat, with the band and the new flag. But I want the band to play cheerfully! Ask 'em to play 'Rosin the Bow,' will you? I've never believed in mournfulness, and I don't want to see any of it now. It's the rankest impiety of all! And, besides, I want to see them as they'll be when they come marching home—they must look gay!"

"Ah, don't, lad, don't!" Tom flung one arm about the other's shoulder, and Crailey was silent, but rested his hand gently on his friend's head. In that attitude Fanchon found them when she came.

The volunteers gathered at the courthouse two hours before noon. They met each other dismally, speaking in undertones as they formed in lines of four, while their dispirited faces showed that the heart was out of them. Not so with the crowds of country folk and townspeople who lined the streets to see the last of them, for these, when the band came marching down the street and took its place, set up a royal cheering that grew louder as Jefferson Bareaud, the color bearer, carried the flag to the head of the procession. With the recruits marched the veterans of 1812 and the Indian wars, the one legged cobbler stumping along beside General Trumble, who looked very dejected and old. The lines stood in silence and responded to the cheering by quietly removing their hats, so that the people whispered that it was more like an Odd Fellows' Sunday funeral than the departure of enthusiastic patriots for the seat of war. General Trumble's was not the only sad face in the ranks. All were downcast and nervous, even those of the lads from the country, who had not known the comrade they were to leave behind.

Jefferson unfurled the flag, Marsh gave the word of command, the band began to play a quickstep, and the procession moved forward down the cheering lane of people, who waved little flags and handkerchiefs and threw their hats in the air as they shouted; but, contrary to expectation, the parade was not directly along Main street to the river. "Right wheel! March!" commanded Tappingham hoarsely, waving his sword, and Jefferson led the way into Carewe street.

"For God's sake, don't cry now!" and Tappingham with a large drop streaking down his own cheek turned savagely upon Lieutenant Cummings. "That isn't what he wants. He wants to see us looking cheering and smiling. We can do it for him this once, I guess! I never saw him any other way."

"You look very smiling yourself!" snuffled Will.

"I will when we turn in at the gates," retorted the captain. "On my soul I swear I'll kill every sniffling idiot that doesn't! In line, there!" he stormed ferociously at a big recruit.

The lively strains of the band and the shouting of the people grew louder and louder in the room where Crailey lay. His eyes glistened as he heard, and he smiled, not the old smile of the worldly prelate, but merrily, like a child when music is heard. The room was darkened, save for the light of the one window which fell softly upon his head and breast and upon another fair head close to his, where Fanchon knelt. In the shadows at one end of the room were Miss Betty and Mrs. Tanberry and Mrs. Bareaud and the white haired doctor who had said, "Let him have his own way in all he asks." Tom stood alone, close by the head of the couch.

"Hail to the band!" Crailey chuckled softly. "How the rogues keep the time! It's 'Rosin the Bow,' all right! Ah, that is as it should be. Mrs. Tanberry, you and I have one thing in common, if you'll let me flatter myself so far. We've always believed in good cheer, you and I, eh? The best of things, even if things are bad, dear lady, eh?"

"You darling vagabond!" Mrs. Tanberry murmured, trying to smile back to him.

"Hark to 'em!" said Crailey. "They're very near! Only hear the people cheer them! They'll 'march away so gayly,' won't they? And how right that is!" The vanguard appeared in the street, and over the hedge gleamed the oncoming banner, the fresh colors flying out on a strong breeze. Crailey greeted Ready For Pomace.

A silo six feet square will hold enough cider pomace for six cattle all winter and will prove a good investment.

To Hold Banks of Streams.

If your meadow land along the banks of a stream is being slowly broken into by the force of the water at the curves of the channel the remedy is to insert a close row of willow stakes about a foot from the edge of the place where the water is noticed. The stakes will root and grow and will usually hold the banks.

For Calves.

Skimmilk and flaxseed jelly is a fairly good substitute for natural milk in fattening calves. Add one pint of flaxseed to three quarts of water and boil 20 minutes, or until it becomes a jelly. For a very young calf use about two tablespoonfuls to each feed of warm skimmilk, and gradually increase the quantity of the mixture, keeping the proportion of jelly and milk about the same.

Squash Borers.

The squash vine borer, which works inside the stalks near the surface of the ground, is the most obstinate enemy to the crop in the older settled sections. A well know authority on market gardening recommends the spraying of the stems frequently near the ground with strong tobacco tea, or putting tobacco dust half an inch or so deep all around the plants, which will keep the borers away or kill the eggs. Also hill up the joints of the plants as soon as they begin to run, inducing them to form roots at these joints, and thus making themselves independent of the injured main root.

FARM NOTES.

he best method of getting cows n hay to grass in the spring, if s pastures are hard so they won't ach, is to begin to let the cows t about as soon as the ground is bare an hour or two a day, on pleasant days, and let them go around and begin to nibble the grass as soon as it begins to grow. Feed them in the barn until they eat less and less as the grass grows, and they finally get their living from the grass, and you won't have to feed them in the barn and they never notice the change.

In preparing the land for strawberries, break up a sod and plant to potatoes one year, following with he strawberries. Plant always in ws 4 1-2 feet apart, taking off rly all the tops but being careful to break the crown of the plant. clean, careful cultivation, and the runners begin to run, go in the same direction with the r so as to throw the runners toward the centre of the rows.

Those who fight the potato beetle with hand spray apparatus or the old-fashioned whisk broom are likely to partly fail by not using enough liquid. The whole plant should be liberally sprayed, whether or not all parts are infested, and the mixture kept thoroughly stirred while being used.

FROM SON,

THE HORSE.

The Horses' Legs.

In general shape we want our horses' legs straight. In the case of the front legs, if we were to drop an imaginary plumb line from the front of the horse where the leg is attached to the body, we would like to see that line pass down the centre of the arm, centre of the knee, centre of the cannon, centre of the ankle joint, and through the centre of the foot.

Passing around to the side, we would like to see this plumb line, starting from the centre of the shoulder, pass down the centre of the leg, knee and ankle joint, but would like enough length and slope to the pastern so the line would fall at the rear or heel of the foot. Passing behind the horse and viewing the hind legs, we would like to see an imaginary plumb line pass down the centre of the hind quarter, through the centre of the gaskin, centre of the hock, centre of the cannon, centre of the pastern and centre of the foot, the same as in the front legs. Viewing this hind leg from the side, an imaginary straight line should pass from the rear point of the hip to the point of the hock and thence down the rear part of the leg.

We have, however, learned to observe our horses' feet and legs more minutely than this. In the first place we would like a different conformation of leg in a horse intended for speed than we would in a horse intended for draft purposes. In our lighter horses we should not care to have them show as much indication of great strength as in the draft horse, nor would we expect the heavy strong leg of the draft horse to show much indication of speed.

We have learned in the study of simple machines that with levers we can lift different weights with a given power in just the proportion that the power arm is greater than the weight arm, but at a sacrifice of speed. We gain speed in just the proportion that the power arm is shorter than the weight arm and the power is lessened in the same proportion. Now we have in our horses' legs, so to speak, a set of levers; the tendons exerting the power and the resistance to the horse's body the weight to be overcome. In the case of the trotting or running horse, where we want speed without much regard for strength, we like to see a good length of cannon bone and not too much width of joint, while in the draft horse we like short cannons, comparatively short pasterns, with a good width of hock joint from before back. We say a wide hock from before back indicates a strong puller, while the opposite denotes more speed and action. This, however, is theory, for while the different structure of legs, as I have mentioned is indicative of strength or speed, we cannot take a tape string and measure a horses' leg and say he can pull a given amount, or go at a given rate of speed.—L. P. M.

BREEDERS' NOTES.

Some breeders claim that a horse with a high ridge on the top of his head will be balky unless carefully treated, while a horse broad in the forehead will be generally intelligent and kind.

Good saddle animals that are also well broken to harness and well mannered both under the saddle and in harness command good prices. A pair of mares of this description were sold in Kentucky not long since for $5000, if report is correct. One of them showed three and the other five gaits under the saddle. Hitched to pole they can pull a wagon a mile in 3.10 and either of them can trot a mile in 2.50 to single harness. It pays to raise and educate that kind of horse stock.—Horse Breeder.

There is always more clear money in raising one good colt and in raising it right, than in raising half a dozen mongrels and not raising them as they should be raised.

Without exercise, it is impossible for the muscles of the young horses to develop, hence, the necessity of a good-sized field for them to run in. If you would have horses of endurance, give the colts a chance to develop their muscles.

HINTS TO HOUSEKEEPERS.

To prevent making a great dust in sweeping use moist sawdust on bare floors. If the floor is carpeted, moisten a newspaper, tear it into small pieces, and scatter over the floor. The carpet will look much brighter than if swept in the ordinary way.

Hot water and soap generally remove grease spots. If fixed by long standing, use either chloroform or naphtha. Both these must be used away from fire or artificial light.

If eggs that are to be boiled hard are put into rapidly boiling water the yolks will not become dark on the outside.

When peeling onions begin at the root end and peel upward, and the onions will affect the eyes scarcely at all.

THE LAUNDRY WORK.

Methods by Which the Drudgery of Wash Day May Be Lessened.

The laundry work of a household is probably the hardest and most tiring part of a woman's work, and a washing day continually postponed is often the sign of an ill regulated household. How shall the general discomfort be lessened and the weekly ordeal be transformed into a day of victory when toil and temper are equally under control and all disagreeables are well out of sight before the evening comes? The cleanliness of our clothing becomes more essential to the health, comfort and appearance of the human race with each step in its advancement.

The wise housewife buys the best quality of light yellow soap. It is probably what is termed a tallow soap, made of selected tallow with a small quantity of resin. Fully two-thirds of all the soap now sold is of this character, and if she chooses some well established brands whose quality and uniformity are well maintained they will be found altogether satisfactory for general laundry work.

The best thing on washing day is an early start, and, though we do not now begin in the small hours as our grandmothers often did, yet we should be up betimes and have also arranged the other work so that it shall interfere as little as possible with the washing.

See that all necessary materials and utensils are at hand. If such things as soap, blue and starch are out of reach much valuable time will be lost; also—and this is very important—the washing day dinner should be planned and partly prepared the day before.

A good meal will marvelously help to keep the worker strong and sweet tempered. No big wash was ever done on bread and coffee.

Beware of leakages, either in tubs or time. The former can be averted by half an inch of water kept in all wooden vessels when not in use, but doorstep delays and porch or garden gossips play havoc with washing day. Comfort and peace and the time so lost can never be made up again.

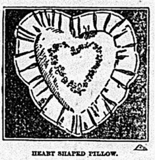
Given a bright, breezy day, plenty of good soap and soft water, the washing day should be a real pleasure to any strong person.—Boston Traveler.

BABY PILLOW.

A Dainty Heart Shaped Head Rest For the Crib.

Baby pillows are getting prettier all the time. Everything about these pretty head rests is of the most dainty order, the material of which they are made being only the finest and sheerest obtainable and the embroidery done in softest French cotton.

Among the different shapes popularly used the heart shaped pillow is perhaps the best liked, for the reason that it combines so much of sentiment about it. Besides the shape, which is symbolical, the pattern worked over its surface shows sprays of tiny forgetmenots done in white cotton.



HEART SHAPED PILLOW.

All the embroidery and decoration on these pillows are done in white as being especially typical of the innocence of babyhood. In some cases the work is more solidly done, but there should be nothing that is harsh to hurt the tender head of the baby. About the heart shaped pillow is a three inch wide ruffle of the finest handkerchief linen, of which the slip is made, hemstitched about the edge. The slips are separate, being buttoned on, the pillow slipped in from an opening at the back so that it can be removed at any time when the slip needs laundering.—New York Telegram.

An Ingenious Couch.

The most ingenious arrangement of a couch was accomplished in a room so tiny that all earlier heroic endeavors to get a couch into that room had failed. The "arrangement," as it was promptly dubbed, was nothing more or less than a frame with woven wire springs and a little mattress, which was fastened securely to the springs themselves. It was attached to the wall by strong hinges and folded up out of the way under an innocent looking curtain that pretended to be only interested in the bookshelves from which it hung. The couch was provided with two strong supports, which were sprung into place and "stayed put" until the spring was released. To all intents and purposes the couch didn't exist except when it was wanted, and, as it only needed space when in use, it didn't interfere in the least with any other arrangement of the room.

Making Beds.

The practice of having beds made in the early morning, though exceedingly tidy, is one which should be discouraged, for it is bad. Constantly we see a bed made half an hour after the sleeper has left the room, wherefore all the exhalations from the skin during the night are confined beneath the sheets and are inhaled again when the bed is next used. It is an excellent practice and one which ought to be encouraged in all young people to turn off the clothes of the bed immediately on rising. The mattress, too, should be turned back, so that all may be properly aired and quite cold before being remade.

STAIN REMOVERS.

A Few Sure Remedies That Will Help the Housekeeper.

A few sure remedies for stains should be memorized or kept handy for reference. Housekeepers do not always remember that boiling water is one of the best solvents known for a number of stains.

When tea and coffee are spilled on the tablecloth stretch the cloth over a large bowl and pour boiling water from the kettle on the spot, allowing the stream to fall with considerable force. If the linen is washed without this precaution the stain will be set and chemicals must be used.

All fruit stains when fresh yield to the hot water treatment. Grass stains are a source of worriment to mothers, and they seem almost as obstinate as a mildew or scorches. However, a hot solution of tartaric acid, increasing its strength if it does not seem to take out the stain, or, rather, change it to a very light brown. This faint brown discoloration will wash out in hot soapsuds.

If a housekeeper is so unfortunate as to have linen mildewed she might as well be resigned, as the antidote for this disfigurement has not been found. For a scorched place nothing is known to be better than exposure to hot sunlight for days.

If ink is spilled on clothing or carpet apply milk at once, soaking and washing the place continuously until all the ink is taken out, then wash the milk out. If the ink is allowed to dry it cannot be taken out with milk. In fact, prompt treatment is the most effective with all sorts of stains.

CHEERFUL GENEROSITY.

The Woman Who Takes Pleasure In the Happiness of Others.

A woman who has taught herself to give up cheerfully, taking pleasure in the happiness of others, becomes generous in mind and heart, giving help to all with whom she associates.

She is able to rise above the mean influence of gossip or scandal, for instance, because, being generous minded, she can give others the benefit of the doubt, and the kindness of spirit that is part of generosity keeps her faith strong in the good and makes her doubt the bad, says the New York Telegram. The spirit will go even farther, for if the bad is proved it gives assistance either by word or act, not bitterly or grudgingly, but sweetly and kindly because of the generous nature that prompted.

Much that passes for generosity is either indifference or a form of self conceit. No desirable reputation is more easy to gain than one for generosity, as a woman may by sending castoff gowns to poor relatives, giving money or other gifts to friends or philanthropies, and in other such ways being quoted as a person who gives. This may not be generosity, though undoubtedly it is giving, and it is pleasant and gratifying to be known as a benefactor, no matter in how limited a way. Indifference that passes for generosity is that form of giving that is done because it is expected and it is easier to give than to refuse.

True generosity lies deeper than either of these, and with it is happiness.

KITCHEN HELPS.

If soda is used in the dishwater no soap will be needed.

Zinc is best cleaned with hot, soapy water, then polished with kerosene and coal ash.

Take care of your copper utensils that the tin does not become worn off. If so have them instantly replaced.

Stand in borax water for a little while dishes that have become brown from baking in the oven and they can be easily cleaned.

All kitchen and pantry shelves should be painted both top and bottom, and if white enamel paint is used paper can be dispensed with.

To clean a fishy frying pan fill with cold water and place on the fire to boil. When boiling put a redhot cinder in, then wash in the usual way.

A pair of sharp scissors is a kitchen convenience desirable in every household. For trimming bacon and ham rinds, skinning parts of fowls and trimming salads scissors are very serviceable implements.

Character In a Room.

The suggestion that a room should be a reflection of oneself is more than worth giving heed to. It is worth acting upon. Whenever we enter a room we receive certain vibrations, attractive or unattractive, and much as we get from characters we meet. There are two aspects to the individuality of a room arrangement, and these are the general and the personal, and they should pleasantly agree. Every room should portray a personal note. Even a room in a boarding house may be made like the individual occupying it, which is certainly the culmination of art. This does not necessarily mean that the person whose temperament is turbulent should manifest this in room arrangement or that a mild, delicate person should have house furnishings to match, but it does mean that the room should be decisive and characteristic in making them more beautiful and better adapted to the person who dwells therein.

The Vaucaire Tonic.

The Vaucaire tonic for developing the figure can be compounded by any capable druggist who is able to secure the genuine galega. Formula: Four hundred grams of simple sirup, ten grams of lactophosphate of lime, ten grams of true extract of galega and ten grams of tincture of fennel. Take two soupspoonfuls in water before each meal. A cold salt water bath every morning will stimulate circulation and assist the filling out process.

THE FREAKS.

A Puzzle With Almost Unlimited Possibilities of Fun.

Here is a puzzle with almost unlimited possibilities of amusement, and it doesn't cost a cent. Take a square piece of black cardboard exactly the size shown in the illustration and cut it up into seven pieces, as marked by the white lines—one square, five right angled triangles and one rhomboid. With these seven pieces any one of ordinary ingenuity can form a great number of figures, most of them grotesque or comical. The illustration shows six such figures. Your own ingenuity will suggest many others.—Exchange.

TRAINING MICE.

Secret of Teaching the Little Animals to Perform Tricks.

"The secret of training mice to run up sticks and perform in various ways is very simple," said a showman. "Worry 'em.

"Suppose you want a mouse to climb a stick, pick up a little flag that you have put there and bring it down. You take the mouse when he's hungry to begin with, you tie a grain or two of oats to the flag, and you put the mouse at the foot of the stick. He won't go up, of course.

"Well, when he turns around to run away you set him back again, with his nose to the stick. If he runs away fifty times set him back fifty-one times. That worries him. Hold him up a little; give him a start.

"He soon sees what you want, and up he goes. When he finds the oats he is satisfied and comes down to eat them. Next time he will do it with half the trouble, and after awhile he will run up and get the flag whenever you put him at the foot of the stick.

"In a short time he will take up anything you wish, whether it is a flag or a little toy pail—anything he can lift."
—Exchange.

The Birds on the Wires.

Many young persons wonder why birds can with perfect safety perch on live electric wires to merely touch which would give man a fatal shock. But these persons do not stop to think of the different conditions under which the contact is made.

Of course you know that no shock is felt when the body is insulated. There must be contact with the ground, either directly or by means of some medium, so as to make a circuit. It is the passage of the current through the body and into the ground that causes the shock.

But there cannot be a circuit when the body is in contact with the wire and with nothing else, and therefore birds may perch on live wires without the slightest electric sensation. Human beings may do the same thing—not quite so conveniently as the birds, but with equal safety, so far as the electricity is concerned.

Soap Bubble Race.

A soap bubble race makes excellent fun. Lay a long stick on the floor to serve as a goal and provide each player with a fan, which can be made of stiff paper, with which to drive the bubbles from the starting point. At a given signal the bubbles are blown and the fans brought into use. If a bubble bursts before the player has reached the goal the player may return to blow a second one.

A Contrary Pet.

My pony's like a naughty child and likes to have his way,
So, when I want to travel on, he always wants to stay!
And when I want to make a stop right past the [illegible] he'll spin.
And then, when I've no errand there, insists on going in!
He bumps me over hummocks when he ought to [illegible] quite slow,
And if I try to hurry him he shakes his head, "Nao!"
I wish he'd stop a minute, but he's started out to roam;
I don't know where we're going, but I hope he'll take me home!
—Annie Willis McCullough in St. Nicholas.

JAPANESE DANCES.

They Are Not Highly Amusing and Are Not Indelicate.

The form of amusement of a dramatic nature that most interests the traveler in Japan is the geisha dance, also the kagura, or common religious dance, and the adzuma-mai, a religious dance performed in the ancient Shimo-Gamo Shinto temple near Kyoto. These dances are not particularly amusing to witness, though all sights of the kind are more or less amusing when witnessed for the first time. The best geisha dancing takes place in Kioto, the next best in Tokyo, but so called geisha dances may be seen in several of the large towns.

Almost more interesting to see, however, are the religious dances. In the kagura, for instance, the dancer usually wears a loose white chemise garment, a pair of flapping trousers, generally of a bright red color, and a long, transparent covering formed like a cloak and ornamented with designs resembling crests. Her hair hangs down her back in a single tress, flowers adorn her forehead, and her face is besmeared with a white compound, said to consist chiefly of white lead. In her hand she holds a bunch of small bells that is not unlike a child's toy. This she shakes at intervals during the dance. Sometimes several girls dance at one time, but in every case their movements are accompanied by a mournful, sacred chant and by a tune played upon a drum and flute by priests. It is wrong to suppose, however, as many Europeans who have visited Japan do suppose, that the mikakoodori dance is indecent. About the genuine geisha dance there is nothing even indelicate or suggestive.—St. James' Gazette.

HE SET THE EXAMPLE.

How a Montenegro Prince Got His Subjects to Work.

Prince Nicholas of Montenegro was obliged to follow Peter the Great's example in order to make his subjects work at all. The haughty Montenegrins have from time immemorial been accustomed to look down upon the mechanic arts of industry as vile and degrading. Prince Nicholas besought them with all his eloquence to learn the necessary arts of life, but all in vain. He used every method, including the "argumentum baculinum," or "paternal" method, with a stick, to which the great Peter was so addicted. Even this argument fell flat. Then the prince tucked up his sleeves, betook himself to a smithy and hammered iron for a day. This method proved effectual. The Montenegrins came to the conclusion that the work of the smithy was not incompatible with their dignity. Shoemaking, however, they could not be induced to look upon as other than degrading. Persuasion failing, the monarch turned cobbler. This was too much for the Montenegrins. When they saw him put his hand to the waxed thread and the shoe leather his faithful lieges gathered round upon their knees and besought him not to sully his royal fingers by touching the accursed thing. "Beat us all," they cried, "only do not do yourself such dishonor." The prince paid no attention and worked till nightfall. Next day the cobblers' shops were full of Montenegrins eager to enroll themselves as apprentices to the trade which Nicholas had ennobled by his own example.—London Mail.

Shakespeare's Indifference to Fame.

Shakespeare never took any trouble to hand himself down to fame and posterity. Superbly indifferent to renown, writing only as the sun shines and as the winds blow—because it was the work he was created for—he dashed off those marvelous productions, and when they had accomplished their object of paying his current expenses and pleasing the public of his time he retired to Stratford-on-Avon, utterly careless, as it seems, whether his splendid plays lived in the memories of men or died out of recollection. It was part of his royal and lofty nature, this large indifference, so grandly contrasted with the modern yearning to be advertised, the latter day ache to be lauded and remembered.—London Chronicle.

Not Their Fault.

General Schofield was once describing in Washington a certain retreat of cavalry. "I call it a retreat," he said, "but I should really call it a rout." He smiled. "In this retreat," he went on, "the commanding general, as his charger tore like the wind along, turned to an aid who galloped beside him and said, 'Who are our rear guard?' The aid, without ceasing for an instant to belabor his panting steed, replied, 'Those who have the worst horses, sir.'"

Joe—Jack's new wife won't speak to me. Tom—Why not? Joe—I got confused at the wedding and tendered him my sympathy instead of congratulations.

Friends should not be chosen to flatter. The quality we prize is that rectitude which will shrink from no truth. Intimacies which increase vanities destroy friendship.—Channing.

CANADIAN ODDFELLOWS AT HOLLOWAY STREET.

INSPIRING SERVICE AND ELOQUENT SERMON AT WEST BELLEVILLE METHODIST CHURCH ON SUNDAY MORNING.

The local lodge of the Canadian Order of Oddfellows, accompanied by many of their brethren from the surrounding district, had their annual church parade on Sunday morning, going to Holloway St. Church, where they had the privilege of listening to an eloquent and helpful sermon by Rev. R. H. Leitch. Headed by the Fifteenth Regimental band, the brethren, in goodly numbers, stepped out bravely through the mud, and made a gallant showing, each member of the Order and Band wearing a maple leaf in honor of Canada's natal day. There was a large congregation present, and the service was a bright and attractive one. The choir, with excellent taste and in fine balance, sang the anthem, "Rock of Ages," Miss Elsie Price taking the solo in her usual sweet and refined way. Rev. Mr Martin assisted the pastor in the service.

In his opening remarks the Rev. Mr. Leitch welcomed the C.O.O.F. to Holloway St. Church. Fraternity was a good thing, he said, but there was no fraternity so blessed as that found in the house of God, and it was fitting for fraternal and beneficent societies to keep in touch with holy institutions. Speaking of the Canadian Order of Oddfellows, the Rev. gentleman said it was a child of the good old English Manchester Unity, which, in fact, was the mother of Oddfellowship. During the past year the C.O.O.F. had flourished as never before, and had seen the most successful year in its history. Speaking of Dominion Day, the preacher said Canada had seen 39 birthdays since Confederation, and her future was never so bright as at present. The world was looking to Canada to-day, and Canadians as a whole must rise to the occasion. The Rev. gentleman then gave a sketch of the early history of Canada, and said her future was in the hands of the people. Some complained about political conditions, but they must not forget that the people governed the country, and when the people had higher ideals they would have better government. After quoting "The Maple Leaf," in honor of the day, the Rev. gentleman recalled Sir John A. Macdonald's famous saying "A British subject I was born, a British subject I will die." This sentiment, he said, was good enough for all Canadians. Rev. Mr. Leitch then gave out his text,

"Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ."

During the course of an earnest talk to the brethren on the text, the preacher reminded them that the valuation of a man's life was his value to society. They should take that view into their society with them. He urged them to be true to themselves and their principles. It was regrettable that all societies did not live up to their principles. If they did there were many things which would not have to be legislated on by City Councils and other bodies. In conclusion he urged them to live up to the words of the text and teach temperance and godliness to their younger members.

During the offertory the band played the "Marche Romaine," founded on Gounod's immortal theme, in really admirable style.

At the conclusion of the service the procession reformed, and marched, by way of Hillside, Moira and Front streets, back to their hall, where they dispersed.

Fifteenth Had Fine Time in Campbellford.

WERE ROYALLY ENTERTAINED AND ARRIVED HOME THIS MORNING, TIRED BUT HAPPY.

About 200 members of the Fifteenth Regiment, including the Brass and Bugle Bands, went to Campbellford yesterday morning, to assist in the celebration of Dominion Day, and also to take part in the ceremonies attendant upon the inauguration of that progressive village as a town.

The boys got an early start, all right enough, assembling on the Market square about 4.30.

With Col. Halliwell in command, the Regiment marched to the station, and left for Campbellford at 5.43, arriving there at 7.20.

The ranks were immediately formed and the Regiment marched to the Fair grounds, where they breakfasted. Dinner and tea were also served at the same place, and the "grub," the lads say, was "strictly all right." All the delicacies of the season were on tap, and if one didn't see what he wanted all he had to do was to ask for it. The Campbellford folks are surely the real thing as entertainers

At 10 a.m. the Regiment fell in for the grand parade, which was excellent in every respect. The Fifteenth headed the parade, and cheerfully "hoofed it" all over the town for about two hours. The boys stepped out bravely, and were liberally applauded by the spectators, of whom many thousands lined the streets.

Following the Fifteenth came floats, societies and many interesting features, the procession as a whole being very creditable.

The Campbellford and Lindsay bands were also in the procession, as was also the Fourteenth Field Battery.

The parade was over shortly after 12, when the men had dinner and were then free till 2 p.m., when they fell in and performed different military evolutions, including the march past. Col. Halliwell was the general officer in command. At half-past three the men were dismissed till seven o'clock, when, in company with the other soldiers, they took part in a sham fight till about eight. Blank cartridge was used, and the scene was a lively one.

The men were then free till train time, and enjoyed themselves watching the fireworks, which were splendid. The boys were royally treated by everybody.

At midnight the train was taken for home, which was reached at 1.40 a.m. It is safe to say that the Campbellford trip of 1906 will always remain a pleasant memory in the minds of the gallant Fifteenth.

NOTES OF THE DAY.

Rain only fell once, while the men were eating dinner. It did not amount to much.

In the evening the officers of the Fifteenth and Fourteenth Field Battery were entertained by the Campbellford Town Council, and the occasion was a highly enjoyable one.

During the afternoon parade Major Stewart's horse bolted, and a serious accident was narrowly averted, but beyond a few slight bruises the Major sustained no ill effects.

Mr. E. Guss Porter, M. P., of this city, was a visitor to Campbellford yesterday, and made a speech at the inauguration proceedings in the afternoon

Bridge Street's Seventy-Fourth Annual Picnic.

YOUNG AND OLD HAD A GREAT TIME AT TWELVE O'CLOCK POINT YESTERDAY.

For personal attentions to the thousands who go with them from year to year, and for aptitude in handling crowds, the members of Bridge St. Church Sunday School are "past masters"; they are everywhere. Telephone operators are supposed to answer more questions in a day than any other., but we make an exception, we believe the committee of management of Bridge St. Sunday School on its picnic day has them badly distanced.

Our citizens who remained at home yesterday and enjoyed (?) for a time a repetition of Saturday's downpour of rain ought to know that one sun-shower is all that visited Twelve O'clock Point Park.

The Aletha was chartered a year ago yesterday for the 74th annual picnic, and by the way, she was again engaged last evening for Dominion Day, 1907, so that our wide-awake friends are a year ahead in preparing for the celebration of their three-quarters of a century of picnics.

Twelve O'clock Point Park has changed proprietors, Mr. H. E. Groft being now the owner. Most of the former attractions remain and new ones have been added.

Excepting Captain Roys, the crew of the Aletha is a new one, and is the best that boat has had.

Young and old entered most heartily into the long programme of amusements in the morning and afternoon. Following is the list of successful competitors, Mr. H. J. Clarke being the "Master of Ceremonies":—

The baseball match was won by the team captained by Willie Wallace. Score 9—6.

WAS IT SUICIDE?

YOUNG WOMAN, SAID TO BE FROM BELLEVILLE, FOUND DROWNED IN LAKE ONTARIO.

Toronto, July 2.—The body of Vivian Brown, a young woman of 25 years, was found floating in the lake near the Exhibition grounds on Saturday, after she had been absent from the home of her mother, 85 Huxley street, since Friday night at 10 o'clock. Death had evidently resulted from drowning, and Chief Coroner A. J. Johnson decided that an inquest was unnecessary.

Miss Brown and her mother lived together at 85 Huxley street, the young woman having come to Toronto from Belleville a few months ago. The father, who is a clergyman, is at present in North Dakota. Mrs. Brown, the mother, was very reticent, both to the police and the chief coroner, as to the cause of her daughter's action. According to a story among the neighbors, however, there was some trouble between them last week. The young woman's absence from the house was noticed on Friday night, and a neighbor who was called by Mrs. Brown made a search of the neighborhood without being able to find her. Her disappearance was reported at No. 6 police station, and when the body was discovered on Saturday, it was not long before she was identified.

SAD HAMILTON HOMES

Dominion Day Not One of Unalloyed Pleasure There.

Four Suicides, One Accidental Drowning, and a Fatal Runaway Accident Among the Major Mishaps in the Ambitious City During Last Three Days—Two of the Suicides Caused by Disappointed Love.

Hamilton, July 3.—Four suicides, one accidental drowning, a fatal runaway accident, and many minor mishaps is the grim record of the last three days in Hamilton. Early yesterday morning O'Neil, 210 Market street, was found dead in bed by his wife. The gas jet in his room had been turned on and he was asphyxiated. Coroner Baugh will try to discover whether he turned on the jet himself, either by accident or design or whether it was turned on by somebody else.

Fatal Runaway.

Yesterday afternoon a horse attached to a rig containing Mrs. Elizabeth Daniels, Toronto; Mrs. Sarah Ann Daniels, West Avenue and Young street, and her son, Frank, ran away on Red Hill near Stony Creek. Mrs. Daniels, of Toronto, had one leg broken and was injured so badly internally that she died a short time after reaching the city hospital. Mrs. Daniels of Hamilton had one arm torn right off at the shoulder and one leg broken. Her son was also badly injured.

Disappointed in Love.

Charlie Scott, a youth of nineteen, had been keeping company with Miss Amelia Crockett, and his friends claim that they were engaged but that the engagement had been broken off in favor of another suitor last Saturday. Last evening about 9 o'clock the disappointed lover stood in front of the home of the girl, placed a revolver at his right ear and pulled the trigger. The girl's father heard the shot and ran out to find Scott lying on the roadside. He was apparently dead, but later he showed signs of life. He was hurried to St. Joseph's hospital where the doctors have little hope of success.

Other Deaths.

Miss Harris, 355 East Barton street, dressed herself in her brother's clothes and threw herself into the lake on Friday. It is supposed on account of disappointment in a love affair.

Monday morning the body of John McKellar, 11 East Barton street, was found near the Turbine Steamship Co.'s wharf at the foot of John street. He had wandered away from his home last Thursday. He was 74 years of age, and had suffered two paralytic strokes lately. A widow and nine children survive him.

Frank Wright, a youth, whose home is on Sumach street, Toronto, was drowned off the Turbinia wharf Monday evening. He had been employed as a waiter on the Turbinia, and got into a rowboat in the dock with three fellow-waiters. They started rocking the boat, and succeeded in capsizing it. All could swim but Wright, who sank in 25 feet of water, and was drowned.

Choked Under Wheel.

Dunchurch, July 3.—While teaming on the James Bay Railway, about thirty-three miles from Parry Sound, Jas. McEwen was thrown from his wagon; his neck caught between the wheel and a stone, choking him to death.

Boy Killed on Track.

London, July 3.—Harold Wren, ten-year-old son of John Wren, this city, was struck and killed by a G. T. R. flyer last night while attempting with two other lads to cross ahead of the train. He was thrown to one side of the track with both legs and an arm broken, and jaw and skull fractured. He was taken to the hospital and died a few hours afterward.

Rope Around Neck, Jumps Bridge.

Lethbridge, Alta., July 3.—W. B. Nicholson, up till a short time ago an engineer on the C. N. R., but who recently resigned his position, committed suicide by attaching a rope round his neck and jumping from a bridge into the Vermillion River. He leaves a widow and two children. He came from Chapleau, Ont., to Dauphin, about two years ago.

Three Girls Drowned.

Brockville, July 3.—While bathing at Star Lake three young ladies, Misses Jennie and Alice Burgess and Katie Love were drowned.

27 OUT OF 47 ARE DEAD

of gas from the reservoirs underneath the train. Officials, however, with the greatest promptitude brought hose to play, checked the flames at the outset and turned off the gas.

The few officials at the station who were soon reinforced by willing helpers from the town, with the aid of lamps began the work of rescue. The spectacle that met their gaze was heart-rending. Instead of the shrieks that might have been expected, ominous silence succeeded to the horrors of the scene. Stationmaster Lawrence says this was what most struck him on arriving at the spot. Both the injured and the survivors seemed to be too stricken or too dazed by the suddenness of the tragedy to utter even a murmur. The waiting rooms of the station were hastily prepared for use as surgeries or mortuaries. In the carriage huddled in wreckage almost under the wheels of the upturned engine death had been busiest. Here nine men and five women were taken out dead soon after the accident. The driver and fireman were quite dead in their cab.

These were all taken to the waiting room and several of the injured were given first aid and dispatched to the infirmary which fortunately was not far distant.

Bodies in a Heap.

The work of rescue proceeded slowly until the arrival of the break down gangs from London and Exeter and despite the utmost despatch it was noon before the last of the dead was extricated from the ghastly prison house.

When an opening was made into the second carriage, a terrible sight was revealed. At one end of a compartment several bodies were jammed together, in an almost unrecognizable mass. It was six or eight hours before it was found possible to remove them.

The scenes around the wreck were calculated to shake the strongest nerves. The sobbing and cries of young Mrs. Cossitt wrung tears from many of the rough men among the rescuers. She herself was little hurt, but her husband was so severely injured that though still alive his case was seen to be hopeless. He died shortly after being taken to the infirmary, and the bereaved bride was taken to the residence of a local doctor, from whence she subsequently went to friends in London. Among the dead is Keeler, the "human enigma." He had telegraphed to his aged mother in London from Plymouth of his expected arrival.

The Morbid Throng.

Throughout Sunday the scene was visited by thousands of people coming by motor-car, by railroad, or on bicycles.

The cause of the accident is still in doubt. It is suggested that the wheels of the engine failed to take the switch, or that a wheel or axle broke. A careful examination may afford some evidence.

The train was regarded as having been light for high speed, but it is notorious that trains always sway and shake going at any speed over this curve. Usually at the Salisbury curve steam is shut off and the brakes applied.

No such serious accident has occurred since 1899, when the New Haven boat train and the Brighton Express collided at Wivelsfield, killing six passengers.

The Inquest.

The inquest was opened yesterday afternoon in the banquet chamber of the City Hall. Representatives of the American Line, the South-Western Railway, the Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, and the Association of Engineers and Firemen were present. The American consul at Southampton, Albert W. Swalm, is looking after the interests of the Americans.

Immediately after the jury had been sworn they proceeded to the railroad station to view the bodies. Reporters were not allowed to accompany them.

When the jury returned the coroner announced that only evidence regarding the identification of the bodies would be taken, and that the inquest would then be adjourned for a fortnight. He expressed deep sympathy with the victims and their surviving relatives.

No further deaths have been recorded. The bodies of the dead are still in the waiting-room of the railroad station. Where no relatives are available, the identification of the dead will be made by the doctor and purser of the New York. The bodies of the American victims are being embalmed for conveyance home.

THE CANADIAN VICTIMS.

Rev. Mr. King's Death Was Particularly Touching—Mr. Barwick Desired to Keep an Engagement.

Salisbury, Eng., July 3.—(C. A. P.)—The death of Rev. Mr. King was particularly touching.

He did not lose his senses for a second, and even when he felt death creeping on him and when he was pinned in the wreck he prayed for those around him. He must have been suffering terrible agony, yet to the end his thought was for others.

When told by the surgeons that he must compose himself, he said that his duty was to pray.

Barwick Keeping Faith.

The body of the late Walter Barwick, K. C., a victim of the Salisbury wreck, was brought to London last night and now lies at an undertaker's at 82 Baker street. If the Canadian relatives so desire it will be embalmed and sent home, otherwise it will be interred by relatives here.

Col. Atkinson, brother-in-law of Mr. Barwick, who had the sad duty of identifying the remains, returned to London last night, having been at Salisbury since Sunday afternoon. He was present at the inquest yesterday afternoon. Beyond the identification of the bodies, nothing developed. Identification was not difficult.

It is believed the desire to keep an engagement influenced the deceased to take the fatal train.

Mr. Pipon's Interment.

The remains of the late C. A. Pipon are still at Salisbury, where his sisters await the wishes of the Canadian relatives. If so desired, interment will be in the family vault on Guernsey Island.

Francis King, brother of the late Rev. R. L. King, went to Salisbury for the inquest and has not yet returned.

Find Infant's Body Dead.

Chesley, July 3.—The body of a dead female child was found on the railway track Sunday. An inquest is being held. Everything points to some person going north on the train Saturday night having pour carbolic acid in the infant's mouth and throwing it off the train. The infant was about four weeks old, and was neatly dressed in factory linen clothes, and was apparently well nourished.

Hobbs Remanded.

New York, July 3.—David Hobbs, the former customs inspector, employed by the Canadian Pacific Railway, arrested here as a fugitive from justice on a charge of perjury, was formally arraigned yesterday before United States Commissioner Alexander and remanded to the Tombs prison, pending the arrival of extradition papers from the Secretary of State.

Four Buildings Burn.

Lethbridge, Alta., July 3.—At 5 o'clock Sunday morning fire broke out in Stafford's Village, two miles from here, and before it was controlled destroyed four buildings. Wm. Scott lost two stores and a barn, with all their contents, valued at $5,000.

To Grow Silk in Canada.

Winnipeg, July 3.—Silk culture in Canada on a large scale is the plan of the Japanese Government, and for the purpose of securing suitable locations for these farms, T. Oye is now touring the Northwest.

Rockefeller Buys Fossils.

Chicago, July 3.—John D. Rockefeller has purchased for the University of Chicago the most extensive collection of fossils and minerals probably in existence in the United States.

Van Horne's Prize Winner.

Winnipeg, July 3.—Word has been received here that the shorthorn heifer, Golden Garland, purchased by Sir William Van Horne for his farm at East Selkirk, Manitoba, has won the medal and championship of her class at the Royal Show at Derby, England. It was the first time she had ever been exhibited.

It does do good baking

This is the range that bakes better because the diffusive oven flue draws in cold air from the kitchen-floor, carries it around the oven, and pours it HOT down into the oven FROM THE TOP in a current that moves all round the whole oven and up and out the flue. When that clean, hot air leaves the oven it takes with it all the moisture, all the odors, which in OTHER ovens stay in and saturate the baking food. Perfect draft control, perfect oven, draw-out oven rack for easy basting,—all points singular to

One lot of very choice selects sold at $8.20, and balance at $7.75 to $8 per cwt., weighed off cars. HANDBOOK MEN FINED

Four of Them Mulct in $200 Each by Judge Winchester.

Each Had Also to Furnish Bond of $1,000 That They Would Not Engage in the Same Business For One Year—Judge, In Passing Sentence, Read the Young Men a Lesson on the Moralities of Life.

Toronto, July 4.—Judge Winchester yesterday dealt with some of the "handbook" men who were taken up two weeks ago. The charge against them was keeping a common betting house. The fines levied by the judge were $200 each or three months in jail. The following pleaded guilty: Frank Beer, Richard Jakes, John Allison, Herbert Franklin.

In addition to the fines the judge insisted on each of them furnishing a bond for $1,000 that they would refrain from engaging in the same business for one year. In passing sentence His Honor said:

"The business you have been engaged in has ruined many a young man, and the pernicious habit of betting has even reached women, which is much to be regretted. Many a young man has come to a bad end through gambling. Some have committed suicide, some are in jail, some in the asylum. Employers have lost money through their clerks, who have been playing the races.

Every Man's Duty.

"You should try to help men instead of dragging them down. I do not wish to imprison you. I want to help you, because you are capable of doing something better. In the future you should try to influence others to do good.

"The fine that I am going to impose on you is small, compared with the money you are supposed to have made.

"In imposing this fine upon you I want you to understand that if ever any one of you come before me I shall use the most drastic measures and will give you the severest punishment the law will permit".

The convicted men paid their fines and furnished the required bonds.

Sam Clapp said he was not guilty and was remanded until Friday. Fred Vose said the same thing, but it is understood he will plead guilty when the cases comes up on the same day.

Great Church Burned.

Hamburg, July 4.—The great church of St. Michael, with its tower and spire 426 feet high, was totally destroyed by fire yesterday. The tower, in falling, crushed several neighboring houses, and they caught fire. Four workmen, who were repairing the church, were killed. The church was one of the city's objects of pride. It was erected on the site of the ancient church, which was burned in 1750 by lightning.

Family Fight Among Quebec Members Anent the Sunday Law Bill—Bourassa Tells of Alliance Between Them to Fight Bill Broken Up by Strategy—Says His Late Allies are Tools of Premier.

Ottawa, July 4.—In the House of Commons yesterday morning Mr. Aylesworth introduced a bill relating to the Supreme Court of Judicature of the Province of New Brunswick. He explained that the bill was designed to give effect to the recent legislation of New Brunswick reorganizing the Judiciary of that province and creating a Supreme Court, with two divisions, one of appeal, the other of trial.

Ballot Stuffer Rewarded.

Mr. Lake called attention to a despatch printed in a Regina paper stating that H. J. Moberly, who had been fined $100 for making a false return of the ballot at a poll which was never held in Prince Albert in the recent provincial election in Saskatchewan, had been appointed to take the census in the far north.

Mr. Fisher replied that he had no knowledge of the matter, beyond the fact that he had received a list of enumerators appointed, but had not looked at them. He promised to do so.

"Will the Minister remove Mr. Moberly's name from the list if it is there?" asked Mr. W. F. Maclean.

"That will depend upon circumstances," replied Mr. Fisher.

An Alleged Improper Payment.

Mr. W. H. Bennett again brought up the question of the alleged payment to Mr. Robert Watson, the representative for Parry Sound, of the sum of $60 for the hire of a tug used in connection with the erection of a lighthouse on the Magnetawan River.

Mr. Brodeur replied that with reference to the payment to Mr. Watson, that gentleman had stated that he had received no pecuniary benefit from the payment for the tug, and the officers of the Department had assured him that Mr. Watson had given the Department every assistance in getting the lighthouse built as cheaply as possible.

Not Good Enough For Canada.

Col. Sam Hughes called attention to a statement that 10,000 Salvation Army emigrants from the east end of London were going to South America, and suggested that they should have come to Canada.

Mr. Oliver replied that he had learned, in conversation with a representative of the Salvation Army, that these emigrants who were going to South America were not regarded by the Army as of the same class as those they had hitherto brought to Canada. Therefore, they thought these people were better suited to South America.

Money Lenders' Bill Passed.

In committee on the bill respecting the money lenders, clause 3 was amended, after some discussion, to provide that the rate of interest after a judgment has been rendered on a negotiable instrument or contract for a loan not exceeding $500 shall be 5 per cent. The rate previous to the judgment still is limited to 12 per cent.

The bill was reported and read a third time as the House rose at 1 o'clock.

Montreal Harbor Appointments.

Some discussion ensued in the House yesterday afternoon respecting Mr. Brodeur's delay in appointing the new harbor commissioners for Montreal. Mr. Brodeur stated that he had not had time to decide on the appointments.

In reply to a question by W. F. Maclean the Minister admitted that there were no lack of applicants.

Alliance Against Sunday Bill.

There was a family quarrel yesterday afternoon between Mr. Bourassa (Labelle) and Messieurs Piche and Rivet of Montreal. Mr. Piche rose to a question of privilege. There had been a mass meeting at Montreal last Friday. It was addressed by Mr. Bourassa, who had denounced him and other members from Montreal as traitors. He entered a sweeping denial of the statements and charges made at the Montreal meeting by Mr. Bourassa.

Mr. Rivet followed. He had been invited to attend and did attend the meeting. He felt that after hearing his address, the majority of those present were satisfied with the bill as reformed by the Piche amendment.

Mr. Bourassa replied and detailed some unwritten history of the opposition to the Sunday bill amid repeated and emphatic denials from Mr. Piche. According to Mr. Bourassa, he, Armand Lavergne, Mr. Piche, Mr. Rivet and another (probably Gervais) had formed an alliance to resist the bill at every stage unless certain amendments, including Mr. Bourassa's, were adopted. At the mass meeting at Montreal, Mr. Rivet had appeared at the Champ de Mars, addressed the meeting and announced that the amendment offered by the member for St. Mary's (Mr. Piche), had been adopted and that now the Sunday bill was all right.

"Naturally," continued Mr. Bourassa "I was indignant.

He went on to say that the Piche amendment had no such effect as Mr. Rivet claimed for it. It was an attempt to deceive the people of Quebec.

Convenient For G. T. R.

Mr. Fielding's bill to permit the Grand Trunk to substitute railroad stocks and bonds for the five million dollars in cash deposited with the Government was taken up, and Mr. W. F. Maclean protested vigorously against a further depletion of the value of our securities. Already the telegraph system had been withdrawn, and there had been incorporated the Grand Trunk Pacific Telegraph Co.; the branch lines had been withdrawn, and Parliament had incorporated the Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines Co. These depletions were made for some definite end. What was behind it all?

Mr. Fielding was non-committal. The act of 1904 required a deposit of $5,000,000 in cash or Government securities. It was more convenient for the Grand Trunk to deposit railway securities, and it was immateriate to the Government so long as the security itself was ample.

No Subsidy For T. & N. O. R.

On the House going into committee on Mr. Emmerson's bill to appropriate the sums needed for the railway subsidies already approved by resolution, Mr. Haggart (South Lanark) enquired why no subsidy was voted to the Ontario Government to continue its provincial railway to James Bay. Mr. Macdonnell (South Toronto) pointed out that other provinces had received large grants to reimburse them for building railroads. Why should there be this discrimination?

Mr. Emmerson said the case of the Temiskaming Railway was unique. It was the only railway in Canada actually built, as well as financed by a province.

Mr. W. F. Maclean could see no distinction between a road built by a private corporation, and one built by a province.

Mr. Kemp (South Toronto) also urged the claims of the province.

Mr. Fielding claimed that Nova Scotia had not received more than her

The Lord's Day Bill.

The Lord's Day Bill now before Parliament, is causing no little trouble to our French-Canadian fellow subjects, led by Bourassa and Lavergne, and now Tarte has entered the battlefield. "We hope," writes Tarte, in La Patrie, discussing the Sabbath Observance Bill, "that such a Draconic measure will never be adopted. Never has the liberty of the subject been so disregarded. As a matter of fact such a bill would not be accepted in a country governed by the most autocratic methods There is no government or public man capable of carrying such a measure into force. We are asked how Sir Wilfrid Laurier ever consented to become the champion of so retrograde a measure. We believe that opportunism is one of the things which the Prime Minister believes in most A violent pressure has been brought to bear on the Cabinet, and particularly upon the Prime Minister by the Alliance. The Presbyterians, who constitute a numerous and respectacle element in Ontario and the Lower Provinces, have dictated to the Liberal party."

If the charge against the Presbyterians of dictating to Sir Wilfrid and the Liberal party the policy of introducing a Bill providing for the better observance of the Lord's Day, is well founded, they deserve commendation and praise from every well-wisher of Canada It is about time some people learn that portions at least of Canada is and will continue to be a country in which some regard is shown to the command to keep holy the Sabbath day. This feeling is growing even in the Province of Quebec the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Montreal being a strong supporter of Sabbath Observance, he having issued a pastoral favoring it.

As for Sir Wilfrid, he is beyond doubt what Tarte declares him to be, an "opportunist." Believing the question popular just now, he throws himself into the stream and calls upon the Sabbatarians to see how "we apples swim."

Is it any wonder that the Archbishop, having in view the state of religion in France, and the utter disregard for the Sabbath in that country, should try to prevent the Province of Quebec from falling into the same state. At present it is very little better.

Sohmer Park in Montreal is one Sunday rendezvous for all kinds of wickedness, and should not be tolerated in Canada. Every Sunday afternoon and evening there is a band concert, interspersed with vaudeville turns, sometimes really good, other times coarse and vulgar. French comic songs full of vulgar innuendo and double entendre generally find a place on the programme. Outside the auditorium, which seats about 3,000, there are wheels of fortune, booths for baseball throwing, cane ringing, and the like, while a bar with a license to sell beer does a roaring trade. Unquestionably the Park attracts many working people, whole families spend Sunday afternoon or evening there. The place is run in direct opposition to the wishes of Archbishop Bruchesi, and this was undoubtedly the institution to which his recent pastoral letter referred Sohmer Park is no credit either to Montreal or to Canada. The bill now before the House should become law without the addition of "saving clauses" to protect political friends of the Government from a slight monetary loss.

That the members of the Government have no fixed principles upon the question is shown in the votes they record in the Commons.

The debates show them to be at sixes and sevens. Though a Government measure, introduced into Parliament by the Minister of Justice, they divide and vote against each other, Laurier, Fielding and Brodeur voting one way, and Aylesworth, Paterson and Fisher voting the other way. A happy family, truly. The truth is Laurier is fishing for Sabbatarian votes, while opposed to the principles and provisions of the Bill; while his Ontario colleagues are angling for support in their Protestant constituents.

Is it not interesting to witness in Canada a Government under our system, introducing an important measure for which they are all responsible, voting against each other upon many of the provisions of their own measure?? What does it prove? Simply that they are not honest and have no fixed principles, other than retention of office.

It doesn't seem half so hard to pay your debts when you haven't any.

They have some queer ideas down in "Old Kebec." Montreal is going to tax fixed awnings over sidewalks at the rate of five cents a square foot. It might be thought that, on the contrary, the people, who put up such awnings, would be regarded as public benefactors instead of being penalized as criminals for the shelter they give the public from excessive sunshine and rain.

This is how the Kingston Whig discourses of military camp conditions. It is just possible that disinterested people, who have been in camp both at Kingston and Cobourg, may differ with the Whig's views. Self-interest often warps a fellow's eyesight, you know. However, here is what the Whig says:

"After being in camp both at Ottawa and Cobourg, the Kingston corps have come to the unanimous conclusion that as a military camp ground, Barriefield heights has the other places beaten to a standstill. The regiments that camped during the past two weeks at Cobourg, were fairly disgusted with the place and the treatment accorded them. Rural regiments found that the general treatment they got in Kingston was fifty per cent. better than in the lunch counter town this side of Port Hope, and will be more than glad to come back to Kingston next year. Cobourg has had the camp for 1906, owing to somebody's negligence in not having a suitable rifle range erected at Kingston. This rifle range will be constructed before the snow flies, and next June the old historic heights of Barriefield will again resound with the hum of military camp life. There is not the slightest doubt but what Kingston is better situated for a camp than any other place in central or eastern Ontario."

There seems to be considerable sense concealed in the following, from the Brockville Times: "Why all this talk about teaching children to save money? Is money-saving the chief object in life? Do we want to teach the children that the miser is the ideal to which they ought to aspire? Better, far better, to teach the children how to use their money properly, than to instruct them in hoarding it up."

Frankford Beat Marmora.

Frankford, July 3rd, 1906.

To the Editor of The Intelligencer;

Sir, — Will you be kind enough to lend me a space in your sports column for the following;

Umpire Watson's decisions, peculiar though they were often, had no connection whatever with the walloping the Frankford team gave the Marmora team yesterday afternoon.

The Frankfords gathered a total of 6 runs against 4 for Marmora.

They tallied one in the first and followed it up with one in the third, three in the seventh, and one in the eighth. Allen had splendid control and his choice assortment of benders was at all times too much for the Marmoras. There was never a moment that he was not master of the situation. It is true the Marmoras made eight hits off him, but might just as well have been left in the ice-box. Marmora got two in the third one in the seventh, and one in the eighth, making a score of 6 to 4 in favor of Frankford.

Frankford — 1 0 1 0 0 0 3 1 — — 6

Six Months in "2 in 1."

A Consulting Chemist Makes a Novel Experiment. An Unsolicited Letter that Explains Itself.

"I write to state that on account of your "2 in 1" Shoe Polish being criticised, and the charge made that it injured leather, I made this test as follows:

I mixed the contents of a box of "2 in 1" Shoe Polish, bought at a retail store from regular stock, with four ounces of water and into this mixture put a kid glove, and left the said glove in the mixture in a bottle from June 15th to December 15th, 1905—a full six months. I then took the glove out, washed it and examined it. The fine leather of the glove was not affected in the least. It was as pliable and soft as when new, and was not altered in condition, nor were the stitches affected in any way. This test, I consider, proves that "2 in 1" does not injure the finest leather.

I hereby state that these facts are correct and true.

J. M. WILLIAMS, Consulting Chemist,
Hamilton, Dec. 15th, 1905.

FALLING HAIR STOPPED.

Baldness Caused by Destroying the Parasitic Germ That Causes It.

Baldness follows falling hair, falling hair follows dandruff; and dandruff is the result of a germ digging its way into the scalp to the root of the hair where it saps the vitality of the hair. To destroy that germ is to prevent as well as cure dandruff, falling hair, and lastly, baldness. There is only one preparation known to do that Newbro's Herpicide, an entirely new, scientific discovery. Wherever it has been tried it has proven wonderfully successful. It can't be otherwise, because it utterly destroys the dandruff germ. "You destroy the cause, you remove the effect." Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. —J. S. McKeown, special agent.

The Searchlight as a Terror.

A despatch from Durban conveys the information that the searchlights used by the British armies in the movement against the revolted Zulus have been shown to be of great military value, not only in the direct results of their use but also in their indirect influence upon the natives. From the military point of view the great advantage gained from the sweeping of the light over the horizan has long been recognized. In a country free from forests it is practically impossible for a night expedition to proceed far without being discovered, and in several recent campaigns the light has proved quite as effective as an army of pickets or spies might be. Both on land and sea the searchlight seems to have won a definite place in armament.

The indirect effect of the use of the lights upon the natives has its interest also. As the Zulus saw the light suddenly flashed into their faces they cowered and fell on the ground before what they termed the latest witchcraft of the British. They thought the eyes of the Almighty had been turned against them in anger, and their fright was just as great and their disorganization as marked as if they had had their position riddled by a storm of lead. As an easy way of winning a victory the searchlight seems to have been as effective as the firing of the old-fashioned arquebuses was when the colonists first came to this country and the astonished natives fled in terror from the sticks that thundered. Unfortunately time dispels such fears, and it is strange that long before this the Zulus have not discovered the real facts about the newest machinery of warfare.

Incidentally the story is a reminder of the wonderful changes which are going on all the time in the methods of warfare on land and sea. The criticism of the navy officers made by a recent fault finder suggests that there must be constant study on the part of officers in order to keep them in touch with modern developments. The best tactician of 1865 would be a complete failure now without an entire revision of his methods. The field commander of a generation gone would be helpless in a present day contest. And the most encouraging thing of all is that, despite the increased effectiveness of agencies of destruction used in warfare, many of the advances are being made along lines which lead to the saving of human life.

"We are a restless people," observes the Sedgwick (Kan.) Pantagraph. "Every thin woman longs to be fat. Every fat woman wants to grow thin. Every town man longs for the time when he can retire to the quiet of the country, and every farmer hopes to some day quit work and move to town, where he can take life easy. Country newspaper men would like to try their hand on a city daily. The fellows on the big dailies dream of a time when they can own a paper of their own. In youth we long for maturity. In age we yearn for the happy days of childhood. There is no excuse for it other than that we all seem to be built that way. The grass seems to be just a little bit greener and thriftier most any direction from the place you occupy right now. Contentment is as near to happiness as you can get in this world."

Boy Was a Good Listener.

The Smiths were not overcautious in discussing neighbors' faults in the presence of their little son. A van one day backed up to the curb, and, much to Mrs. Smith's disgust, her boy Tommy assisted an objectionable neighbor to move. The little fellow worked hard and made himself very useful. When the last wagonload had been hauled away and the doors of the vacant house locked Tommy returned home, tired and disgusted. His mother could not reconcile the boy's early enthusiasm with his present dejection, and she asked him what was the matter.

"I worked and watched around the house all day," whined the tired little fellow, "but I didn't see them take any skeletons out of the closets."

SAFETY.

Never in all the history of transportation has travel been safer than it is to-day. Seated in perfect comfort in any of the mile-a-minute trains of the Lake Shore Railway you are in less danger by far than was your grandfather in the lumbering six-mile-an-hour stage of a half or three-quarters of a century ago. Trains over this line are protected and guarded in a way that is but little short of marvellous. Every device that skill or money can provide is used without regard to the expense and in spite of the high speed—the fastest in the world—you are as safe here as in your own home. Combined with safety and high speed are luxurious comfort and punctuality, all combined to make a service unequaled the world over. See that your ticket reads "via Buffalo and The Lake Shore Railway," and write for full information to J. W. Daly, Chief Ass't G. P. A., Buffalo, N.Y.; A. J. Smith, G. P. A., Cleveland, Ohio, or W. J. Lynch, Passenger Traffic Mgr., Chicago, Ill.

DEATH BY DROWNING.

Two Minutes Under Water Sufficient to Cause Fatal Results.

Drowning is a quicker death than most people suppose. Insensibility is said to begin in about one minute, and fatal unconsciousness generally supervenes in the neighborhood of two. Even practiced divers cannot remain under water more than a minute and a half, and it is almost fatal to remain beneath the surface longer than that.

At Navarino, where there are many expert divers who plunge into the sea after sponges, not one was found who could remain under water for two minutes. In the Red sea the Arab divers generally remain down one and a quarter minutes, while at Ceylon the pearl fishers can seldom stay below for even one minute. There is a case on record at Falmouth, England, where a diver had descended eighty feet and on giving the signal was drawn up slowly, so it was two minutes before he reached the surface. Blood ran from his ears and nose, and he was insensible. He died without speaking.

Insensibility, however, does not always involve death, for in many cases a person may be resuscitated by the use of energetic measures. The bringing to of people who have been under water for five consecutive minutes, however, is considered doubtful by physicians. There have been extraordinary cases related, nevertheless, where persons have been brought back to life after having been submerged for fifteen or twenty minutes, but it is probable that they have come to the surface again and again during that time.

SAINT OF THE COOKS.

A Queen of the Culinary Art Who Lived in Genoa.

Santa Zita, as the patron saint of the cooks is named, lived, it appears, at Genoa and was there canonized. She could, so runs the legend, cook better than any chef within 300 miles of the town, which, we all know, is noted for its wonderful soups and dumplings, though of course in the latter indigestible article of food outrivaled by Vienna, since it is one of the chief articles in the religion of gastronomy that it is only in the kaiserstadt that the "glose" is in perfection. Santa Zita was, it seems, not less famous for her piety than for cooking and was a constant attendant at the cathedral during high mass.

One day, however, she fell into a trance, so called—though, in plain English, a good, sound sleep—and quite forgot that she had to produce an exceptionally fine dinner for a large company. On awakening she hurried forth from the sacred edifice in a way which was far indeed from her wont, but on reaching the kitchen what was her surprise and delight to find a party of cherub celestials busy cooking the required dinner. She did not interfere, but was at first not unwilling to accept the praise which was lavished on her culinary success. She soon repented, however, and told the world the truth about the spiritual and miraculous help she had received, and it was agreed on all sides that she deserved to be canonized. Accordingly she became Santa Zita.—London Queen.

Philosophers and Traffic.

Many a philosopher in the course of his star gazing has fallen into a ditch—and worse. The fate of Professor Curie, the discoverer of radium, who, intent upon its possibilities, fell under the wheel of a wagon and was crushed to death, might be paralleled by several instances of the kind from lives of philosophers, notably that of Archimedes of Syracuse, who was so concentrated on a mathematical problem when its Roman besiegers at last burst into that city that he fell under their swords in spite of his impatient, "Noli turbare circulos meos!" Stepniak, too, the Russian refugee, was so engrossed with the study of nihilist questions in the course of a walk in a London suburb that he was run over and killed by a train at a level crossing.—London Chronicle.

Winning a Verdict.

Sir James Scarlett, the famous English lawyer, held that verdicts could be won without eloquence, and he proved it many a time in his own career. His skill in turning a failure into a success was wonderful. In a breach of promise case the defendant, Scarlett's client, was alleged to have been cajoled into an engagement by the plaintiff's mother. She was a witness in behalf of her daughter and completely baffled Scarlett, who cross examined her. But in his argument he exhibited his tact by this happy stroke of advocacy: "You saw, gentlemen of the jury, that I was but a child in her hands. What must my client have been?"

Era of the Olympiads.

The "era of the Olympiads," or the "Olympian era," began July 1, B. C. 776. An Olympiad was a period of four years, the games being celebrated every fourth year. When it was first proposed to use the Olympian era the earliest record that could be found was that of the victory of Choroebus, who won the great foot race long before horse racing and chariot racing were introduced. His victory was taken as the starting point of the Olympiads.

Pertinent Query.

"So he no longer calls his pretty little home 'The Nutshell?' Why did he change it?"

"He got tired of having passing humorists ring his bell to ask if the kernel was in."

Consolation.

"Well, I'll die game, anyway," remarked the sparrow as he was shot by mistake for a reedbird.

Half the truth will very often amount to absolute falsehood.—Whately.

PAUPER CHILDREN'S COST.

Oliver Twists of Bermondsey Must Not Ask For More—Treacle Supply Is Cut Down For Economy.

The president of the Local Government Board has called attention to the Board of Guardians, of Bermondsey, to the high cost of the poor law schools. Recently a question was put in Parliament about the high cost of the schools, and Mr. Burns has called upon the guardians to furnish him with a return showing the cost per child per week. Mr. Pitts Fenton, the clerk to the guardians, has now prepared this return, from which appears that each pauper child costs the ratepayers £1 1s 9d per week, and that a year ago the cost was £1 9s.

Boys Taught Trades.

These costly poor-law schools are situated at Shirley, upon an estate of some seventy acres. So extensive is the colony that the headmaster recently asked the guardian to provide him with a horse and trap so that he could "get about" the huge pauper demesne, on which over thirty scattered cottages are erected, with buildings for workshops, schools, and administration offices. Roads have been made on the estate, which is now a complete pauper colony, out of which the children very rarely go. The children, of course, are well looked after, but there is the objection that they are brought up with a pauper taint by poor-law officials, and never got any idea of life in the outside world. In each cottage on the colony is a family of fourteen or fifteen children, and a foster-mother is in charge. The return issued by the guardians' clerk makes it clear that the actual cost of the food of each child is 3s 3d per week. The money expended, of course, goes principally in officialism. On the estate is a huge swimming-bath which cost hundreds of pounds. There are various workshops in which boys, when they are old enough, are taught trades, and each lad, as a matter of fact, has a tiny plot of land to cultivate, whilst a space around each cottage is laid out for flower culture. As the estate is beautifully wooded, this poor-law colony is a perfect garden city.

Cut Down the Treacle.

Since Mr. Burns has been in communication with the guardians upon the question of the great cost of the schools, an attempt at economy has been introduced by reducing the dietary scale by taking away from each child 1 oz. of treacle, 1 1-2 pints of milk, and 2 oz. of rice.

In connection with the cost of pauper children it may be interesting to mention that in Lambeth, with barrack schools at Norwood, the cost is about 15s per child per week. At the Hanwell schools of the city and Southwark the cost per child is 16s or 17s per week. Opinions differ as to the best means of dealing with poor-law children, but there is a growing feeling that an excellent plan, and one which is most economical, is that of boarding the children out with families in the country.

Two Actresses and Two Pictures.

An illustration of the vicissitudes of those who follow the theatrical profession is given in an incident which has occurred at Peterborough. About two years ago a touring company was stranded at Peterborough, and two actresses were left in the plight of having neither money enough to pay their landlady nor to leave the city.

They went to a local tradesman, and asked him to lend them money on a pawnticket for two pictures which had been pledged at Nottingham for £14. He lent them £1, and subsequently advanced them £3 more, on which they were to journey to London. A little later the tradesman redeemed the pictures, and wrote to the girls in London asking if they cared to buy them back. He received a reply from one of them, stating that her friend had died, and saying that he might keep the pictures.

A short time ago he sent them to be sold at Christie's, thinking that they must be of some value for a pawnbroker to advance the sum of £14 on them. To his surprise they made £140, and he at once wrote to the actress from whom he had last heard, informing her of the lucky windfall. But the actress had died a day or two before the sale.

War's Sad Legacy.

The graves of Britain's fallen soldiers in South Africa have not been forgotten. The Guild of Loyal Women of South Africa have just issued the report of their special committee on this subject, showing that five years of steady organized work have been now completed. Still, much remains to be done. In some cases, for instance, it has been found necessary to remove the bodies—where the proximity of the grave to dwelling houses or drinking water has been a danger to health, or where several graves have been scattered about one farm, and where a grave was so far out of reach that it is clearly impossible to undertake to look after it. During the war, too, it must also be remembered, burials were often hurriedly done, and in most unsuitable ground, with the result "in many places bodies have been found exposed, wind and weather having washed away the soil which covered them." Re-burial was absolutely necessary in these cases, and the bodies have been placed separately in coffins, brought in, and laid to rest in the nearest cemeteries.

The Laws of England.

Lord Halsbury has undertaken the compilation of a large work to be entitled "The Laws of England." This is intended to be a complete statement of the whole law of England, and will occupy about eighteen or twenty volumes. The general scheme is being planned by the ex-Lord Chancellor, and the work will be carried out under his direction, with the co-operation of a body of lawyers.

Vicar Disbands His Choir.

The result of a dispute at Brixworth, a Northamptonshire village, has been the dismissal by the vicar of the organist-choirmaster and the affixing of a notice to the church door disbanding the choir. The vicar told a meeting of the congregation that he had been compelled to take this action in consequence of an offensive letter from the organist and the dictatorial attitude of the choir.

PHYSICIANS OF SHAKESPEARE.

And the Parts They Play In the Divine Bard's Various Works.

Of the thirty-seven undisputed plays of Shakespeare, physicians appear in the dramatis personae of five. These are the "Merry Wives of Windsor," "King Lear," "Cymbeline" and "Henry VIII." In "MacBeth" there are two, an English and a Scotch doctor, neither of whom is much of a credit to the profession of their time. One humbly admits, says a writer in The New York Medical Journal, the superiority of the King's miraculous touch to all the resources of his art for the cure of scrofula, a remedy practiced for the King's evil in England as late as in the reign of Queen Anne. The other is worse than confounded by the somnombulism of Lady Macbeth in the sleep-walking scene, and admits that "this disease is beyond my practice." When appealed to for aid by Macbeth in the sonorous period beginning "Canst thou not minister to a mind diseased," the doctor lamely and impotently replies, "Therein must the patient minister to himself."

This is an unusually frank acknowledgement of incompetency, and shows an inexcusable lack of familiarity with the ordinary sedatives and hypnotic drugs which would have given Lady Macbeth at least temporary relief in her disturbed sleep and distressed nervous state. Such drugs were numerous enough in Shakespeare's day, as is shown by the powerful knock-out drops of Friar Laurence in "Romeo and Juliet," which were administered to the youthful heroine with such fine effect. Henbane, theriac, opium and probably also valerian were well known, and it seems a pity that Macbeth could not have had in consultation the physician of King Lear, who was far more resourceful, and would have been quick to prescribe for the unfortunate lady one of the many simples which he knew "whose power will close the eye of anguish."

Dr. Caius, the irascible French physician in the "Merry Wives of Windsor," and one of the aspirants for the hand of sweet Anne Page, is a good deal of a buffoon, and is made the victim of much of the horseplay of the comedy. Mistress Quickley, in urging Fenton's suit, asks Anne's mother, "Nay, will you cast away your child on a fool and a physican?" an argument which would imply that doctors were not then regarded with much favor by ambitious mothers with marriageable daughters, a social estimate which has perhaps not entirely disappeared at the present day.

Dr. Cornelius, in "Cymbeline," was associated with the plotting queen in many curious experiments on animals. He has suspicions that her interest may not be solely that of a love for pure science, and declares that he will not trust "one of her malice with a drug of such damn'd nature which first, perchance, she'll prove on cats and dogs, and then afterwards up higher." It is interesting to note that a similar objection to animal experimentation has been raised by the latter-day anti-vivisectionists. By substituting a harmless power for the lethal draught the murderous stepmother had prepared, the doctor saves the life of fair Imogen. Dr. Butts, the royal physician in "Henry VIII," is but lightly sketched, and seems to have been little more than a boot-licking parasite at the court of the polygamous prince. None of Shakespeare's physicians rise in point of characterization to the level of Chaucer's doctor in the prologue to the "Canterbury Tales." While he is not described in wholly complimentary terms, he is distinctly human in his qualities, seems a real person, and is curiously modern in many of his traits.

In all this world ne was ther non him lyk
To speke of phisik and of surgerye;
He knew the cause of every maladye,
Were it of hoot or cold, or moyste, or drye,
And where engendred, and of what humor,
He was a verry parfit practisour,
Of his diete mesurable was he,
For it was of no superfluite
But of gret noriching and digestible,
His studie was but litel on the Bible.

Saluting at Sunset.

While it has always been the custom, says The Naval and Military Record, in the British Navy to pay due respect to national colors when hoisted in the morning, no ceremony is observed when the colors are hauled down at sunset. To remedy this omission, Rear-Admiral H. S. H. Prince Louis of Battenberg has issued a memorandum, directing that at the hauling down of the colors at sunset all officers and men who are on the upper deck will face aft and salute the colors, the buglers sounding the sunset call.

Bread From Turnips.

At a time of failure in the wheat crop it was demonstrated, says The Bakers' Times, that very good bread could be made from turnips. They are first prepared as a vegetable, cleaned and cooked in the usual way. When mashed a great part of the water is pressed out of them, and the pulp then mixed with an equal quantity in weight of wheat meal. The dough is set to raise with yeast and then treated in the usual manner—kneaded, made into loaves, and baked. The bread is found to be a little sweeter than the regulation kind, but fully as light and white.

Dust On a Pin Point.

A very simple experiment made by an eminent bacteriologist determines in a startling manner the potential dangers associated with accumulations of dust in living rooms. A pin point was used to convey as much dust as so small a vehicle will carry. This yielded no less than 3,000 colonies of living germs when cultivated on gelatin, and although fortunately every species was not representative of disease yet the majority were potent sources of decomposition and danger to health.—London Telegraph.

Frost and the Soil.

Frosts, especially early spring frosts, are great pulverizers of refractory soils, beating any tool yet invented for this purpose. Soil thus comminuted and pulverized liberates plant food, and this explains why fall plowing of the land will in most cases produce better crops than land plowed in the spring.

A Friend Told Me About Bu-Ju

THE GENTLE KIDNEY CURE

Hundreds of people, who have been cured of Kidney Trouble by Bu-Ju, were first induced to try this wonderful remedy by friends who had themselves been cured. The sales of Bu-Ju are daily increasing, because everyone who takes them is benefitted—and these in turn, tell others. So the good news is spread.

Here is what a Picton man says about Bu-Ju:—

"I have used Bu-Ju with great benefit to myself, and cheerfully recommend to all who, I think, are suffering from Kidney Troubles and Rheumatism.

"I think Bu-Ju the best remedy made."

Yours sincerely,

Well! She isn't prim and proper,
But she doesn't care a copper
What they say.

She's so innocent of wrong
That she's happy all day long
On her way.

She's no zealot or fanatic,
She don't try to wax ecstatic
To be good.

She's a woman through and through Whose religion is to do
What she should.

No! She may not be ideal,
But, what's better far, she's real
And intact.

She's no figment of a dream,
Nor a poet's idle theme,
She's a fact.

Among the freaks of fashion, says a U. S. paper, one has come in of ladies wearing double veils through which the countenance cannot be distinguished. This is a revival of usages that belonged to times when ladies were forced to such methods to save their modesty. The demands of modesty can hardly be pleaded in our day. This fashion is said to be rampant at Newport, but must, we think, soon give way. Gentlemen receive bows from persons whom they cannot distinguish, and who may, for all they know, be very undesirable. It will, perhaps, be found necessary not to respond to such bows.

William Leiferman, a University of Chicago law student, comes nearer being a real Lochinvar than anybody else Chicago has put forth in that line in many a day. On Saturday night he eloped from Centralia with his sweetheart, though she was clad only in her "nightie" and her bedroom slippers, and though her stern parent the Rev. Alexander Monroe, guarded her with loaded guns. Now he has her behind barricaded doors at his mother's home at 3316 Sixty-third street, and sweaas that there will be bloodshed if the parson papa attempts to retake her. Seven doughty friends of Leiferman keep him armed company in his vigil and the police of Englewood station are ready to respond to a call in the event of an attack.

COW DEAD £20 YEARS.

Members of British Parliament Give Example of "Red Tape" Business, Which Is Costly to Taxpayers.

British Government business is just as much tangled up by red tape as ever it was. Dickens is supposed to have ridiculed much of it out of existence but in reality he accomplished little. In proof whereof this story of the Purley cow, which has just been made the subject of a Parliamentary "white" paper, "ordered by the House of Commons to be printed" as is duly set forth in the precious document itself, and "printed for His Majesty's stationery office by Eyre & Spottiswoode, printers to the King's most excellent Majesty."

To begin—as near the beginning as it is possible to begin—something over two and a quarter centuries ago, some charitable person, whose identity since has eluded the vigilance of exhaustive Parliamentary inquiries, donated to the poor of the parish of Purley, a little village in Berkshire, a cow "valued at £6," which is about $30 in Canadian money.

The cow, which must have then been dead about a hundred years, first attained national recognition in 1786. In the Parliamentary returns of that year—printed, no doubt, as they are now, at fabulous cost—it was recorded, among other interesting and important details that there was in the hands of the overseer of the poor of Purley the sum of £6, known as the "Purley cow money," and, furthermore, that the overseer paid 6 shillings ($1.50) a year as interest on the cow money, which was distributed "occasionally" among poor widows.

The cow cropped up again in 1837 in a report made to Parliament by "the commissioners appointed in pursuance of acts 5 and 6, Will. IV., c. 71, as continued by the act 7, Will. IV., c. 4, to continue the inquiries concerning charities in England and Wales (vol. 32 part 1, page 236)." According to this report, the long defunct Purley cow still was yielding $1.50 a year.

Third Report In 1862.

The cow continued to sleep its last sleep undisturbed for a quarter of a century, but in 1862, in another report on local charities there appeared this alarming entry in tabular form:

Location and designation of charity.	Total former income.	Observations
Purley.—Cow money ...	£0 6s 0d	Lost

But, strange to relate, this started no hue and cry in Parliament to discover what had become of the lost Purley cow money. The American civil war was absorbing public attention. For nearly another half century the Purley cow was forgotten. Then, it is supposed, some member of Parliament browsing among the old records, came across the above entry, and saw therein a brilliant opportunity to justify his election by starting an inquiry to ascertain how the money was lost, and why it could not be found again and when the poor old cow died, and what it died of, and various other things that the zealous legislator deemed of transcendent importance. So he set in motion the machinery provided by "Act 5 and 6, Will IV., c. 71," and all the rest of it.

In due time the official wheels began to go round, and there followed a lot of correspondence with the parish authorities at Purley. That proving unsatisfactory, a $4,000 a year assistant commissioner of charity journeyed to Purley first class—his traveling and hotel expenses are paid by the Government—and summoned all the parish officials to a solemn inquiry into the matter which was held in the village schoolroom. Oaths were administered and evidence taken, and no doubt the air round about was electric with excitement. It is hardly conceivable that the Purley cow itself, when alive over 200 years ago, ever created such a profound sensation.

Fund Disappears In 1837.

In his report, the assistant commissioner of charity recapitulates everything that Parliament had done to revive the memory of the cow. He concludes by stating that in 1837 Edward Sherwood, as overseer of the poor of Purley, was the custodian of the £6 cow money. "Since his death," he adds, "there has been no payment, and the money cannot be traced, but it is said that his descendants can.

That leaves the door open for some fussy official or inquisitive M. P. to resurrect the cow at any time in the near or remote future, by demanding to be informed if any efforts have been made to trace the descendants of Mr. Sherwood and if not, why not, and so on.

Meanwhile the taxpayers have had to pay a large sum for publishing the ridiculous report. But what an illuminating light the incident sheds on the necessity for sweeping Parliamentary reforms when such absurd trivialities can be thrust upon the attention of a body intrusted with the Government of the largest Empire in the world. The Purley cow deserves to be immortalized.

The Chained Library.

Wimbourne, Ireland, is noted for many things, but its famous chained library is perhaps the most notable of its curiosities. The library possesses unique interest as being one of the earliest attempts to disseminate knowledge among the people. The collection was made accessible to the people in 1686 and numbers some two hundred volumes. The scarcity of books and the value of the collection are both indicated in the care taken for their preservation and especially against loss of such treasures by theft. By means of chains and rods the books were securely fastened to the shelves and these chains, it is rather surprising to learn, were not renewed until 1857, when the library fittings were repaired. Among the interesting works of the collection is a copy of the first edition of Sir Walter Raleigh's "History of the World," 1614. It has suffered from fire and tradition says that Mathew Prior was responsible for its present condition, the story being that he fell asleep when reading it once upon a time and the pages were burned by his candle. It has been neatly repaired and its mishap now adds to its interest. The oldest volume in the library is a fine old copy in vellum of "Reginum Aninnarum." It is in manuscript and bears the date 1343.

A Fire in Rome.

A lawyer who visited Rome tells how the fire department grappled with a blaze in the Eternal City. He says:

"The fire was in what we would call a grocery store. It seemed a long time before the fire department responded, but after awhile I saw a hose wagon dash around the corner, with a number of firemen standing on the running boards on each side. The wagon stopped at a hydrant, and each fireman jumped from the wagon with a little roll of hose. The first man coupled his to the hydrant, and then each man coupled his section to the preceding section. Finally they had water on the fire, and after another long period a man with a plumed hat drove up in a victoria. He was the chief. The captain of the company and the chief saluted with much ceremony, then shook hands and then held a long and dignified conversation. Finally, I suppose, the captain told the chief the grocery was on fire, and the chief acknowledged it was and complimented him on his perspicuity. Oh, yes, they finally put the fire out, and Rome still stands!"

Social Limits.

You may tell a man that his necktie cannot be reckoned among his successes, you may point out his errors in regard to investments, you may reproach him for omitting to take advantage of the opportunities he has had for advancement, and he will accept all your criticisms with a reasonable calm, but take gentle exception to the way in which he pronounces a word and the chances are that his next remark is of a heated nature.—London Queen.

Took All the Responsibility.

"I'm going to give up that new specialist I've been trying."

"What's the reason?"

"Why, he's always telling me that I must try to help myself."

"What did the other man tell you?"

"He always told me he was helping me."

Where?

An English mayor tells this story: "A woman, speaking at a meeting in support of women's rights, repeatedly asked her audience, 'Where would men find themselves without women?'

"A weak voice from the rear of the hall:

"'In paradise, mum!'"

LITTLE BELL BIOGRAPHIES

Mendelssohn

FELIX MENDELSSOHN (-BARTHOLDY), born at Hamburg 1809, died at Leipsic 1847, was one of the greatest composers of the 19th century, and though not a brilliant player, he was an organist and pianist of high distinction. His career, like Bach's, Mozart's and Beethoven's, illustrates the power of good music in the home. He began his studies under his mother, and first played in public when only 9 years old. In his 11th year he produced 60 compositions—songs, cantatas, dramatic scenes and trios. At 15 he composed his fine Symphony in C minor (Op. 10). And so great was his precocity that at 17 he finished the score of his Overture to Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream," which, though more than three-quarters of a century old, is still one of the most brilliant achievements in modern music. His Oratorio "Elijah" and his "Scotch Symphony," have added considerably to his fame.

Of his piano compositions, the best known and most popular are his "Songs Without Words," the scores of which were first published in 1832, when he was 23 years old. They are full of a peculiar vein of pure and charming melody and of simple sensuous harmony. Though devoid of great technical difficulties, they require the aid of an instrument like

The Bell Piano

With its rich, Singing Tone and its easy, flexible action, to render forth all their lovely moods and beauty. The "Songs Without Words" are pre-eminently for the home, and the Bell Art Piano is beyond all others both the virtuoso's and The Home-Lover's Piano.

AFTER TREATMENT

Peter E. Summers, of Kalamazoo, Mich., relates his experience:

"I was troubled with Nervous Debility for many years. I lay it to indiscretion and excesses in early youth. I became very despondent and didn't care whether I worked or not. I imagined everybody who looked at me, guessed my secret. Imaginative dreams at night weakened me—my back ached, had pains in the back of my head, hands and feet were cold, tired in the morning, poor appetite, fingers were shaky, eyes blurred, hair loose, memory poor, etc. Numbness in the fingers set in and the doctor told me he feared paralysis. I took all kinds of medicines and tried many first-class physicians, wore an electric belt for three months, went to Mt. Clemens for baths, but received little benefit. While at Mt. Clemens I was induced to consult Drs. Kennedy & Kergan, though I had lost all faith in doctors. Like a drowning man I commenced the New Method Treatment and it saved my life. The improvement was like magic—I could feel the vigor going through my nerves. I was cured mentally, physically and sexually. I have sent them many patients and will continue to do so."

The Two Vanrevels

By BOOTH TARKINGTON,

Author of "The Gentleman From Indiana" and "Monsieur Beaucaire"

Copyright, 1902, by S. S. McClure Co.

it with a breathless cry. "There's the flag—look, Fanchon, your flag!—waving above the hedge, and it's Jeff who carries it. Doesn't it always make you want to dance! Bravo, bravo!"

The procession halted for a moment in the street, and the music ceased. Then, with a jubilant flourish of brass and the roll of drums, the band struck up "The Star Spangled Banner," and Jefferson Bareaud proudly led the way through the gates and down the driveway, the bright silk streaming overhead. Behind him briskly marched the volunteers, with heads erect and cheerful faces, as they knew Corporal Gray wished to see them, their captain flourishing his sword in the air.

"Here they come! Do you see, Fanchon?" cried Crailey excitedly. "They are all there—Jeff and Tappingham and the two Madrillons and Will, the dear old fellow—he'll never write a decent paragraph as long as he lives, God bless him!—and young Frank—what deviltries I've led the boy into!—and there's the old general, forgetting all the tiffs we've had. God bless them all and grant them all a safe return! What on earth are they taking off their hats for? Ah, goodby, boys, goodby!"

They saw the white face at the window and the slender hand fluttering its farewell, and Tappingham halted his men.

"Three times three for Corporal Gray!" he shouted, managing somehow to keep the smile upon his lips. "Three times three, and may he rejoin his company before we enter the Mexican capital!"

He beat the time for the thunderous cheers that they gave. The procession described a circle on the lawn and then, with the band playing and colors flying, passed out of the gates and took up the march to the wharf.

"The flag, the flag!" whispered Crailey, following it with his eyes. "It shows you helped make it, Fanchon, it's so beautiful. Ah, Tom, they've said we abused it sometimes. It was only that we loved it so well we didn't like to see any one make it look silly or mean. But, after all, no man can do that—no, nor no group of men or party! His voice grew louder as the last strains of the music came more faintly from the street. "They'll take your banner across the Rio Grande, Fanchon, but that is not all—some day its stars must spread over the world! Don't you all see that they will?"

After a little while he closed his eyes with a sigh. The doctor bent over him quickly, and Miss Betty started forward unconsciously and cried out.

But the bright eyes opened again and fixed themselves upon her with all their old gay inscrutability.

"Not yet," said Crailey. "Miss Carewe, may I tell you that I am sorry I could not have known you sooner? Perhaps you might have liked me for Fanchon's sake. I know you care for her."

"I do—I do!" she faltered. "I love her, and—ah—I do like you, Mr. Gray, for I know you, though I never—met you until—last night. God bless you—God bless you!"

"Here they come!"

She wavered a moment, like a lily in the wind, and put out a hand blindly. "Not you!" she said sharply as Tom Vanrevel started toward her. Mrs. Tanberry came quickly and put an arm about her, and together they went out of the room.

"You must be good to her, Tom," said Crailey then in a very low voice.

"I?" answered Tom gently. "There was never a chance of that, lad."

"Listen," whispered Crailey. "Lean down—no—closer." He cast a quick glance at Fanchon, kneeling at the other side of the bed, her golden head on the white coverlet, her outstretched hand clutching his, and he spoke so close to Tom's ear and in so low a tone that only Tom could hear.

"She never cared for me. She felt that she ought to, but that was only because I masqueraded in your history. She wanted to tell me before I went away that there was no chance for me. She was telling me that when he called from the window. It was at the dance, the night before, that she knew. I think there has been some one else from the first—God send it's you! Did you speak to her that night or she to you?"

"Ah, no," said Tom Vanrevel. "All the others."

Mrs. Tanberry and Betty and Mr. Bareaud waited in the library, the two women huddled together on a sofa, with their arms round each other, and all the house was very still. By and by they heard a prolonged, faraway cheering and the steamer's whistle and knew that the boat was off. Half an hour later Will Cummings came back alone, entered the room on tiptoe and silently sank into a chair near Mr. Bareaud, with his face away from Miss Betty. He was to remain in Rouen another week and join his regiment with Tom. None of the three appeared to notice his coming more than dimly, and he sat with his face bowed in his hands and did not move.

Thus perhaps an hour passed, with only a sound of footsteps on the gravel of the driveway now and then and a low murmur of voices in the rear of the house, where people came to ask after Crailey. And when the door of the room where he lay was opened the four watchers started as at a loud explosion. It was Mrs. Bareaud and the old doctor, and they closed the door again softly and came in to the others. They had left Crailey alone with Fanchon and Tom Vanrevel, the two who loved him best.

The warm day beyond the windows became like Sunday. No voices sounded from without in the noon hush, though sometimes a little group of people would gather across the street to eye the house curiously and nod and whisper. The strong, blue shadows of the veranda pillars stole slowly across the white floor of the porch in a lessening slant and finally lay all in a line, as the tall clock in a corner of the library asthmatically coughed the hour of noon. In this jarring discordance there was something frightful to Miss Betty. She rose abruptly, and, imperiously waving back Mrs. Tanberry, who would have detained her—for there was in her face and manner the incipient wildness of control overstrained to the breaking point—she went hurriedly out of the room and out of the house to the old bench in the garden. There she sank down, her face hidden in her arms; there on the spot where she had first seen Crailey Gray.

From there, too, had risen the serenade of the man she had spurned and insulted, and there she had come to worship the stars when Crailey bade her look to them, and now the strange young teacher was paying the bitter price for his fooleries, and who could doubt that the price was a bitter one? To have the spirit so suddenly, cruelly riven from the sprightly body that was, but a few hours ago, hale and alert, obedient to every petty wish, could dance, run and leap; to be forced with such hideous precipitation to leave the warm breath of June and undergo the lonely change, merging with the shadow; to be flung from the exquisite and commonplace day of sunshine into the appalling adventure that should not have been his for years, and hurled into it by what hand—ah, bitter, bitter price for a harlequinade! And, alas, alas, for the brave harlequin!

A gentle touch fell upon her shoulder, and Miss Betty sprang to her feet and screamed. It was Nelson who stood before her, hat in hand, his head deeply bowed.

"Is he with you?" she cried, clutching at the bench for support.

"No'm," answered the old man humbly. "I reckon we all ain' goin' see dat man no mo'."

"Where is he?"

"On de way, honey; on de way."

"The way—to Rouen!" she gasped.

"No'm; he goin' cross de big water." He stretched out his hand and pointed solemnly to the east. "Him an' me we cotch de boat, an' yo' pa mek 'em taken de hosses on bode. Den we git off at Leeville, five mile' down de rivuh, an' yo' pa hol' de boat whiles I ride back alone an' git de news, an' what de tale is you all is tole. Fum ole Mist' Chen'eth, an' Mist' Chen'eth, he rid back wid me an' see yo' pa at Leeville, an' dey talk in de shed by de landin', an' yo' pa tell Mist' Chen'eth what 'rangements he goin' make wid de property. Den he git on de boat ag'in an' dey sto't her agoin', an' he ain' wave no goodby, ner say no mo' wu'ds.

"Mist' Chen'eth rid back whens de light come, but he res' de hosses an' come back slow, 'case I pondah on de worl', an' I mighty sorry fer yo' pa, missy. He ain' comin' back no mo', honey, an' Miz Tanberry an' me an' Mamie we goin' take keer er yo'. Yo' pa gone back dah to de Frenchmun whuh he 'uz a young man. He might' sick, an' he scairt, honey; an' he ain' goin' git ovah dat, neider. 'Peal to me, missy, like he done had a vishun he own soul when he come an' look down at dat young man layin' on de grass las' night."

"SWISS FOOD"

The old fellow bent his back before her in a solemn bow, as a feudal retainer in allegiance to the heir, but more in deference to the sorrow written upon her and respecting its magnitude. With no words of comfort, for he knew she wanted only to be alone, he moved away, with infirm steps and shaking head, toward the rear of the house.

Miss Betty threw herself upon the bench again, face downward in her arms. And still the house lay in silence under the sunshine.

An hour had passed, and the shadows slanted strongly to the east, when the stillness was broken by a sound, low and small at first, then rising fearfully, a long, quavering wail of supreme anguish that clutched and shook the listener's heart. No one could have recognized the voice as Fanchon's, yet every one who heard it knew that it was hers and that the soul of Crailey Gray had gone out upon the quest for the Holy Grail.

Miss Betty's hands clinched convulsively round the arm of the bench, and a fit of shuddering seized her as if with the grip of a violent chill, though her eyes were dry. Then she lay quiet.

A long time afterward she became aware of a step that paced the garden path behind her, and turned her face upon her arm so that she saw, but made no other motion. It was Tom Vanrevel, walking slowly up and down, his hands behind his back and his hat pulled far down over his eyes. He had not seen her.

She rose and spoke his name.

"He turned and came to her. "Almost at the very last," he said, "Crailey whispered to me that he knew you thought him a great scamp, but to tell you to be sure to remember that it was all true about the stars."

CHAPTER XX.

IT was between twilight and candlelight, the gentle half hour when the kind old sandman steals up the stairs of houses where children are, when rustic lovers stroll with slow and quiet steps down country lanes and old bachelors are loneliest and dream of the things that might have been. Through the silence of the clear dusk came the whistle of the evening boat that was to bear Tom Vanrevel through the first stage of his long journey to the front of war, and the sound fell cheerlessly upon Miss Betty's ear as she stood leaning against the sundial among the lilac bushes. Her attitude was not one of reverie, yet she stood very still—so still that in the wan shimmer of the faded afterglow one might have passed close by her and not have seen her. The long, dark folds of her gown showed faintly against the gray stone, and her arms, bare from the elbow, lay across the face of the dial with unrelaxed fingers clinching the cornice; her head drooping not languidly, but with tension, her eyes half closed, showing the lashes against a pale cheek; and thus motionless, leaning on the stone in the dusk, she might have been Sorrow's self.

She did not move; there was not even a flicker of the eyelashes, when a step sounded on the gravel of the driveway, and Vanrevel came slowly from the house. He stopped at a little distance from her, hat in hand. He was very thin, worn and old looking, and in the falling light might have been taken for a tall, gentle ghost, yet his shoulders were squared and he held himself as straight as he had the first time she had ever seen him.

"Mrs. Tanberry told me I should find you here," he said hesitatingly. "I have come to say goodby."

She did not turn toward him nor did more than her lips move as she answered, "Goodby," and her tone was neither kind nor cold, but held no meaning whatever, not even indifference.

There was an interval of silence. Then, without surprise, he walked sadly to the gate, paused, wheeled about suddenly and returned with a quick, firm step.

"I will not go until I know that I do not misunderstand you," he said, "not even if there is only the slightest chance that I do. I want to say something to you if you will let me, though naturally I remember you once asked me never to speak to you again. It is only that I have thought you did that under a misconception or else I should still obey you. If you"—

"What is it that you wish to say?" Her tone was unchanged.

"Only that I think the hardest time for you has passed, and that"—

"Do you?" she interrupted.

"Yes," he returned, "the saddest of your life. I think it has gone forever. And I think that what will come to you will be all you wish for. There will be a little time of waiting"—

"Waiting for what?"

He drew a step nearer, and his voice became very gentle. "Cummings and I reach our regiment tomorrow night, and there in the camp is a group of men on the way to the war, and they all go the more bravely because each one of them has you in his heart—not one but will be a better soldier because of you. I want you to believe that if all of them don't come back, yet the one whose safety you think of and fear for will return. For, you see, Crailey told me what you said to him when—when he met you here the last time. I have no way to know which of them you meant; but—he will come back to you! I am sure of it, because I believe you are to be happy. Ah, you've had your allotment of pain!

"After all, there is so little to regret. The town seems empty without its young men, yet you may rejoice, remembering how bravely they went and how gayly. They will sing half the way to Vera Cruz. You think it strange I should say there is so little to regret when I've just laid away my best friend. It was his own doctrine, and the selfish personal grief and soreness grow less when I think of the gallant end he made, for it was he who went away most bravely and jauntily of all. Crailey was no failure unless I let what he taught me go to no effect. And be sure he would have told you what I tell you now, that all is well with all in the world."

"Please!" she cried, with a quick intake of breath through closed teeth.

"I will do anything in the world to please you," he answered sorrowfully. "Do you mean that"—

She turned at last and faced him, but without lifting her eyes. "Why did you come to say goodby to me?"

"I don't understand."

"I think you do." Her voice was cold and steady, but it was suddenly given to him to perceive that she was trembling from head to heel.

An exclamation of remorse broke from him.

"Ah, you came here to be alone! I"—

"Stop," she said. "You said goodby to me once before. Did you come to see—what you saw then?"

He fell back in utter amazement, but she advanced upon him swiftly. "What is that?" she cried.

The unfortunate young man could make no reply and remained unable to defend himself from her inexplicable attack.

"You have not forgotten," she went on impetuously. "It was in the crowd just before they gave you the flag. You saw—I know you saw—and it killed me with the shame of it! Now you come to me to look at the same thing again, and the boat waiting for you! Is it in revenge for that night at the Bareauds'? Perhaps this sounds wild to you—I can't help that—but why should you try to make it harder for me?"

From the porch came a strong voice, "Vanrevel!"

"God knows I haven't meant to," said Tom in bitter pain. "I don't understand. It's Cummings calling for me. I'll go at once. I'd hoped, stupidly enough, that you would tell me whom it was you meant when you spoke to Crailey, so that I could help to make it surer that he'd come back to you. But I've only annoyed you. And you were here—away from the house—avoiding me and fearing that I"—

"Vanrevel!" shouted William. (Mrs. Tanberry had not told Lieutenant Cummings where to find Miss Betty.)

"Fearing? Yes?"

"Fearing that I might discover you." He let his eyes rest on her loveliness once more, and as he saw that she still trembled he extended his hand toward her in a gesture of infinite gentleness, like a blessing, heaved one great sigh and, with head erect and body straight, set his face manfully toward the house.

He had taken three strides when his heart stopped beating at an ineffable touch on his sleeve, for, with a sharp cry, she sprang to him, and then, once more, among the lilac bushes where he had caught the white kitten, his hand was seized and held between two small palms, and the eyes of Miss Betty Carewe looked into the very soul of him.

She sprung to him.

"No!" she cried. "No! Fearing with a sick heart that you might not come!"

Her pale face, misty with sweetness, wavered before him in the dusk, and he lifted his shaking hand to his forehead. Her own went with it, and the touch of that steadied him.

"You mean," he whispered brokenly, "you mean that you"—

"Yes, always," she answered, rushing through the words half in tears. "There was a little time when I loved what your life had been more than you. Ah, it was you that I saw in him! Yet it was not what you had done after all, but just you! I knew there could not be any one else—though I thought it could never be you—that night, just before they gave the flag."

"We've little time, Vanrevel!" called the voice from the porch.

Tom's eyes filled slowly. He raised them and looked at the newly come stars. "Crailey, Crailey!" he murmured.

Her gaze followed his. "Ah, it's he—and they—that make me know you will come back to me!" she said.

THE END.

Conkling's Invective.

Roscoe Conkling, like John J. Ingalls, was a master at invective. Conkling, it is said, once upon a time in summing up to a jury thus attempted to belittle the testimony of a rummy faced, knobby nosed witness for the opposition: "Methinks, gentlemen, I can see that witness now, his mouth stretching across the wide desolation of his face, a sepulcher of rum and a fountain of falsehood!"

FARM AND FIRESIDE

Useful Hints Which Will be Appreciated by the Progressive Farmer and His Housekeeper.

AGRICULTURAL ITEMS.

Better Set Some Late Cabbages.

Cabbages are not appreciated as they deserve in some sections. They produce more bulky, juicy food for the labor than anything except corn fodder, and they can be fed late in the season after green fodder has gone. The cabbage crop is a bow with two strings: the market string and the fodder string. Farmers who grow them every year will sometimes be able to use the market string to good advantage and sell at least a part of the crop at a good price in the nearest city. Other years it pays best to feed them all out for fodder, and if properly fed, nothing is cheaper or better as a supplement to hay and corn fodder.

Island Fox Farms.

A disappointed miner in the Klondike with his co-workers established a fox farm on an island off the coast. It was purchased from the United States Government, and carefully stocked with Alaskan blues. It was decided that this island was so far from other land that the colony could not swim to it, and there was no danger of escape; but the foxes thought otherwise, and one morning it was found that all the stock had migrated, taking possession of the nearest island, which they considered would make a more desirable home. As this was Government land, it was decided to purchase this also, and now the foxes are thriving in a home of their own choosing.

Good Crops For Old Grass Land.

The question of what to do with grass land after haying, where the land is run out and poor, is a rather puzzling one, but if we should get rain enough to soften the surface and permit easy plowing, it may be broken up, enriched with manure or fertilizer and immediately seeded with Hungarian. In case the weather should prove too dry for this, barley may be sown either alone or with rye in August for fall feeding. Off good, strong land, well enriched, a crop of late cabbage plants may be set as late as July 15; the turnip seed may be sown even as late as August 1, though July is a better time.

The capital of every farmer consists in his horse stock as well as his farm, his grain or his other live stock, and idle horses should be considered in the light of dormant capital, or even in a more serious light, for the expense of keeping them is considerable, even if it is produced on the farm.

MILLET IN JULY.

This fodder may be sown at any time up to the first week in July, or even later. The common variety also called Hungarian, is often grown as a second crop. It is not unusual to see a stand of millet hardly worth the cutting because sown too late and upon poor land. Like most other fodder crops, it should be cut while in bloom. If the seed is not allowed to ripen, a moderate amount of millet hay will do the cattle no harm, and will prove about equal to average English hay as a milk producer. But with horses, millet hay does not seem to agree. The yield is offer as large as three tons to the acre on rich land, and the plant is ready for cutting in two months from seed.

HAVE YOU RHEUMATISM?

You are not doomed to go on suffering forever, because there is a sure speedy cure for you in Tuck's Rheumatic Bone Oil. Perhaps you have tried a lot of patent medicines and now have no confidence in any. Do not condemn this until you have tried it. We have such confidence in it that if you try it and it does not cure you we will refund your money. It is a powerful, penetrating oil that acts directly on the bone—the seat of the disease—and has brought deliverance to so many that we have no hesitation in saying it will deliver you. Here is one case:

Dear Sirs,—I am free from rheumatism to-day because I used Tuck's Bone Oil. I had rheumatism in my hands and feet and thought at one time that my life was going to be ruined by it. I consulted a doctor and tried various remedies, but while some of them that I took internally made me feel better for a time, none of them took the pain away. After I had suffered for six months or more doctoring all the time, I was advised to try Tuck's Rheumatic Bone Oil. I did and I never can be thankful enough to the man who told me to get it. I had not used a bottle until I was better and before the second one was done my joints were loosened up, the pain was gone, and I was well. Tuck's Bone Oil did it. That was six years ago and I have not been bothered since.

DAIRY DEPARTMENT.

Better Work With Separators.

While the merits of the farm separator are quite generally understood, dairymen in many instances fail to properly appreciate that it is invariably applicable to their own individual conditions, and that to every one separating cream from milk it offers a means of better and more satisfactory results.

The advantages of the farm separator over the gravity system are too numerous to give a full or extended enumeration, but those of the most importance are more perfect separation, greater value of skim-milk, saving of time and labor, saving of ice, and a better quality of butter.

Under the best methods of deep setting, it is rather difficult to keep the loss of butter fat in the skimmilk down to three-tenths of one per cent., which will mean a loss of $60 in a herd of twenty cows, each giving five thousand pounds of four per cent. milk per annum. This is a very conservative estimate, for if we were to take the average of all the conditions throughout the State the loss would be about twice as great as I have estimated.

Progressive dairymen, as a rule, are aware of the advantages of the centrifugal separator over the old process and comparatively little milk is being skimmed in that way, most dairymen delivering their whole milk to the creamery, or using a farm separator and delivering the cream to the creamery.

HORTICULTURAL.

The Early Apples.

Farmers who have convenient access to large markets will do well to plant a part of their orchards to some early variety like the Astrachan or Williams. The Astrachan is a great money maker. It bears a fair crop every year, not every other year, and its fine, large, bright red fruit, coming into market the last of July, is easily bought up for cooking purposes. It is a very sour apple, but many people are fond of it also as a table fruit. Its only defect is a liability to grow watery at the core. The tree is a vigorous grower and bears young. The Williams has most of the good points of the Astrachan, and is better flavored and not so liable to soften at the core. Being a table fruit, it is somewhat too attractive to thieves when planted in the thickly settled districts. Early apples are quite uniform in fruit year after year, and any active farmer can usually peddle them out for $1 a bushel, and even the windfalls bring a fair price instead of going to the cider mill, as do the culls of winter varieties. In most of our towns there are never half enough early apples to meet the demand.

TIMELY TOPICS FOR FARMERS.

Irrigation is coming to the front, try it on strawberries.

Good land, good stock and a good head; a combination that makes farming pay.

Anything pays if you stick to it until you can grow it better than any other farmer can.

Good common sense is the requirement for success in farming. But when also the common sense is well trained, then the success will be better every time.

Fertility stored in the soil is quite as valuable as fertility in bags. Think of that when buying land. It is cheaper to buy rich land than to restore land naturally poor.

Cheap seed is sometimes more expensive than the whole bill for fertilizers and cultivation. Raise your own seed if you know how; if not, then buy the best in the market.

Fixing up the old farmhouse is a good thing to do, but sometimes it costs more to repair a tumbled down old ark of a building than it would to build a comfortable modern house.

People who buy farms are often dazzled by offers of cheap land. Better ten acres of just the right kind of soil and easy to work by machinery than one hundred acres mostly rocks and brushwood.

To go two or three miles at too rapid a gait is much harder on a horse than it would be to go five times as far if properly driven. If you want to get the full capacity out of your horses without injury use moderation at the beginning of every task you impose upon them.

The scarcity of good carriage horses is well illustrated by the fact that a New York dealer signed a contract a few weeks since to take thirty-five carriage horses from a Western buyer at $700 each. These high prices are a strong incentive to breeders to pay more attention to that kind of stock.

Argonaut Win Again

Henley, England, July 4.—In the second heat for the Grand Challenge Cup yesterday, the Argonauts of Toronto, Canada, beat the Thames Rowing Club. Time, 7 minutes, 4 seconds. The Canadians led throughout and won easily. Not a man of the Argonauts showed the slightest sign of distress. They all sat up straight as poplar trees at the finish, and were accorded a fine reception.

Shoots the Whole Family.

Luceda, Miss., July 4.—In an attempt to exterminate his family, Charles Brewer Monday night shot and killed his wife and his mother-in-law, wounded his wife's grandmother and his infant child, and shot and killed himself. The tragedy was prompted by anger.

HANDLING MONEY.

It Is No Temptation to the Seasoned Bank Teller.

"Money? Don't the sight of so much of it make me hungry for it? Not at all. To tell the truth, it is like so much mud to me."

Thus spoke a teller in a Denver bank. He was talking to a young man outside the cage. On the counter were heaped piles of gold and silver coin and bunches of paper money.

"I'm sure I couldn't stand the constant temptation to appropriate it for my own use," said the man outside.

"Yes, you could," replied the teller. "You could easily after being in here a week. For the first few days the money would look pretty good to you, and you'd have to use your will power to keep away from it, but after a week or so it doesn't seem like money. It seems like merely an article you deal in, just as potatoes seem to the grocer. There isn't a sixty dollar a month bank clerk in a thousand who thinks of stealing the money he handles unless he is in debt and is being crowded for funds. To the bank employee who has his debts paid and has enough to keep from thinking of an urgent need for cash money has no value. Handling money is just like eating to a teller. As long as he has enough food in his stomach he has no desire for more and even a big, fine, juicy steak has no temptation for him. But let him get good and hungry, and he'll covet that steak. The only way for a man who handles money in a bank to be free from the temptation to appropriate it is to keep out of debt and not develop any urgent and expensive ambitions."

BUNDLE HANDKERCHIEFS.

Introduced Into New England by the Salem Sea Captains.

Housewives of today would not know what was meant by the bundle handkerchief, yet 100 years ago the woman who did not have a pile of them neatly folded and ironed and laid away in smooth piles in a drawer of one of the capacious closets which were then built into houses was considered a poor housekeeper. The bundle handkerchief was first introduced by the Salem sea captains. It was brought from abroad with choice things, such as sandalwood fans, guava jelly and amber beads.

Those imported were the white India silk and were used to tie around the "best cap" box when ladies went out to spend the afternoon. Those of home make were of squares of calico or muslin and used for everyday bundles. When ladies went visiting to other towns their piles of dainty, handmade underware were wrapped in fine lawn or linen handkerchiefs sweet with lavender and orris. A new gown always came home from the dressmaker's carefully pinned in a thin, worn and much used madras handkerchief.

No Salem infant was considered to have been properly introduced to society till it had dangled in a bundle handkerchief from a pair of steelyard scales.

When the servants went to the bakery they carried a couple of coarse blue checked bundle handkerchiefs, and in one was wrapped the pot of beans, and in the other was wrapped the brown bread.

Louisa Alcott's Education.

In 1846 Mrs. Abbott, with some family property, bought the house known now as the Wayside, since Hawthorne bought and renamed it in 1852, says F. B. Sanborn in the Critic. The Alcotts had called it Hillside and had passed pleasant childish years there. Louisa's story telling gift was developed here, and in the barn her earliest plays were acted by herself and her sisters and schoolmates. In her earlier years at Concord she had been for a short time a pupil of Henry Thoreau and still earlier of her father's Boston school. Her other education came irregularly from her parents, from a temporary governess and sometimes from town schools, but she always missed the careful education that most of the Concord girls had, either in public or in private schools.

Hissing "Carmen."

One of the most popular operas of the present day, "Carmen," underwent an unfortunate experience, but achieved success too late, alas, to console the disappointed composer, whose death was accelerated, it is said, by the ill reception accorded to his chef d'oeuvre. "Carmen" was, in fact, actually hissed off the stage on its first performance in Paris in 1875, and poor Bizet died shortly after, unable to foresee the great success in store for his latest and best work, whose stirring music so admirably fits the thrilling Spanish libretto it illustrates.

The Same Idea.

It is recorded that Napoleon, when asked to summarize the art of war, answered briefly, "The art of war consists in being strongest at a given point at a given time." This answer was terse and true, but that born but untaught fighter, General Forrest, expressed the same idea, yet more briefly and forcefully. When the grim old Confederate was asked how to win in battle he replied, "Get thar fust with the mostest men."

ENTERPRISING BOTANISTS.

Effects of the Great Revival of the Sixteenth Century.

In the great literary and scientific revival that took place in the sixteenth century botany made a fresh departure. The discovery of America had brought a vast number of new plants to Europe, and their study doubtless stimulated the more complete study of those of the old world. The great commercial activity of the century must also have had its influence. Ships were bringing new products from all parts and among these plants were not forgotten. But from whatever cause it arose, the great impulse and renewed activity in the discovery and study of plants was quite remarkable. They produced a large body of students, whose labors were unwearied, and a wonderful amount of botanical literature.

Among those students were such men as Loincer, L'Obel, Caesalpinus, L'Ecluse, Mattioli, Caspar and John Bauhin, Conrad Gesner, Pona, Leonard, Fuchs, Prosper Alpinus, Dodoens and many others. And these men were not stay at home botanical students. They were great travelers, whose delight was to collect and examine plants in their native countries. Caspar Bauhin collected them in Germany, France and Italy with great labor and danger ("quod praecipuum erat, plantas locis natalibus inspiciendo nullis laboribus, nullis molestiis, nullis sumptibus peper cimus"); L'Ecluse collected them in Spain, Hungary and Bohemia; Du Choul searched Mount Pilatus and John Pona Mount Baldus; Leonard Rauwolf made a long journey to the east in search of them and Prosper Alpinus examined those of Egypt.—London Standard.

FLORIDA'S INDIAN WAR.

Osceola's Half Breed Wife Brought About the Conflict.

In 1835 a young woman, with a party of Indians visiting Fort King, was seized and carried off as a fugitive slave on the ground that her mother was an escaped slave who had taken refuge with the Indians many years before. That her father was an Indian and she had been raised an Indian did not count for anything. Legal claim of ownership in the mother embraced her also. That was law at the time.

Naturally the young husband, untutored savage that he was, could not recognize its justice. Proving both eloquent and brave, he soon had every Indian in Florida on the warpath, nor was it long before his name, Osceola, was heard with terror in the exposed white settlements. There ensued a war, long, costly and bloody, out of all proportions to the number engaged. It is probable the Indians did not number 1,500 warriors, but in the four years required to conquer them 1,500 white lives were sacrificed.

With the Indians it was a battle a outrance. They had many wrongs to avenge, which lost nothing in the fervid coloring of Osceola's eloquence. Defeat meant transportation to an unknown country far toward the setting sun. Osceola claimed to have been the friend of the white man until white treachery and cupidity culminated in the seizure of his wife. In digging up the tomahawk he preached a war of extermination till every white man was driven from Florida or every Indian died in the attempt.—Lippincott's.

Fair Rosamund's Bower.

Henry III.'s chief garden was at Woodstock, but he was not the originator of it, as there had been a garden there in the time of the second Henry. In it was the labyrinth which concealed the "bower" made famous by the tragic fate of the fair Rosamond. A halo of romance and mystery hangs around this hiding place, but in reality labyrinths were by no means uncommon. There is evidence of the existence of labyrinths in very early times, and they presumably suggested the maze of more modern date. The first labyrinths were winding paths cut in the ground, and the survival of them is still traceable in several places in England. Of these Saffron Walden, with its encircling ditch, is the most striking example. Camden describes one existing in his time in Dorsetshire, which went by the name of Troy town or Julian's bower.—"A History of Gardening In England."

Tobacco In America.

Caricaturists in depicting a German are in the habit of putting a big pipe in his mouth. The pipe is national indeed, but the Germans as a nation are far from being the greatest smokers. They do not smoke more than Frenchmen, Russians, Swedes or Hungarians. The men of the United States and the men of Switzerland are the most inveterate smokers in the world. In these two countries the consumption of tobacco per head is three times greater than in Germany.

A KINGDOM AT AUCTION

OPPORTUNITY PRESENTED THRU LONDON ADVERTISEMENT.

Lundy's Island, Fifteen Miles From the Coast, In the Bristol Channel, Is to Come Under Hammer — Present Owner of Midget Kingdom Is Rev. Charles Heaven — What Centuries Have Attached to Marisco Stronghold.

It is not often that one can go into an auction room and buy a kingdom for a few thousand pounds, but such an opportunity is now presented, and in the London papers one may read the matter-of-fact advertisement offering Lundy Island for sale. The chance is one that should not be allowed to escape by American millionaires, who, though they might become Senators or Presidents, can never become kings, save by purchase. Inventors, scientists, geniuses who love solitude, must be sorely tempted by the announcement that Lundy Island is in the market. Unfortunately they are not likely to have the purchase money, and it is likely that some Standard Oil king will be the new monarch of the island in the Bristol Channel.

The Midget Kingdom.

The kingdom is about 15 miles off the coast, and, roughly speaking, is about three miles long and half a mile wide. Its highest point is Beacon Hill, 525 feet above the sea. On the hill one might sit and see the wealth of the world steam past the island. No fewer than 1,600,000 ships pass the island every year, steering by the lighthouse that warns the seafarers of the rock that landsmen know as Lundy Island. The lee side of the island is a famous harbor, and it is no unusual sight to see a hundred vessels riding at anchor there, and on occasions as many as 300 have been counted. Surely the auctioneer will not understand his business if he fails to make the magnificent outlook one of the most desirable features of life on the island.

Ownership and Inhabitants.

At present the owner is Rev. Charles Heaven, by the different members of whose family the island has been governed for the past 70 years, though most of it is now under lease as a farm. Of the 1,045 acres that comprise the island 955 are given over to agricultural stock-raising. Four hundred acres are under cultivation, and the remainder of the farmstead is useful as pasture for horses, cattle, sheep, and goats. The buildings are St. Helen's Church, the villa (or palace), the manor farm-house, a few cottages, the remains of a castle, the post and telegraph offices, and Lloyd's signaling station. The population is small, and composed almost exclusively of fishermen and farm laborers.

The centuries have added tradition and lore like moss and lichen to the granite cliffs of Lundy Island. We first hear of it in 1150, when it was in possession of the de Marisco family, which furnished the royalty for the little kingdom down to the time of Sir John de Marisco. Sir John had the misfortune to offend Henry II., to whom he denied allegiance, and his stronghold was declared forfeit, and became the property of the Knights Templar. But for many years thereafter the Mariscoes held on to the island, and the Knights received instead of possession an indemnity from the Royal Treasury. By 1233 the holders of the island had fallen from their kingly estate to outlawry, and Lundy harbored a nest of pirates. De Marisco tried to rehabilitate the family fortunes by attempting the life of Henry III. Failing in this effort, he fled to his stronghold, but so great an offence aroused the English King, and a force was sent against Marisco. It returned with the outlaw king and 16 of his companions, who were all well and truly hanged.

The Robbers' Roost.

For three hundred years or more thereafter little was heard of the island, but in the reign of James I. it attracted unfavorable attention as a pirate stronghold. It was again raided and its populace put to death. In 1632, however, it was made the headquarters of a notorious buccaneer named Nutt, who called himself admiral, and had two or three ships at his command. He wrought such havoc along the coast that several ships of war were necessary to exterminate him. But the island continued to support a cut-throat population, gathered from all quarters of the world, and down to the year 1747 it was a Robbers' Roost of the most villainous description. The beginning of the end came in this year, when an enterprising scoundrel named Benson inherited £40,000 and secured a lease of hte island. He entered into a contract with the Government to export convicts to Maryland and Virginia.

The Scheme of Benson.

The convicts, to the number of some hundreds, left England on Benson's ships, but never arrived in America. An investigation discovered them working as Benson's slaves on Lundy Island, building walls and fortifications for the "King," and assisting him in the smuggling business. For the last time a force was despatched to Lundy Island, and it was ridded of its motley inhabitants. Since then greater care has been observed in the choice of its tenants, until there seems to be no irony in the fact that its present owner bears the name Heaven, and is a clergyman. Nevertheless, with a more respectable history, the sale of Lundy Island would not attract so much attention, and Rev. Mr. Heaven may, after all, be indebted to Messrs. de Marisco, Nutt, Benson, et al., for some thousands of pounds sterling.

£27,000 History of Boer War.

Minister of War Haldane has informed Mr. Field that it is estimated that the cost of the official history of the South African war will amount from first to last to at least £27,000. Of this sum the amount expended up to March 31, 1906, was about £22,000. The first volume will probably be out by midsummer, the second and third volumes about the end of the year, and the concluding volume in 1907.

PRECOCIOUS INDIANA.

Voted For President Before She Was Admitted Into the Union.

Indiana has the unique distinction of having voted for president before it became a member of the family of states. In June, 1816, Indiana adopted a state constitution, but was not admitted to the Union until Dec. 11. In the meantime, on Nov. 4, the first legislature met at Corydon. Indianans have been precocious from the first, and the members of the legislature had no thought of letting a little matter like the fact that what they called the state was not really a state interfere with their voting for James Monroe and Daniel D. Tompkins, for president and vice president respectively. As the Indianapolis News, which tells the story, puts it, Indiana politicians wanted to get in on the ground floor.

On Nov 11, exactly a month before Indiana was admitted to the Union, the legislature adopted a joint resolution, "That it is expedient to provide at this time for the election of three electors to vote for president and vice president of the United States of America at the ensuing presidential election." This was approved by the governor, and two days later Jesse S. Holman, General Joseph Bartholomew and Thomas H. Blake were chosen electors by the legislature, this being the method in all the states at that time. While these electors were chosen before the state was admitted their vote was not cast until a few days after the admission. Indiana's right to vote was disputed when the national house and senate met to open and count the votes, but the new state finally won the decision.

MACKEREL SKIES.

Theories About How These Cloud Formations Are Caused.

The mackerel sky comes from the same causes as all the cirrus clouds, so called from the beautiful curl their fragments often assume, such as "mackerel skies," "mares' tails" and "cats' tails." Meteorologists are not agreed as to the cause, there being two explanations.

It has been suggested that these cirrus clouds are the heads of columns of vapor rising from the earth and precipitated as soon as they attain a certain elevation, rarely less than three miles above the earth (15,840 feet) and often five or six miles (26,000 to 30,000 feet). If this be so the visible cloud forms the capital of an invisible pillar of saturated air.

The second explanation is that they are caused in the higher regions of the atmosphere by the meeting of two currents of air of different water bearing capacity, causing them to form into parallel bands, each belt being composed of light, airy fragments, slightly altered in appearance according to a slight difference in conditions under which they are formed. It has been supposed that such clouds are composed of particles of snow.

It might be added that they occur in systems, long ranks of them extending in one direction for vast distances and being occasionally crossed by other systems at other but also extreme altitudes.

Elevators and False Teeth.

In department stores where express elevators run to roof garden restaurants some gentle passengers experience daily discomfort because of the sudden movement of the car. The proud owner of a fine set of artificial teeth remarked to her companion a few days ago: "This is the most severe test of proper fit of teeth that I know of. Mine are supposed to be correct in every respect. Still, I never travel in an elevator running express that I'm not in constant fear of my teeth taking a fall. If you close the mouth your breath will be taken away."

Water In Rubber.

Experiments with a hermetically sealed rubber bottle containing water have shown that the rubber is not absolutely water tight. The filled bottle weighed seventeen ounces four drams. At the end of one year the weight was seventeen ounces two drams; nine years, ten ounces; eighteen years, fourteen ounces two drams; twenty-three years, thirteen ounces four drams; twenty-five years, seven ounces eight drams; twenty-eight years, three ounces fourteen drams; thirty years, three ounces twelve drams, the water being entirely gone.

The One She Wanted.

"Excuse me," said the old lady with eyeglasses in the art gallery, "but haven't you got any more figures in marble?"

"These are all, madam," replied the polite attendant. "Is there any particular one you are looking for?"

"Yes; I wanted to see the statue of limitations my husband was telling about."

Laws.

Laws, written if not on stone tablets, yet on the azure of infinitude, in the inner heart of God's creation, certain as life, certain as death! I say the laws are there, and thou shalt not disobey them!—Carlyle.

Always on Hand.

Dick—Statistics show that more than 5,000 people disappear every year in this country and are never heard from again. Harry—But, confound it, they never happen to be the people we owe money to!

Appearances Against Him.

Brown—Is that Smithers an honest fellow? Black—He may be. But you never see him without an umbrella.

For one word a man is often deemed to be wise and for one word he is often deemed to be foolish.—Confucius.

THE KING AND THE DERBY.

His Majesty Gives His Annual Dinner According to Custom.

King Edward, in accordance with his annual custom, gave his Derby dinner to the members of the Jockey Club on the night after that historic race, which, in the eyes of all English people, is the most important sporting event in the world, says the Marquise de Fontenoy. In the most remote wilds of Canada, in the plains of British India, in the jungles and forests of the dark continent, and up in the highest regions of the Rocky mountains of this country, the first question that invariably will be put by the most woebegone and abandoned Englishman whom one may happen to encounter in the month of June, July, or August is as to "who won the Derby."

The Derby is the blue ribbon of the turf. Lord Rosebery as a young man, when asked to name the three things for which he experienced most eagerness, and which constituted the zenith of his ambition, replied: "To win the Derby, to become Prime Minister, and to marry the richest woman in the world."

He placed the winning of the Derby first, and, although he married the richest of all the Rothschild heiresses and attained the dignity of Prime Minister of that vast British Empire with its near 400,000,000 population, and on which the sun never sets, yet far more highly than either does he prize his winning the Derby, not once but thrice; the first time with Ladas, then with Sir Visto, and last year with Cicero. In the same way, it is known that when King Edward won his first Derby with Persimmon, exactly six years ago, one of the most cherished dreams of his life had been fulfilled.

The King seldom misses a Derby, to which he proceeds no longer, as in days of yore, by road but by special train, and his action in taking his consort, his daughters, and his sisters to the Derby has served vastly to improve the tone of the meeting and to deprive it of many of the rowdy and unsavory features by which it formerly was signalized.

It was the twelfth Earl of Derby, married to the celebrated actress, Miss Farren, who inaugurated this classic race on the Epsom Downs in 1780. The winner of the first Derby was Sir Charles Bunbury, with his horse Diomed, which was sold for export shortly afterward to this country for the modest sum of $300. Here, however, his merits were appreciated more highly than in the old country. For, only a few weeks after reaching New York, he was resold by his purchaser for the sum of $7,000, dying a year later on the stud farm, for the sake of which he had been bought. It would be interesting to learn if there is any stock at present in this country that can trace its descent to this winner of the first Derby.

The Bard of Avon on Earthquakes.

The science of geology has made some progress since Shakespeare's day, and those learned in its mysteries can give explanations of seismic phenomena that may be more in consonance with truth than the views expressed by the bard. But none of the modern exponents of earthquakes has formulated such a simple and comprehensive explanation of the causes that are at the bottom of the trouble when "The frame and huge foundation of the earth shake like a coward," as that given by Hotspur to his cousin Glendover:

O, then the earth shook to see the heavens on fire,
And not in fear of your nativity.
Diseased nature oftentimes breaks forth
In strange eruptions; oft the teeming earth
Is with a kind of cholic pinch'd and vex'd,
By the imprisoning of unruly wind
Within her womb; which, for enlargement striving Shakes the old beldame earth, and topples down
Steeples and moss-grown towers
At your birth our grandam earth, having this distemperature
In passion shook.

Genuine Sentiment.

Most people have heard of Josiah Wedgewood, the famous potter of Staffordshire. A statue of him stands in front of the railway station at Stoke-on-Trent. A few days ago it was found bedecked with blue ribbons. Much curiosity arose as to why it was so decorated and by whom. In the course of the day the explanation was forthcoming. Joseph C. Wedgewood, the great-great-grandson of the celebrated inventor, was elected member of Parliament for the neighboring town of Newcastle-under-Lyne. Being afterward in Stoke he conceived the idea of "decorating his notable ancestor's monument in celebration of the event." He went there in the dead of night, climbed the high pedestal and the figure, and garlanded the effigy with blue ribbons, the Liberal election colors.

Picture Postcard's Birth.

A stationer in a French provincial town was struck by a great idea when a regiment visited his town in 1870. He produced a picture-postcard and from this small beginning has sprung a great industry in England.

Not until 1894 were picture-postcards printed in England, and yet in 1903 at least 450,000,000 pictorial cards were produced in Great Britain. In Germany 1,161,000,000 postcards were posted the same year, about four-fifths of which were pictorial.

A Dicken's Original.

William Miles celebrated his 90th birthday the other day in a quiet little house in Roebuck road, Rochester, England. He was connected with the cathedral as choir-boy, lay clerk, and verger for three-quarters of a century, during which time he saw eight bishops rule the see and four deans hold office. He also made the acquaintance of Dickens, who was a frequent visitor to the cathedral, and he is believed to have the original of Mr. Tops in "Edwin Drood."

Wedding Bells Are Still A-Ringing.

PRETTY HOME WEDDINGS IN THIS CITY LAST NIGHT AND THIS MORNING.

HARRY — WILSON.

At 10.30 o'clock this morning a pretty home wedding took place at the residence of Mr. H. G. McCall, Foster avenue, when Miss Margaret S. Wilson, daughter of Mrs. McCall, was married to Mr. John F. Harry, a well-known young resident of this city. The couple were unattended. Rev. R. S. Laidlaw, pastor of St. Andrew's Church, performed the ceremony in the presence of a number of invited guests. The bride looked very charming in a handsome dress of cream invisible check silk, trimmed with baby Irish and Valenciennes laces. The guests were handsomely entertained at the conclusion of the ceremony. That the bride was exceedingly popular with a large circle of relatives and friends was evidenced by the large number of handsome presents of which she was the recipient. At 1.40 this afternoon Mr. and Mrs. Harry left for a trip in the west. The bride's going-away gown was of grey tweed, with hat to match. Upon returning to the city Mr. and Mrs. Harry will take up their residence on Church street.

The happy couple have been, for some time, employees of the Ritchie company, and are very popular with a large circle of friends. Mrs. Harry is an accomplished musician, her dulcet contralto voice being always listened to with delight. A host of warm friends will wish Mr. and Mrs. Harry much happiness in their wedded life.

THOMPSON — BRYANT.

A quiet house wedding took place on Foster avenue last evening at 8 o'clock, when Miss Lydia Bryant, daughter of the late Mr. John Bryant, was married to Mr. Henry G. Thompson, only son of Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Thompson, of this city. The young couple were unattended. Rev. A. M. Hubly, rector of Emmanuel Reformed Episcopal Church, officiated. The bride, who was given away by her uncle, Mr. Joshua Lang, looked very pretty in a gown of white dotted Swiss, with lace trimmings. After the ceremony a wedding repast was partaken of. The bride was the recipient of a large number of beautiful and useful gifts. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson have taken up their residence on Foster avenue.

HORSE RACING AT FALL FAIRS.

ONTARIO GOVERNMENT DEFINES THE MEANING OF TRIALS OF SPEED.

Many requests have been received by the Department of Agriculture asking for a ruling on the clause of the legislation governing agricultural societies which forbids horse-racing, but permits trials of speed at fairs throughout the province. The following definition, approved by Hon. Nelson Monteith is being sent out by H. B. Cowan, superintendent of agricultural societies;

"Trials of Speed" shall mean competitions among driving horses in which conformation, soundness and style are considered as well as speed in the winning of the prize. If, in the judgment of the officers or judges, it is deemed advisable to test the speed of the contesting horses it is allowable to do so, but the prize must in every case be awarded on general excellence as seen in the above characteristics. It is not intended that purses shall be offered made up of deposits or entry fees from owners of contesting horses, but that premiums shall be offered in the usual way.

"Horse race" shall include competitors in which all or any of the following conditions are followed.—(a) In which speed only is considered.—(b) In which entries are restricted by time limits.—(c) In which any restrictions are made as to the number of entries.

CATTLE MARKETS.

London, July 3.—Cattle are quoted at 10¼c to 11½c per lb.; refrigerator beef, 8c to 8½c per lb.; sheep, dressed, 13½c to 16c per lb.

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

Toronto, July 3.—Receipts of live stock at the city market since Friday last as reported by the railways were 71 car loads, composed of 1175 cattle, 220 hogs, 596 sheep and lambs, with 231 calves.

Exporters.

Prices for export cattle ranged from $4.75 to $5 per cwt., the bulk going at about $4.90. Export bulls sold at $3.75 to $4.25 per cwt.

Butchers.

Trade in butchers was slow. Prime heifers and steers in picked lots, such as sold at $5.15 to $5.25 one week ago, sold at $4.80 to $4.90. Only two butchers' heifers, 1150 lbs. each, brought $5 per cwt. They were sold by McDonald & Maybee. Loads of good sold at $4.60 to $4.70; fair to medium sold at $4.40 to $4.55; common mixed loads, $4 to $4.25; cows of good quality sold at $3.50 to $4; common grass cows and canners sold at $2.50 to $3.25 per cwt.

Feeders and Stockers.

Receipts were light, but greater than the demand. Harry Murby reports trade slow at unchanged quotations as follows: steers, 900 to 1050 lbs., at $3.85 to $4.10; steers, 800 to 900 lbs., at $3.75 to $3.90; best stockers, 500 to 700 lbs., at $3.35 to $3.50; common stockers, $2.75 to $3.

Milch Cows.

Only a limited number of milch cows and springers were offered. Trade was dull for them, and prices ranged from $30 to $47 each.

Veal Calves.

The bulk of veal calves offered to-day were of inferior to medium quality. There were some that when dressed would not weigh 60 lbs., yet they were sold with a lot of others that had been bought for slaughtering purposes and not for any abattoir either. The inspection of the veal calves is a farce, as there is scarcely a market that there are not some that when slaughtered are under the regulation weight, viz., 60 lbs. The quality generally was poor, few of good and only three of prime quality on the market. Prices, considering the quality, were fairly good, ranging from $4 to $8 per cwt., the bulk selling at $5 and the prime ones would have brought $7 per cwt., had they been sold by themselves.

Sheep and Lambs.

Receipts of sheep and lambs were not large, but prices were easier. Export ewes sold at $4.25 per cwt.; bucks at $3.50 per cwt.; spring lambs at $3.50 to $5 each, or 7c to 8c per lb.

Hogs.

Receipts were light. Mr. Harris reports prices unchanged at $7.50 for selects and $7 for lights and fats.

EAST BUFFALO CATTLE MARKET.

AN INCIPIENT RIOT.

Cuirrassiers of the Guard This Time—Officers in Fear Speak Pessimistically of Disloyalty in the Army.

St. Petersburg, July 4.—The incipient riot is reported to have occurred among the Cuirrassiers of the Guard at Tsarskoe-Selo, because they had been ordered not to read the newspapers. Officers of the guard declared that the severity of the measures taken to prevent the spread of the revolutionary propaganda among the troops is arousing such intense resentment among the men that the lives of the officers themselves are endangered They speak most pessimistically of the spread of disloyalty in the army.

The Government's agrarian bill has finally been approved and introduced in the Lower House of Parliament, accompany by a sort of proclamation to the peasants, glorifying the Emperor's constant solicitude for the peasants.

The Lower House of Parliament yesterday, by a vote of 236 to 262, quashed the elections of eleven members, from the Province of Tamboff, whom are alleged to have been elected through the intervention of the local authorities.

A meeting of the Cabinet, called by Premier Goremykin after his return from his visit to Emperor Nicholas at Peterhof began at 10.30 o'clock Monday night, and continued until late in the night. There is little doubt that it was connected with the change in the Ministry.

Martial law was proclaimed yesterday at Odessa because of the ferment among the troops there.

The Ministry of War has received telegrams that a serious mutiny has broken out in the 2nd and 3rd Battalions of Tiralleurs and the 1st Railway Battalion at Askabad.

All the shops put up their shutters and citizens lined the route to the ancient Cathedral of Salisbury, where the first portion of the burial service was read. The mayor and corporation marched in the cortege, as well as representatives of the American Line and the Southwestern Railway. Flags were half-masted.

SUCCESSION DUES DECREASE.

More Apparent Than Real — Big Amounts Due.

Toronto, July 4.—The semi-annual statement of the succession duties' office shows a decrease for the half year of $22,602.28. A deposit of $70,000 on account of the Cawthra estate in January, 1905, is the immediate cause of the apparent decrease this year. There are several large estates awaiting settlement at present, and the total for the year will probably be in excess of last. A sum of $33,000 on account of the T. R. Wood estate was paid in yesterday, and there is a balance still due on this estate of some $75,000.

The figures for the six months of each year are respectively:

	1906.	1905.
January	$25,850.37	$123,267.14
February	71,783.24	49,409.92
March	35,596.74	23,033.82
April	34,415.00	9,704.63
May	49,840.73	64,540.54
June	83,260.78	53,394.09
	$300,746.86	$323,349.14

"Slaughter of the Innocents."

Toronto, July 4th.— "Slaughter of the Innocents" was the phrase used in his report adopted by the provincial board of health yesterday by Secretary Dr. Hodgetts, in dealing with the statistics of infant mortality and the evidently growing tendency towards "race suicide" in Ontario. The board finally decided by resolution to prepare a pamphlet for circulation among women, in which the points touched upon in the report as adopted will be bought to their attention.

Killed While Eloping.

Bristol, Va., July 4.—As a train was pulling out of the Union Passenger station in this city Monday, bearing Mrs. Nita Orr, wife of John J. Orr of Bristol, and George S. Jones, who were about to elope, the husband appeared upon the scene, and shot Jones three times. He died some hours later. Mrs. Orr left on the train for the east.

Cholera in Philippines.

Manila, July 4.—Cholera of a virulent type has broken out among the natives of Manila and surrounding provinces. Four Americans in Manila have been stricken to date, and one American has died. Twenty-one cases and 16 deaths were reported yesterday. The provinces report 26 cases and 25 deaths. The disease is of the most deadly type.

Leg Broken From Robber's Kick.

Toronto, July 4.—Frank McConville, a drover, was attacked by three highwaymen at the foot of Stafford street early yesterday and so badly assaulted that his right leg was broken by a kick. He was robbed of $1.85. He dragged himself on the ground until he met a policeman and was sent to St. Michael's Hospital.

Police Sergeants Assassinated.

Warsaw, Russian Poland, July 4.—The terrorists' determination to exterminate the police force, shows no signs of wavering. Before noon yesterday two more police sergeants were added to the already long death roll. Both men were shot and killed in the streets and in each case the assassins escaped.

What Boys Can Do.

Halifax, July 4.—The coal mines at Springhill, this province, were idle yesterday. The tying up of the mines is due to a strike of boys.

TORONTO FATALITIES

Unusual Number of Violent Deaths in Queen City.

Stonemason Jumped From Moving Train and Broke His Neck—An 18-Months-Old Boy Was Run Over by a Wagon and Killed—Unidentified Man Was Killed by Train—Body of Unknown Woman Found in Bay.

Toronto, July 4.—The body of a well dressed woman between 25 and 30 years of age, possibly a school teacher from Teeswater or vicinity, was found floating in the bay at the foot of Bay street at 7.30 o'clock last evening. The body had been in the water about two days, evidently, and fragmentary evidence indicates that the woman walked off an excursion boat. She was dressed in a plain black traveling suit, and wore a blue serge cap, strong black laced boots. In her waist was found a black purse containing the return portion of a Grand Trunk excursion ticket from Teeswater to Toronto, dated June 26, and $2.65 in money. In her belt was a small lady's open face gold watch, Waltham make, No. 5573130, attached to which was a "friendship fob" of five silver coins—five cent pieces, Bearing ladies Christian names Cora, Mabel, Lulu, Lydia and one other. A small telescope hand grip was delivered to the police at the union depot on receipt of a claim check, which also called for a bandbox containing a plain black summer hat of conservative style. In the grip was discovered a letter without envelope, dated Port Locke, June 23, 1906, addressed to Miss May Button, Gordon Lake, and signed "Ed. Smith." An acquaintance of Miss May Button of Teeswater, who viewed the body, said it was not her. Two baggage checks were found in the grip, and the police have ordered this baggage returned from Teeswater to which point it had been checked.

Boy Badly Injured.

Toronto, July 4.—Little Gordon Hackett, the 11-year-old son of W. J. Hackett, of 149 Simcoe street, engineer in the fire department, lies at the General Hospital in a precarious condition, the result of having been run over by a street car, yesterday afternoon. He was picked up with one leg almost severed, and the other badly crushed.

Jumped and Broke His Neck.

Toronto, July 4.—Angus McLeod, a stonemason, who had spent the holiday in Buffalo, was instantly killed yesterday morning. He jumped off the G.T.R. express in the yards west of Strachan avenue, while the train was running at about 20 miles an hour, and was found later beside the track with a broken neck. McLeod was unmarried. He came from Stornoway, Scotland, about four years ago. An inquest will be opened to-night.

Child Killed in Toronto.

Toronto, July 4.—The 18-months-old son of William Bellatz, 117 York street, toddled in front of a horse driven by George Vaughan, 85 Sumach street, yesterday, was knocked down and killed by the wheels of the rig, which passed over the baby's head. An inquest will be opened by Coroner Young tomorrow evening.

Terribly Mangled by a Train.

Toronto, July 4.—A man between 40 and 50 years of age was horribly mangled by an east-bound passenger train at Sunnyside crossing last night shortly before 9 o'clock. The man was attempting to cross the several tracks when a train struck him. On his person was found a pay envelope, possibly from the Ontario Bolt Works, and which bore the name of P. McKelroy. No address was marked on it, and no other evidences of identification could be found in his clothing. The body was crushed almost beyond recognition, and was taken to the morgue.

Drowned at Montreal.

Montreal, July 4.—The body o a man, apparently about 25 years of age, dressed in a grey suit, was taken from the river at the King Edward pier yesterday morning. No marks of violence were noticeable. Two letters were found in his coat pocket. One was from his mother, who signs her name Emily Plumridge, and gives her address 47 Trevelyan road, Tooting, S. W.

Toronto, July 4.—Mrs. W. F. Gothard keeps a boarding-house at 266 Adelaide street west in this city. She had a boarder there named Plumridge, an Englishman, who had only been in Canada three weeks He left last Thursday to secure passage on a cattle boat to the old country

Killed Boarding Train.

Watford, July 4.—Harry A. Ferguson, an Ann Arbor law student, was killed on the G. T. R. here Monday night. He caught on to No. 5 express on the blind side, and was evidently drawn under the cars, as the body was found early yesterday morning a short distance from the depot.

NO SUBSIDY FOR T.&N.O

share, and Mr. Emmerson, on the main proposition was obdurate.

Preston Won't Go.

On a motion to go into supply last night, Mr. Monk moved an amendment declaring it to be the sense of the House, in view of the testimony taken before the committee on agriculture and colonization and public accounts and other facts within its knowledge, that W. T. R. Preston should not be longer continued in office. Mr. Preston had deliberately violated his express instructions and the traditional policy of our Government by clandestinely promoting the emigration of skilled artisans to Canada.

Hon. Mr. Oliver intimated that the conditions in our immigration offices in England were not satisfactory, but he would endeavor to investigate those conditions and correct them in his own time and in his own way. At any rate he would not discharge any official without hearing his defence.

Mr. Macdonnell (South Toronto) said this resolution was primarily a labor question. There was universal dissatisfaction with Preston, especially among the laboring people.

Mr. R. L. Borden thought it peculiar that after sixteen months the Minister had apparently taken no steps towards an investigation. The charges against Mr. Preston rested for proof upon his own letters. These letters were admitted by Preston to be substantially correct. What is to be hoped for from this long delayed "investigation"? "Will the Minister remove Mr. Preston if satisfied that these letters are genuine?" He can procure them at any time from Lord Strathcona. "Will he make that announcement now?" demanded Mr. Borden, but Mr. Oliver was silent.

Mr. Verville, the labor representative from Montreal, declared himself in favor of dismissing Mr. Preston, but he regretted that it had been made a party question. He and all laboring men desired Preston's removal but he preferred to have it result from the protest of organized labor.

Mr. Bergeron (Beauharnois) believed that Mr. Oliver would like to discharge Preston, but he dared not do so. He knew enough to blow the Liberal party of Ontario to atoms.

Mr. Campbell (Centre York) said that the matter was entirely political. The Conservative of Ontario were still smarting under the defeats they had suffered from Mr. Preston.

Upon division Mr. Monk's amendment was defeated: Yeas 39, nays 89.

NOT FAIR TO SENATE.

Usefulness of Its Work Not Understood, Remarks Mr. Kerr

Ottawa, July 4.—The debate on Senate reform was resumed by Senator Kerr of Cobourg in the Senate yesterday. He averred that the Senate had never been given fair treatment by either political party or the public generally. The usefulness of its work was not understood by the public.

Power of Deportation.

On the bill respecting immigration and immigrants being offered for third reading in the Senate yesterday afternoon, Senator Power proposed an amendment. As the bill stood, he said a person who was deaf, dumb, insane, feebleminded, or epileptic could not be allowed to land in Canada. He, therefore, offered an amendment which would permit the father of a family to bring in a feeble-minded or otherwise afflicted child.

The amendment was lost by 12 to 24.

Senator Power offered an amendment reducing from two years to six months the time in which an immigrant may be sent back for becoming a charge on the public.

Hon. Mr. Scott said the power of deportation was one that would be exercised only in extreme cases. It had been found desirable to have the power of deportation for two years. The United States took the power for three years.

The amendment was lost on division, and the bill was given its third reading.

LIBERALS VOTED AGAINST IT.

Were Given a Free Hand on Clause of Education Bill.

London, July 4.—Discussion of the sixth clause of the education bill, which makes attendance of children in elementary schools compulsory only during the hours of secular instruction, occupied much time in the House of Commons Monday.

The Government succeeded in defeating a hostile amendment by the small majority of only 47 votes. Irish members protested strongly against so important a point being settled by such a small majority.

The small majorities were partly due to the Government giving the House a free hand, with the result that about 40 Liberals, including, James Bryce, Chief Secretary for Ireland, and Sir Henry Fowler, chancellor of Lancaster, voted against the bill.

Whole Family Perish.

Durango, Col., July 4.—Leonard Boat, his wife and six children, were drowned while attempting to ford the Animas River, near Cedar Hill, New Mexico, yesterday.

Murderer Sentenced.

St. Hyacinthe, Que., July 4.—Price Lapointe, a noted character, was sentenced to twenty years in the penitentiary for the murder of Mrs. Gendreau.

Alleged Bad Italians Arrested.

Kingston, July 4.—Nicolas and Donato Sanafrio, Italian brothers, were lodged in the police station yesterday afternoon. They are alleged to be two of the worst who raised the riot at the outer station on Thursday last. One of them is known to have used the handle of a pick in his attack on the police. When searched, the men showed considerable wealth, one of them having $265, and the other over $100. Another brother of the pair is at present in the County Jail on remand. This brings the total up to twenty-three.

Glass can be cut with a pair of ordinary shears if glass and shears and hands are all kept under cold water.

Woman Suffragists Go to Prison.

London, July 5.—Miss Kenney and the other women suffragists arrested in Cavendish square, June 21, for creating a disturbance outside of Chancellor of the Exchequer Asquith's house, were begged yesterday by the magistrates to promise not to repeat their performances before Mr. Asquith's residence, but they all positively refused, and the court finally ordered them to furnish bail in $250 each for their good behavior for a year, or, in default, to undergo six weeks' imprisonment. They all elected to go to prison.

Hussey Will Recover.

Goderich, July 5.—The recovery of the young man who was shot at a charivari at Kingsbridge a week ago Wednesday night is assured. Altogether, eleven arrests were made, and the young men came up for trial yesterday morning. Matthew McCreight, who, it is said, fired the shots that so nearly resulted in Hussey's death, was remanded till this morning, and the ten other young men were allowed out on bail till Tuesday, July 10.

$2,000,000 Appeal Dismissed.

London, July 5.—(C. A. P.)—By the Privy Council yesterday the Whitney v. Joyce appeal was dismissed with costs. This was an action taken by Whitney to recover from John Joyce $2,000,000, being par value of the stock of the Shawinigan Water and Power Co. The action is based on an alleged verbal agreement of partnership entered into in the year 1899. The respondent denied such an agreement.

Withdrawing the Military.

Pekin, July 5.—The Japanese military authorities on July 1 transferred the control of Mukden, Manchuria, to the Japanese civil administration. The latter are arranging for the withdrawal of military control from other interior cities of Manchuria during July and August. The United States Government is pressing China to establish custom houses at Port Dainy and Antung.

Castellane's Election Voided.

Paris, July 5.—Despite a protest from the count the French Chamber of Deputies, by 253 votes against 221, decided to invalidate the election of Count Boni de Castellane as a deputy for Castellane in the Basses Alpes, on a charge that there had been money, clerical interference and campaign of false news used in his behalf.

Finger in Salmon Story a Hoax.

London, July 5.—(C. A. P.)—The Liverpool Chamber of Commerce has investigated the report of a human finger being found in a tin of preserved salmon, and found the story to be a hoax. The bulk of the salmon which comes from British Columbia has always been found pure.

Rev. Henry McQuade Dead.

Peterboro, July 5.—Rev. Henry McQuade, superintendent of the Bridgenorth circuit of the Methodist Church, died yesterday afternoon after a lingering illness. Anaemia was the cause of death. He was 59 years of age, and had been in the ministry 32 years.

Rojestvensky Acts Manly.

Assumed All Blame For Surrender of Gunboat Bedovi.

By Pleading Guilty Before Courtmartial the Admiral Virtually Appealed For Condemnation and Death—Is Endeavouring to Save All the Surviving Members of His Staff—Others Plead Not Guilty.

Kronstadt, July 5.—In a manly effort to save the surviving members of his staff and the other officers, who he believed surrendered the gunboat Bedovi on account of their affection for their wounded commander and their desire to save his life, Admiral Rojestvensky yesterday pleaded guilty before a courtmartial.

In a short speech to the court, the admiral declared that he took all the blame on his own shoulders, and asked that he alone be punished to the fullest extent of the law, virtually an appeal for condemnation and death, which is the penalty for hauling down the St. Andrew's Cross to a hostile vessel.

All the other defendants pleaded not guilty.

OUTBREAK PLANNED.

Report of Parliamentary Commission on Bialystok Massacres.

St. Petersburg, July 5.—A point strongly brought out in the Parliamentary report on the massacre of Jews at Bialystok, is that there was no religious hatred of the Jews among the peaceful Russian population. The fighting was confined to the police, troops and black hundreds on one side and the Jews and revolutionists on the other.

The Parliamentary commission found overwhelming evidence that the outbreak was deliberately prepared.

"The commission cites proof on every hand that after the rioting was started it was directed by the police and supported by the troops, who fired only at Jews and Jewish houses."

Seized the Explosives.

Kostrama, European Russia, July 5.—A number of armed revolutionists Tuesday took possession of a steamboat which was transporting ammunition, and carried off the explosives, including 350 pounds of dynamite.

Round-Up of Terrorists.

Moscow, July 5.—A [illegible] of terrorists, consisting of 25 young men, with a full equipment of bombs and revolvers, has been captured by the police here.

Just to Prevent Smuggling.

St. Petersburg, July 5.—The occupation by Russia of the Aland Island, between Finland and Sweden, is one of the measures taken to prevent the smuggling of arms and ammunition through Finland into Russia and there is no intention of violating the treaty of Paris of 1856, by rebuilding the fortifications at Boamrsund, destroyed by the British fleet during the Crimean war.

Russian Losses in War.

St. Petersburg, July 5.—The general staff issued yesterday final statistics respecting the losses of the Russian armies during the war with Japan. They show that 31,187 men were killed and 115,885 wounded or contusioned. The number of missing is 37,497, and of prisoners of war 53,970.

NATIVE OUTRAGES.

Number of Whites, Including Rev. Mr. Madison, Stabbed With Assegais.

Johannesburg, Transvaal, July 5.—A series of native outrages culminated Monday night, when a band of desperadoes, shouting the rebel Zulu chief Bambaata's name, and terrorizing the southern suburbs of Johannesburg, attacked a number of whites, stabbing them with assegais and robbing them. The whites included Mr. Madison, a Wesleyan minister, who with some others is in a precarious condition.

MURDER AND SUICIDE.

Farmer Kills His Wife and Turns Gun On Himself.

Lindsay, July 5.—Tuesday morning a horrible tragedy occurred a few miles from the village of Kirkfield. A well-known farmer, Duncan McArthur, aged about 35 years, and his wife, some years younger, were found dead outside their home, the indications being that McArthur had first killed the woman and then committed suicide. McArthur and wife attended a picnic at Glenarm Tuesday and appeared to enjoy themselves. They drove home in the evening, and on the way hired a man named Bell to work for them. Yesterday morning Bell walked to the farm to begin his duties. As he approached the house by way of the garden he encountered the body of McArthur with the top of the head blown off. An old shotgun owned by McArthu lay at his side, and just outside the kitchen door he came upon the body of Mrs. McArthur, dead, with the left side of her face and head torn away with a shot wound.

A note in McArthur's handwriting was found in which he stated among other things that he had killed his wife at 7.40 a.m. and intended shooting himself at 8.15. Dr. Wood of Lindsay, coroner, is holding an investigation.

John M. Dobson Charged.

Toronto, July 5.—John William Dobson, the middle-aged man who told a curious story to the police of an alleged burglary and fire at his premises early Tuesday morning, was taken into custody yesterday morning on a charge of stealing $125 from Wycliffe Lodge, L. O. L., No. 585. Dobson was remanded until to-day without electing or pleading. Bail was refused. A charge of arson may likewise be laid against him.

Fraud Alleged in Mining Leases.

Toronto, July 5.—Application has been made to Attorney-General Foy to have writs issued to dispossess the Temiskaming & Hudson Bay Mining Co. of three claims of 40 acres each, near the town of Cobalt. It is alleged that the mining company secured the leases through misrepresentation, and that they, the plaintiffs, made the discovery. The Attorney-General is now considering the arguments offered.

Revising the Statutes.

Toronto, July 5.—The commission for the revision of the statutes meets this morning at 11.30 in the Parliament Buildings. Justice Osler is the chairman. The work of the commission will last into next year, and is one of necessity. One statute, at least, was included in the revision of 1897, which had been obsolete for ten years. The new revision is to be ready for January, 1908.

Cigarettes Worse Than Meat.

London, July 5.—Edward Page Gaston of Chicago testified before the select committee of the House of Lords on juvenile smoking that the worst article America sent to Great Britain was the American cigarette. It was worse, he said, than Chicago tinned meat.

What Conservatives Did For the North West.

To the charges of graft in connection with the administration of the Northwest reply is made by defenders of the Laurier Government that under the Conservative Government settlers were going out of rather than coming into that country; that the C.P.R. had "by no means a rosy outlook," that its branch lines were virtually bankrupt, etc.

Are these allegations borne out by the facts? Let us see:

It is worthy of note that the C.P. R. was built during the eighteen years of the Conservative regime, and that Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who had previously worked against Confederation, opposed the enterprise with all the violence he could bring to bear against it. That railway was at no stage of its history in such a position as to have a "by no means rosy outlook." In 1890 its earnings were a trifle less than $20,000,000, and its prospects were very bright indeed. The Conservatives did not have eighteen years in which to recognize the Northwest. They had three years, during which they sought means for the construction of the transcontinental railway. Then there were five years during which the road was being built. On Nov. 1, 1886, the first train from Montreal to Winnipeg was despatched, and from that date the West was really opened. Thus the Conservatives had eight years of railway construction and nine and a half years in which to lay the foundations of our Western progress. Is it true that at the end of that nine and a half years the people were leaving rather than entering that country? Let the census returns tell the story. Here they are:

Population.	Manitoba.	Territories.
1881	62,260	56,440
1901	254,385	234,248

The census figures pass beyond 1896, the year that is in question. But it will be observed that there was a gradual increase in the population from 1881 to 1891, and that, instead of declining, the rate became greater up to the end of the following decade. But, if the figures of population are indecisive, because they do not cover the exact period in question, the crop returns are not open to that objection. Here are the crop figures for 1881 and 1895:

Manitoba.	1881	1895
Wheat, bus. ...	1,029,378	31,775,038
Barley, bus.	253,604	5,654,036
Oats, bus. ...	1,270,268	22,555,733
Potatoes, bus.	556,193	4,042,562

Could a fleeing population grow in Manitoba 55,000,000 more bushels of grain and three and a half millions more of potatoes in 1895 than in 1881? If it was a plague that the people were escaping from, it must have been a plague of prosperity.

The statistics show that the situation was not at all as the Grits allege. The West was opening out, and considering the fact that there was great competition for settlers across the line, that the Liberal politicians decried the West, and that we had not been fully advertised throughout the world, we were doing, not so well as desired, but not so badly as falsely represented by the Liberals. The foundation of our progress was being laid up to 1896. All that the grafters had to do upon reaching office was to allow the seed sown by their predecessors to germinate. But if the contrary were the case it would be no justification for the wholesale crookedness now prevailing at Ottawa. There is, as a matter of fact, no excuse for plunder.

TIMELY TOPICS.

The temperature last night was pretty trying on the short sleeve girl.

A little dry weather, now, is what farmers and gardeners in this locality are sighing for. If old Jupiter Pluvius wants to be popular here he will lay away his watering can for a while.

Seven inches of rain fell in June, which is four inches more than normal. Another month of such weather would do all sorts of damage.

The Crown Princess of Germany had a son and they fired 101 guns in his honor. They had, as the small boy would say, "a son of a gun of a time."

It will be noted, by the article in another column, that the fishermen of Prince Edward county have been petitioning the Government to allow the use of nets in the Bay of Quinte. It is to be hoped that the Government will decline to grant the petition. The arguments and statements of fact put forth recently by Mr. Thomas Ritchie, Mr. Jos Templeton and others in this city should go far to convince any reasonable men that net fishing should be stopped. The same tale comes from everywhere net fishing is allowed—the catches are nothing like so good as they used to be.

Asked to explain the falling-off in the sport, experienced anglers one and all blame net fishing for it. One of the oldest and most enthusiastic fishermen in Wellington told the writer a few days ago that the fishing at West Lake—once a splendid fishing ground—had been seriously hurt by the net fishermen. "They took tons of fish out last fall and spring," he said. It is to be hoped that the Government will refuse to accede to the request that the use of nets be again allowed. Give the game fish a chance for a few years, and the old Bay of Quinte will again become, what it used to be, one of the very best game fishing grounds among Canadian inland waters.

The umbrella, during the last few days, has rather crowded the bicycle off the stage.

Didn't the mosquitoes have a feast on those bare-armed girls on the park last night?

The maidens and their beaux were there
In all their pomp and pride,
And every time the bass drum boomed
A skeeter died.

Cheer up, you Grits. There cannot be many more scandals exposed this session, for Parliament will soon prorogue.

Five and a quarter million dollars was voted on Saturday by the House of Commons for public works. And every one of them will probably be completed before the Belleville drill shed is started. In the bright lexicon of Laurier and his co-workers there is no such word as justice for this city.

A Liberal was yesterday complaining that a letter posted in Toronto on June 27th was only delivered in Belleville on July 4th. Serves the Grits right. Why did they allow the old system to be changed? and why do they now submit to the present state of things without murmuring? Because the local leaders of the party are afraid to say their souls are their own. Why do they not come out boldly and manfully and demand that the Belleville Post office be again placed in the Civil Service class? Then, and then only, can we expect as good a service as we had under a Conservative regime.

A Toronto K. C., Mr. Wallace Nesbitt coined an expressive phrase when he complained of "the moral bull-dozing of missionary - minded women." It might be asked, how many men, from the elder Pickwick and Mr. Jellyby down, have been free from it? Many a man will thank Mr. Nesbitt for the phrase. By it, as the Montreal Gazette points out, they can convey to others in easily remembered terms a correct idea of what ails them. It may even lead to a reform, arising out of a demand that a man shall be subject to no moral bull-dozing by women outside the circle of his own family.

A Guelph man complains because he got some pollywogs in the city water of that burg. Pollywogs are not so coarse. What did he expect? Black bass?

In some places, we notice, coal has dropped to $6 a ton. The coal strike bogey appears to have been effectively scared away.

Canada can show its share of funny things these days. Down in Quebec the Grit Government has been building a wharf which is situated in a cow pasture. Next thing you know they will be driving away the cows and dredging out the field so that the water can come in. No wonder Quebec votes in favor of Laurier.

One of New York's four hundred, Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, gave a dance at Newport yesterday, to which all the guests had to go in bathing costume. It must have been an airy affair, sure. Perhaps the greatest fish ball on record.

According to the Whig, six Kingston lady school teachers have taken a cottage at Loughboro Lake, for the summer, and have very unkindly named it "Keep-Out-The-Men." There's an Adamless Eden for sure.

Toronto people are deeply disappointed at the defeat of the Argonauts yesterday. They were so sure of winning the Grand Challenge cup that already the dust was being brushed off the drawing-room table on which the bally mug was to set. But now, alas! the dust will again settle. For a day or two the air will be full of explanations, but the facts of the matter seem to be thus tersely stated by the Toronto Telegram:

> "Of course, the Old Country is slow, but it is still capable of showing its heels to us extremely swift Colonials."

Postmaster-General Lemieux has offered a partial explanation as to why the privilege of selling stamps is restricted to licensed vendors. Departmental stores are not allowed to sell them, because if they were, they would encourage customers to send remittances in stamps. Country postmasters would thus be able to increase their sales, and their salaries, based on the amount of business done, would be thereby increased. The convenience of the public, as the Woodstock Express points out, is therefore sacrificed to the fear that the underpaid postmasters in the country should get a little more money. It is all very well for the departments of the government to be economical, but it seems incongruous to have one department parsimonious to this extent, and prodigality which leads to Arctic scandals holding sway in other departments. There is no advantage to be gained from the friendship of the country postmasters, and so the country is put to any kind of bother to skimp their remuneration. The Postmaster-General has offered an excellent argument for the changing of the system by which postmasters are paid, but it is scarcely a good reason for prosecuting a merchant who ventures to sell a two-cent stamp to a customer.

A Chicago man in England says canned meat is not the worst article the Yankees send to England. Cigarettes, he says, are much worse. They certainly smell worse.

The Fourth of July passed off with its customary "eclaw" yesterday. The Yankees made fools of themselves over a British flag, as per usual, so the country is safe for another year. What a lot of overgrown babies there must be in the land of the stars and stripes!

Admiral Rojy, though he may not be much of a sea fighter, is a man, anyhow, in some respects, even if he couldn't tell a fishing smack from a torpedo boat. Here's hoping he gets nothing worse than a suspended sentence.

Your Cold

How will your cold be tonight? Worse, probably. How about tomorrow? The trouble is, colds always tend downward. Stop this downward tendency with Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Your doctor will tell you why it can do this. Ask him all about it. Ask him if he has anything better for coughs and colds. Then follow his advice, whatever it is.

CRYSTAL WEDDINGS.

An Appropriate Way to Celebrate These Anniversaries.

The "crystal wedding" commemorates the fifteenth anniversary. Write your invitations with a very pointed stick wet with mucilage, then sprinkle "diamond powder," which is pulverized mica, over the paper and let it stand until the mucilage is dry. Dust it off carefully, and you will find that the "diamond powder" has stuck to the letters. Have as much glass on your table as possible. Very pretty dishes of pressed glass can be bought for a small amount. Make a horseshoe of white glass beads and hang it over the table and run long strings of white glass beads from the chandelier to the edge of the dining table. Buy small white paper heart shaped boxes and fill them with candy. On the lid of each box write your husband's and your initials and the year of your wedding—1890 and 1906—and sprinkle this over with the pulverized mica, says the Philadelphia Press. You could give one of these boxes to each of your guests as souvenirs of the occasion.

THE HOME DOCTOR.

A little turpentine added to the bath water is said to be good for rheumatism.

A pinch of salt in a glass of warm water is good for bathing weak or tired eyes.

To treat a cut finger brush across the cut with collodion and keep the lips of the cut together till the collodion dries.

Underdone beef and mutton are not unwholesome, but underdone veal or pork is very unwholesome indeed and often causes illness.

It is well to remember that a fresh cold in the head may sometimes be broken up immediately if treated early by snuffing warm salt water up the nose from the palm of the hand.

A good poultice for a boil is made as follows: Two tablespoonfuls of flaxseed flour, a lump of lard as large as a walnut and one white onion. Mix with sweet milk, stew until the onion is soft and apply warm.

How She Conquered.

Miss Josie Wanous, the only woman pharmacist who runs her own drug store in Minneapolis, has made a little fortune out of a shampoo bag of her own invention. She has refused $25,000 for the patent. She was the daughter of a Bohemian farmer, and the first money she earned was $2 a week at the stationery counter of a village drug store. She studied pharmacy and got her license and then encountered the obstacle which rises before most young women endeavoring to enter the professions. No pharmacist would employ her as clerk. She worked at other things until she acquired the capital to start a tiny store of her own and now has a handsome and commodious store, in which she employs twelve assistants, in one of the best sections of Minneapolis.

The Girls' Den.

To girls who work or who are trying to improve themselves in any way a den is a necessity. This is a place where work may be left about without fear of its being spirited away by a tidy maid, where every sort of industry may be carried on whole heartedly and without fear of interruption. The mother of the family should consider the den as the property of her daughters and only visit it at their urgent invitation. It is well for the different members of a family to keep some place to themselves, for the mother's boudoir to be a sacred place to which the husband and children feel it an honor to be admitted, for the daughter's room to be a sweet, homely place where the whole family, if the girl wishes it, may assemble when the day's work is done.

Sore Nipples.

A cure may be effected by applying Chamberlain's Salve as soon as the child is done nursing. Wipe is off with a soft cloth before allowing the child to nurse. Many trained nurses use this salve with the best results. Price 25 cents per box. To be had at R. Templeton & Co.'s drug store.

ARGONAUTS OUT OF IT.

Beaten By Trinity Hall For Grand Challenge Cup By Half a Length.

Henley-on-the-Thames, July 5.—(C. A. P.).—Trinity Hall beat Argos half a length in the time of 7.09. From the start to the finish it was a magnificent race, nip-and-tuck all the way. The Argos as seen from the referee's launch seemed to have a slight lead at the top of Temple Island. The time for the half-course was 3.25. Both crews steered a fine course. It was by far the most exciting race at the regatta.

Wright at the start rowed 41, and never got lower than 38, but stroke side was too strong. Wright has no excuses whatever, for the defeat; he declares himself perfectly satisfied with his work. He will row no more. Yesterday's race, he says, is his last. As showing the Argos were able to stay the course, at the last 200 yards they caught up nearly level with Trinity Hall. The most disappointed man at Henley is Wright. He feels the crew's defeat most keenly. Wright, no doubt, was the strongest man on the crew.

Weather conditions during the race were excellent. Some lookers-on claim that the half-length given officially should have been one-third. O'Brien expressed the opinion that had there been 50 yards more the Argos would have won.

This put the Argonauts finally out of the contest for the Grand Challenge Cup.

Belgians beat Third Trinity easily by two lengths in the time of 7.03.

The Belgians and Trinity Hall will thus contest in the final for the Grand Challenge Cup to-day.

The London papers this morning all speak in praise of the Argos and regret their defeat.

GEORGE WASHINGTON'S QUEUE.

It Hid a Luxuriant Suit of Straight And Very Dark Hair.

The Father of his Country concealed a luxuriant suit of hair beneath his queue wig. Many now wish the old fashion were in vogue, to conceal thinned hair or baldness. Yet no one need have thin hair nor be bald, if he cures the dandruff that causes both. Dandruff can not be cured by scouring the scalp, because it is a germ disease, and the germ has to be killed. Newbro's Herpicide kills the dandruff germ—no other hair preparation will. "Destroy the cause, you remove the effect." There's no cure for dandruff but to kill the germ. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

An Expert Discusses the Henley Races.

Toronto Telegram: For a third time Toronto has had to regret the defeat of its Argonaut crew at Henley. Twice followers of the rowing game, under the inspiration of the veteran stroke, have consoled themselves by warming up the old excuse that an English crew has unsurmountable advantages on its own grounds. The thought has been a comfort after two defeats. A third failure makes us look the question fairer in the face.

Mr Joseph Wright has been wont to claim that the English crew wins because of the number of its candidates. All England, he asserts, is searched for recruits, and it is impossible for a city of Toronto's size to compete against the whole of Great Britain.

What measure of truth is in this? The Leander Club has on its roll the names of all the best oars of Oxford and Cambridge. The crews of the trial eights and of the first three boats on the Isis and the Cam get their Leander colors. If no oarsman rowed more than one year the enlistment from this source would amount annually to about a hundred oarsmen. But such an estimate is, of course, very wide of the mark. It is quality, not the quantity, that accounts for the prowess of the Leander Club.

Leander is not this year a competitor. It is the only club, however which gives Mr. Wright's claim a superficial approach to verity.

This year ONE COLLEGE from Cambridge University has entered THREE CREWS. Graduates are eligible the college is a large one, having about a third the membership of Toronto University. But surely, the Argonauts do not this year, of all years, claim to have gone down before sheer weight of numbers.

In physique the advantage has been tremendously in favor of the Canadian crew. Herculean is the word that describes them. Yet eight men from a quarter section of one Cambridge college has taken their measure.

Surely there is something radically wrong. It is not claimed here that rowing at Henley is the paramount form of rowing. It may be just as great an achievement to win races at St Catharines or on the Schuylkill, where different conditions prevail. But if the heart of the Argonaut Club is set on triumph on the Thames, would they not do well, after their three determined but fruitless efforts, to adopt that style that has won every Henley victory. The Canadian style has won the championship of America But the Canadian style has never endangered and never will win the championship of England.

Men over there are taught to row on fixed seats. Thereby they gain control of their bodies before they resort to the mechanical contrivances of slides. The muscles of the arms have been overpowered always at Henley by the muscles of the back, and it is only by beginning the oarsman's education at the beginning—that is, on fixed seat—that the back can be developed properly in strength, precision and efficacy. Getting down to first causes, it has been the bitter experience of thousands of dollars spent in vain, and of hundreds of hours rowed under a system already discredited by two defeats, that should by now have taught the Argos that the winning eightsman begins at the beginning. He does not run before he has learned to walk.

He begins on fixed seats. There he learns to manage his body and his oar.

With the Henley victory as the desideratum, it is idle to argue against these facts. To win an English race, we must row as the English row.

Defeat is always a sufficiently bitter pill. For their splendid struggle the Argos win all sympathy. But a calm verdict on their labors, advice drawn from results, will do more good than all the sugar-coated excuses that can be manufactured. Defeat explained glibly away brings no reform

The crew was composed of giants. Their devotion to training has been splendid Every ounce that was in them went out in the supreme hour of trial.

But they were beaten.

Why?

Because they are in too great a hurry to win fame. Because they wish to get to the top without mounting the ladder.

SPORTING NOTES.

Bass fishing off the Grand Junction dock is at present fairly good. Yesterday afternoon James French secured two which were beauties.

MY CREED.

Better a smile than a tear or a sigh.
Better a laugh than a frown,
Better an upward look to the sky
Than always a sad look down.

The joys we find in each little day
Perhaps may seem few and small,
But better these little joys, I say,
Than to have no joys at all.

Keep faith in the love that blesses men
As the sunshine does the sod.
Let us do our best and trust the rest
To the father heart of God.

PHOTOGRAPH MYSTERY.

Picture of Girl Shows Her Fiance Holding Dagger Over Her.

The astounding story of mysterious photographs, which is vouched for by a well-known London photographer, is told in the current number of M. A. P.

A certain young woman named Miss B., who lives with her mother in one of the home counties, made an appointment with the photographer in question. The sitting was duly given, the photograph taken, and after the lapse of a week the young woman received a letter saying the photographs were not a success, and asking for another sitting. She agreed, and as soon as possible went to London again and a second photograph was taken.

A short time elapsed, and, as no proofs were sent, she wrote, making enquiries, only to receive a very apologetic letter saying that again the photographs were failures and asking for a third sitting. For the third time Miss B. came to London. In two days she received an urgent letter from the photographer, asking her to come up to his studio and bring a friend with her. As a result of this letter Miss B., accompanied by her mother, paid a fourth visit to the studio, and there the photographer exhibited the amazing results of the three sittings.

The actual photographs of the girl herself were quite good. But in each plate there was to be seen standing beside her the figure of a man holding a dagger in his uplifted hand. The features, though faint, were clearly discernible, and to her horror Miss B. recognized them as those of her finace, an officer in the Indian army. The effect of this experience was so great that she wrote to India breaking off her engagement.

Pointer From a Burglar.

"Bank of England notes are ridiculously easy to imitate. The dull, single-colored ink in which they are printed is an inducement to forgers."

This remarkable statement, which is in direct opposition to the belief which has always been cherished by the lay mind, was made by William Barmash, one of the most famous note forgers of the century.

Barmash was released from Pentonville Prison after serving a sentence of penal servitude for participation in a bank-note forgery, which, had the plot succeeded, would have robbed the Bank of England of £50,000.

Having now resolved to devote his abilities to honest business transactions, Barmash, starts by making a practical suggestion for putting an end to note forgery.

"The Bank of England," he said, "could stop all the attempts at forging their notes by printing in fifteen or sixteen different colors. Even the cleverest forgers would then be foiled.

"If we had been as successful as at one time we thought we should be, we should have entirely destroyed the credit of the Bank of England note in its present old-fashioned shape, and should have compelled the bank to change the color and design of their notes."

Foiled After All.

During the peninsular war a number of English officers had established a mess in a Spanish village, with native cooks, whose efforts were fairly satisfactory to the keen appetites of the campaigners. They were joined, however, by a certain peevish, cantankerous major, who bitterly complained that every dish was flavored with sugar, after the Spanish fashion, and quite uneatable. Finally he confined himself to a diet on eggs boiled in the shell. "They can't sugar those!" he cried triumphantly. But his triumph was short-lived. Next morning some mischievous subs were at the mess table before the major and emptied all the salt cellars, replacing their contents with powdered sugar. The major soon appeared and with gloomy complacency began upon an egg, with which, as usual, he took plenty of "salt." At the first mouthful his face turned purple with rage. "Sugared, by Jove!" he exclaimed and rushed off to his tent.

Wrong In His Head.

A Yorkshire mill worker charged with having set fire to a large hayrick was defended on the ground that he was not altogether responsible for his actions. One of the witnesses, a typical Yorkshire man, testified to the belief that the prisoner was "wrang in his held."

"Can you mention any occasion on which the prisoner behaved in a manner to warrant your statement?" he was asked by the prosecuting counsel.

"Yes," answered the witness. "Ah mind once 'at he got hawf a crown too much for his wage, an'"—

"Well?" said counsel as the witness hesitated.

"He took it back to t' manager!" concluded the witness amidst a roar of laughter.

Sea Mystery Solved.

Another mystery of the sea has been settled apparently. The British steamer Loch Vennacher left the Clyde for Adelaide on June 14, 1905, and was never seen after Sept. 14. A bottle containing a slip of paper purporting to have been written by one J. B. Gillingham of Glasgow and dated 3 a. m. Oct. 29 has been found off the Australian coast. It states that the ship had struck on the Althorpes, near Kangaroo Island, and was not expected to float more than half an hour. Boats were being launched, but it was not thought they would live, as the sea was very rough.

They Would.

Oh, time and love and money
Are just the three big things
Which would be e'en more sunny
If we could clip their wings!

Literary Notes.

NOW FOR THE MODEL PACKING HOUSES.

The great packers of Chicago and the other Western cities have immense resources of capital. They have spent a great deal of money in advertising some of their products. It is absurd to say that they have been engaged principally in selling unwholesome or poisoned food to the public. They will not have to revolutionize their business to make it so wholesome as to meet every fair criticism. Their best possible advertisement now would be to use some of their resources in putting their establishments into the most perfect possible conditions from the sanitary standpoint. For instance, in place of damp and rotting wood, let them use white glazed tiles. Let every employee pass to his work through a compulsory shower-bath establishment, emerging with garments immaculate from the laundry branch of the institution. It is perfectly feasible to put the business of the packing houses upon a basis of this sort from one end to the other, and thus to turn criticism into praise, and harmful notoriety into profitable advertising. The thing is so easy that not to do it would imply a lack of ordinary judgment and perception.—From "The Progress of the World," in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for July.

BALLADE OF THE IMPROVIDENT.

(Frank Glover Heaton.)

Rhymsters warble of last year's flowers,
Songs they sing of the season's dead;
Lyrics litter our leisure hours
Just to tell us the rose is red!
Sonnets sigh for the summer fled;
Rondels reek with the dewdrop's tear;
Never poet has sung or said
Where is the coin of yesteryear?

Dewdrops vanish—and always will;
Blossoms fade in an afternoon;
There's small sense in the ink they spill—
Roses frequently bloom in June,
Who cares aught for a creepy croon
Chanted over a summer's bier?
Poet, tell, to a weirdsome tune,
Where is the coin of yesteryear?

Where is the clinking gold we earned?—
Bright and yellow as e'er was mined!—
Where's the wealth that our pockets burned?
Left it never a groat behind?
What was bought with the checks we signed?
It's a puzzle our minds can't clear;
This the question we always find;
Where is the coin of yesteryear?

ENVOI.

Creditors, watching lest we take wing,
Grief we'll match with you; tear for tear;
Only answer us just one thing—
Where is the coin of yesteryear?

A curious incident occurred in a Toronto court the other day. A woman was suing to recover from a dressmaker the price of a dress which, she declared, was not satisfactory. The judge was unable to decide from the evidence whether the lady ought to pay for the dress or not. There was nothing to do but for the plaintiff to don the gown and display it for His Honor's judgment. For once compliments on her appearance was scorned by the lady, for they were the weak points in the dress that she wanted to display.

A very timely topic just now is the ministers' summer vacation, concerning which the Canadian Baptist has this to say; "Minister's vacations are among the necessary things in life, if there is to be the accomplishment of the best and and most for themselves and the churches they serve. Occasionally we have seen men in the ministry and out of it whose boast has been that they have wrought faithfully and carried many burdens, without the semblance of a holiday. And there is reason for thankfulness that they have been able strenuously to labor and to retain vigor and freshness without turning aside for seasons of vacation. But we have the conviction that strong and vigorous as they are, they would have been none the worse for occasional times of rest; and it may be that greater results would have attended their efforts had they gone apart for a while each year from their customary labors. From observation and experience, we have learned that it is beneficial both to pastors and churches for ministers to have vacations and that the best time is the summer season."

UNEXPECTED EMERGENCY.

(Liverpool Post-Mercury.)

A provident wife, says a philosophical contemporary, is an income in herself. But a virtue may be carried to extremes, and even thrift and foresight may be misplaced.

"Your husband'll be all right now," said the doctor.

"What yer mean?" demanded the wife. "You told me he couldn't live a fortnight."

"Well, I'm going to cure him after all," said the doctor; "surely you're glad!"

The woman wrinkled her brows. "Puts me in a bit of an' 'ole," she said. "I bin and sold all his clothes for his funeral. How soon 'll 'e be strong?"

FREEDOM AT AN INN.

To thee, fair Freedom, I retire
From flattery, cards and dice and din;
Nor art thou found in mansions higher
Than the low cot or humble inn.

'Tis here with boundless power I reign,
And every health which I begin
Converts dull port to bright champagne,
Such freedom crowns it at an inn.

I fly from pomp, I fly from plate,
I fly from falsehood's specious grin;
Freedom I love, and form I hate
And choose my lodgings at an inn.

Here, waiter; take my sordid ore,
Which lackeys else might hope to win.
It buys what courts have not in store;
It buys me freedom at an inn.

Whoe'er has traveled life's dull round,
Where'er his stages may have been,
May sigh to think he still has found
The warmest welcome at an inn.

WOMAN'S AIR TRAVELS.

The First to Cross the English Channel in a Balloon.

The honor of being the first woman to cross the English channel in a balloon belongs to Mrs. Griffith Brewer, the wife of a member of the Aero Club.

For some time Mrs. Brewer had been desirous of making the journey, and one recent Tuesday morning Percival Spencer telegraphed to her that the wind was in the right direction for the trip should she care to go. She replied in the affirmative, and arriving in London soon after noon, proceeded to the Wandsworth and Putney Gas works, where a balloon was being inflated.

The start was made at 2.15, the balloonists including Mrs. Brewer, Percival Spencer and Frank Butler. The balloon, which was of a capacity of 45,000 cubic feet, rose to a height of 2,000 feet, and soon attained a speed of 30 miles an hour.

In just over an hour the coastline at Dungeness was visible, and photographs were taken of the view below.

In crossing the channel the equilibrium of the balloon was so well maintained that the voyagers were able to enjoy a meal, consisting of sausage rolls, cake and champagne. As the strange meal was finished, the cross-channel steamer Onward, with passengers for Boulogne, who left London at 2.20, was sighted below, and the race between the balloon and the turbine boat for the French shore afforded considerable excitement to the aeronauts.

The balloon crossed the French coast a few miles south of Boulogne at 5.30, five minutes before the steamer entered Boulogne harbor. At one point on the journey the balloon reached an altitude of 7,000 feet and snow began to fall, the thermometer dropping below freezing point.

As darkness was coming on the aeronauts decided to descend soon after passing the French coast. The valves were opened and the balloon finally came to rest in a field at Samer, 20 miles from Boulogne, after bounding through a grove of poplar trees.

The balloonists caught the night mail from Calais and arrived in London at 5.30 the next morning.

Mrs. Brewer was somewhat fatigued, but otherwise suffered no ill-effects from her adventurous voyage.

A Scandal Averted.

"Oh!" exclaimed Mrs. Midgen. She had been shopping and visiting, and had just arrived home when a thought struck her. She clasped her hands together in dismay, and in her agitation sat flat down on the cat. "Whatever shall I do?"

"I expect you will get over it," said Mr. Midgen, testily. He was waiting for his tea. "What is it?"

"I took my diary out with me instead of my price-book, and if I haven't been and left it somewhere! Suppose somebody should get hold of it and read it."

"Ha, ha!" laughed her husband, "That will be fine sport. How I should like to see them reading all the rubbish you have written in it! What's the good of going back? You'll never get it."

"Oh, I remember now!" suddenly cried Mrs. Midgen. "It was my old one. So it doesn't matter at all. I feel quite relieved."

"What was in it?" said he, feeling disappointed.

"I had to amuse myself by copying your love letters in it, and I intended your signature at the bottom of them."

"What!" yelled Midgen, jumping to his feet and grabbing at his hair. "Do you want people to know what an idiot I was, and make me the laughing stock of the parish just when I am putting up for the vestry. Go and look for it quick! And offer £10 reward for it."

And if it hadn't been found in Mrs. Midgen's bag at that very moment there is no telling what would have happened to that household.—The Sketch.

A Mine-Sowing Cruiser.

The quaintest-looking warship in the British navy is the small cruiser Iphigenia, which has just been converted into a mine-sowing vessel. Along either side of her deck are two rows of elevated rails, in which numerous submarine mines are slung. Three lines of rail project over the vessel's stern, the mines being dropped overboard from them as she steams along.

The introduction of a mine-sowing ship unto our fleet is an experiment undertaken as a consequence of what was learned during the war in the Far East, and the idea is that the Iphigenia would be able to mine a channel or other narrow waters far more effectively than could be done by steam launches.

The Queen's Humanity.

A cable despatch to The New York Evening Post says: "The Queen's letter to the Duchess of Portland protesting against the wearing of egret plumes taken with such cruelty from the osprey maintains her noble reputation for humanity. It is well known that Her Majesty has for years refused to attend pigeon-shooting matches, but the reason for this is not so well known. Some twelve or fifteen years ago at a gun club match at Hurlingham Her Majesty was present when a half-killed bird fluttered into her lap. Since that day she has frowned upon these once fashionable events."

CARE OF THE FACE.

How It May Be Improved In Texture and Complexion.

If more faces were really clean a great improvement both in texture and color of complexions would be noticed. Even the woman who does not patronize the beauty doctor can make use of up to date methods of cleansing her skin. After a day spent in grime and smoke the skin is in a condition that is beyond the reach of water, and unless one is careful as to soap and softeners it may do more harm than good. A good cleansing cream is a necessity, and it should be applied after a day spent in the open air and after leaving it on a little time washed off with a soft rag. After the cleansing cream a good astringent lotion may be sprayed in, as this completes the cleansing process and freshens one more than would be believed. The comfort of a clean face quite apart from its looks is altogether delightful, and, as one patron of the beauty parlor declares, "It makes me feel rested and refreshed and in a good temper."

When the pores are filled with a black accumulation of long standing steaming is necessary, and this is also something that one can do without professional help. Rub in the cleansing cream, and after it has been on for a little while lay a towel over the face that has been dipped in water as hot as you can possibly bear, holding it first over one part of the face and then the other.

The face especially is in need of treatment of this kind after exposure to strong winds, which dry and crack the skin and put in many a wrinkle. Many a bad complexion is from neglecting the proper cleansing processes, and the improvement both in color and firmness that results from keeping up the habit of cleansing it properly almost is past belief.—Exchange.

CHIFFON AND HOMESPUN

By FANNIE HEASLIP LEA

Copyright, 1905, by McClure, Phillips & Co.

Janet came out of the long red farmhouse and paused briefly at the steps, buttoning her dogskin gloves. The keen, bright cold of the November morning brought the blood to her cheeks and an awakening sparkle to her cool gray eyes. She fastened the gloves with a final tug and ran down the path to where a man and two horses stood, just beyond the gate.

He helped her mount with no word beyond a brief "Ready" and an approving smile, then swung himself into the saddle and followed her over the crest of the hill on which the red farmhouse stood.

"You lead the way," he called after her. "I am a stranger in a strange land."

"This way," said Janet. "I want you to see the view from Brierson's hill. It's about the best in this part of the country, I think."

"Better than this?" asked the man audaciously, his eyes on her clear cut profile.

"The background is better," said Janet coolly.

The mountains rose blue and misty in the distance as they rode on. Around them the red of the sumac blazed wildly, and on the sloping sides of the foothills through which they passed great gashes in the red clay suggested, strangely, open wounds.

"It's a fine country," said Burke, with conscious banality.

Janet flung him a look that startled him, it was so far outside her usual cool self mastery.

"It's God's country," she said exultantly. "Oh, I could ride forever! See the haze, like smoke, on those mountains and the leaves afire on the hills. There's a rabbit. See him jump across the road. And look—yonder's an aster. I thought its time was over. Isn't that wind good on your face? Oh, I love it all, every bit of it!"

"I see you do," said Burke slowly.

"Well, why shouldn't I?" she demanded. "Doesn't it make you feel your life? I've a different soul up here."

"I see you have," said the man. "I'm trying to fit that soul to the Janet I know in town, the Janet who sat for my 'Lady In Gray,' the Janet of trailing chiffons and pink teas and Ibsen matinees. Why, you've a different look in your eyes now. You're warmer, less aloof, less certain of yourself. What is it?"

"Don't," said the girl, with a protesting smile. "I won't be dissected. I asked you down to spend Thanksgiving with me—not to cut up my soul with your little hatchet."

"And I came to spend Thanksgiving with you," retorted Burke, "not with a strange woman who has your eyes and your hair and your face—you that I know. How did you happen to leave here?" he asked, with the unembarrassed frankness of intimacy.

"I don't know," said Janet doubtfully. "It just happened. Aunt Jane took a fancy to me while I was off at college, and when I graduated she offered to bring me out in town. Mother never objected to anything I wanted, and—well, I was dazzled with the idea of town—society, dances, men. Any girl would be, so I went to Aunt Jane," she finished. "You have the sweet, sad story of my life now, bar a few details."

"Men?" asked Burke.

"Look out for that bridge; it's bad. Yes—men," said Janet.

"Of whom I am one," he finished.

She nodded inscrutably.

"Well, I don't want to be one," he protested, "unless you preface it with 'the' in italics."

"Don't you?"

"No," he repeated firmly, "I don't. See here, Janet—how long have I known you?"

"A year and a half," said the girl reflectively.

"And in the course of that time I have twice asked you to marry me, haven't I?"

"I seem to remember something of the sort," she answered, with a flickering smile that somehow sheathed the sneer.

"Didn't you know when you asked me here that I'd do it again? Didn't you know that I couldn't see you in a new phase and not lose my grip on myself? Ah, Janet, you must have known, and if you, knowing, let me come it must have been because you meant to say"— He broke off and struck savagely with his whip at the leaves above his head.

"Meant to say what," suggested the girl whimsically—"the word that would hobble my life forever, that would narrow my horizon and weed out my existence to one thought, one aim, one end? Is that what I meant to say?"

"If you like to put it so, that is it," said the man sullenly. "You know the truth is"—

They rode in silence for a little while.

"I could make you happy," said the man at last.

"Could you, Alec? I'm not so sure of that." Janet pushed an escaping hairpin back and after a moment faced him proudly. "I'm not playing fair with you," she said. "I did know you'd ask me this again, and I made up my mind I'd"— A shabby buggy creaked past them. In their absorption they had ridden upon it without knowing. Janet nodded a bright "Good morning!" to the country people within.

"Well," said Burke confidently when they had passed. There was an exultant look in his eyes, and he bent to lay his hand on hers where it held the reins.

Janet swerved suddenly. "Take care," she said hurriedly, "we've ridden into the returning congregation of Brierson's church."

Burke followed her with an unuttered imprecation.

"What are they having church on a week day for, anyhow?" he demanded aggrievedly.

"Thanksgiving day," said Janet, bowing to a gray bearded man on horseback and flinging a smile to the sturdy urchin beside him. They walked their horses slowly through the tide of horses and vehicles, then drew rein before the little wooden church with its stunted steeple and weather beaten sides.

"They call it Brierson's, because the old man built it," said Janet in the tone of an obliging guide.

"Oh, bother the church," said Burke impatiently. "We're past the crowd now. Don't fool me any longer, Janet. Why, Janet"— He broke off, his gaze, following hers to where the door of the little church opened and closed behind a tall man in the rough clothes of the country minister.

Janet's eyes widened, and her cheeks lost their fresh color as the young man, pocketing the church key, came quickly down the path. When he was opposite the pair on horseback he glanced up in frank curiosity, meeting the vivid question of Janet's eyes, and stopped short, paling under all his tan.

"Janet," he said hoarsely, and that was all.

Slowly the color crept back over Janet's face, and her eyelids fell before the minister's compelling look.

Burke's glance went from one to the other, and Janet felt its keenness.

"David," she stammered. "I didn't know that you were here. I hadn't thought"—

"I've been here for a year now." The minister's eyes were fastened upon her face with the bliss of long starvation ended. "They told me you never came home; that you had forgotten us for the city." The glory in his face smote Burke like a physical pain, and he jerked his horse's rein till the creature reared.

"Oh, I beg your pardon!" cried Janet, striving for mastery of the situation. "Mr. Burke, this is David MacAllen, an old friend."

The two men clasped hands in silent hostility on Burke's part and happy abstraction on MacAllen's. He had no eyes save for Janet.

"You've come back to stay," he insisted, laying a firm hand on her bridle rein.

"I think not," murmured Janet. "I don't know." She was visibly distressed.

"We'll convince you," laughed the minister like a happy boy.

Somehow Burke felt old and worn beside his fresh enthusiasm, and the sight of Janet's trembling uncertainty cut him sharply.

"I'll see you tonight," said MacAllen.

They rode on after a little, Janet and Burke, to the red farmhouse and left the minister standing in the road behind them, the glory of love's ages in his eyes.

"It was an old story, then?" said Burke as he lifted Janet from her horse at last.

"I knew him before I ever went to Aunt Jane," said the girl unhappily. "I thought I had forgotten—honestly."

Burke followed her into the house with a philosophic smile curving his lips, albeit a little bitterly. "Many waters cannot quench love nor much chiffon smother it," he said sententiously, but the sheen of the sunlight was as dust in his sight, and the hand that selected a cigarette with ostentatious care trembled strangely.

The Mistletoe.

Many conflicting tales have been told about the mistletoe—how it came to be one of Cupid's strongest cards. In the old Norse mythology curses were heaped upon the unlucky plant because it had been the innocent instrument of the death of Baldur the Beautiful, who was beloved by all the gods except Loki, the mischief maker, who naturally was envious enough to connive at ways to put Baldur out of the way.

But while the sorrowing gods were heaping curses upon the plant the goddess of love stopped them and, catching up the very plant which had slain Baldur, exhorted them all in memory of the bright, beautiful, gentle god to greet each other whenever they saw it with a kiss.

"Baldur is dead, indeed," she said, "but Baldur's spirit lives, and that spirit is love. Let us use the very thing that killed him as a symbol of love."

She hung the branch up, and one by one the angry gods passed out, hushing their sorrow at his death.

The Boy on the Farm.

The boy on the farm should receive encouragement. His is a hard job. There is nothing under the sun, moon or stars that he is not expected to do from currying the horses before sunup to milking the cows after sundown. If he is of school age he escapes some of the jar of farm work, but generally finds a pretty good allowance awaiting him when he comes home. In this day of scarce farm help it is a blessing to a farmer to have a boy, or several boys, for that matter, who can help. It is still more of a blessing to have a boy who does his tasks cheerfully and well. There is not much in this long houred apprenticeship except board and clothes, and so every father should give his son encouragement. Give him some of the farm animals which he can call his own. Let him raise some stock and feed them on his own account. He will consider he is amply repaid then for all the work he does. If this plan were followed there would be fewer boys wanting to come to town.—Pittsburg Press.

THE GIRL WITH SPIRIT.

What She Looks For In the Man She Would Marry.

A girl with spirit nowadays does not marry a man merely because she likes him. Love itself isn't enough. Before she asks herself, "Do I love him?" she wants to settle certain questions in her mind.

For instance, is he congenial? What's the use of affection, asks the modern girl, if we're to have nothing in common to talk about and think about after we're married? If our tastes and ideas are so totally dissimilar that we shall never understand each other or agree, then he's not the man for me. There must be some common bond of interest and sympathy between us that will hold when caresses and endearments wane.

Next, says the spirited modern girl, has he good breeding? I don't mean the vapid airs and graces of a society polish, but the true gentleness of heart which makes him kind and courteous by nature. The instincts of a gentleman may be born in the lowliest, and unless he has these he may some day degenerate into a selfish boor.

What are his morals? asks the modern maid. Can I trust him wholly? If they are flabby and wavering he will never inspire my admiration and respect. I should give him a clean life and upright morals, and I cannot see why I should compromise by accepting less from him.

Also, has he a clean bill of health? He owes it to me to be perfectly frank about this.

Is he a selfish man? That is, will he demand the sacrifice of my individuality? Does he want me to marry him for myself or for my ministry upon his material needs alone?

And again, asks the girl of spirit, is he the sort of man who will take me into his confidence, or will he be reticent and secretive about everything, assuming me incapable of understanding his affairs? It would be wholly impossible for me to be happy unless there was absolute trust and confidence between us, says this resolute girl.

Will he recognize my right to an allowance? she wonders. That will be very necessary.

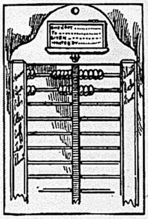
Other things are nonessentials, says the modern girl of spirit. But congeniality, good morals, good breeding, a clean bill of health, an unselfish interest in my welfare, frankness and a reasonable generosity—these are real essentials. No matter how much I care for a man I shan't marry him unless he possesses these qualifications.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

COUNTS THE PIECES.

Easy Way to Keep Tab on Clothes Sent to the Laundry.

Every housewife at some time or other has lost some of the clothes sent to the laundry. The nuisance of writing down each garment and the number given out is more troublesome sometimes than the loss of a piece occasionally, and consequently a permanent record is seldom at hand.

The device shown here is particularly adapted for such a purpose. A glance at the picture will show a frame with rods and centers, similar to those used to teach the youngsters to count. Each rod carries an equal number of counters, and opposite every rod is the name of some garment that is likely to be sent to the laundry. In using the device the counters would normally be in the center, and as various articles are given out to be washed counters on the rods in alignment with the name of the article are to be moved to the side of the frame. When the clothes are returned reference to the counter will immediately show if all are in the bundle or not. Other uses of the device will be readily apparent.—Chicago News.



KEEPING TAB ON THE LAUNDRY.

Olive Oil.

The medicinal qualities of pure olive oil are numerous and are becoming better known day by day. A teaspoonful taken after each meal will relieve constipation and dyspepsia. Mixed with an equal part of lime water it is invaluable for burns. Poured into the eye it will remove any foreign substance lodged there. It is a sure cure for hangnails, is good for chapped hands, is excellent rubbed over the whole body after taking a bath and is beneficial for use in massaging a dry scalp.

The Radiator.

Why will people tolerate gilded or silvered steam radiators? The modern substitute for the hearth is not beautiful at best, but may be made inoffensive by proper treatment. When the woodwork of the room is white give the radiator a double coat of white paint. If the woodwork is natural tone or stained in a color let the radiator match as nearly as possible.

CHILDREN'S ACHES.

Make Sure Whether or Not They Are Rheumatic Pains.

Rheumatism is much more frequent in children than in grown people, especially that form called acute rheumatism. Many times the symptoms of rheumatism in children are attributed to growing pains when in reality rheumatism is developing. It has been estimated that at least 25 per cent of the children in our hospitals are there because of rheumatism. As is well known, acute rheumatism in children is liable to produce heart disease, from which the child rarely recovers. The patient may live several years, but is an invalid, and there is little hope for his entire recovery. Therefore, it is very important that rheumatism in children should be guarded against in every possible way.

There are three things that mothers can do to guard their children against rheumatism, especially during cold weather:

First.—See that they are dressed in warm flannels or at least fleece lined cotton undergarments; that their feet are kept dry by wearing overshoes when outdoors, which should be immediately removed when indoors.

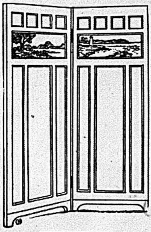
Second.—An overindulgence in sweets, cheap candies, sirups and sugar tends to the production of rheumatism; hence the use of such things, especially between meals, should be prohibited. A liberal amount of sweets with meals should be allowed, but cheap candies between meals are productive of urates in the blood, which are a predisposing cause of rheumatism.

Third.—The child should be encouraged to drink freely of pure water. The habit of taking a glass of water before each meal is a very good one. To keep this up during the cold weather requires some attention on the part of the mother. During the warm weather the child is naturally inclined to drink water enough without any prompting, but during the winter season, when rheumatism is more prevalent, drinking water is neglected.—Medical Talk For the Home.

ARTISTIC SCREEN.

One That Combines Cheapness and Good Taste.

Screens are always useful in the home, and they may easily be made to lend an artistic air to any room. Good taste is shown in the screen illustrated herewith. It may be constructed of plain pine finished with white enamel paint or stained in color, of chestnut either stained or varnished or of other kinds of hard wood, varnished and polished to show the grain of the wood. The pictures at the top may be either water colors, affixed by a narrow molding, or a tooled sketch.—Ladies' Home Journal.



HOMEMADE SCREEN.

The Wardrobe.

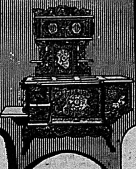
One of the most important things to be remembered in the care of one's clothes is keeping the wardrobes and cupboard in which they are hung in perfect order and cleanliness, and, above all things, do not forget that they need frequent airing. On a sunny day the doors should be left open for several hours and the fresh air allowed to circulate thoroughly. A bottle of spirits of camphor, with the cork removed, may be hung on a hook. This will keep out moths and give a fresh, clean odor to the garments, but not strong enough to make them offensive when worn. Cedar oil, if preferred, may be used in the same way. A dress bodice should never be put away without airing.

A Clothes Tree.

The furniture of a sewing room should always include a clothes tree, which may be purchased at small expense. For hanging unfinished garments it is of the greatest use, and, of course, there should be a supply of coat hangers, which cost only a few cents each. This is decidedly the best method of disposing of garments that are as yet in unfinished stages. Quite often they must be left with sleeves pinned in or trimming pinned on in such a way that it is most inconvenient to fold them. If the clothes tree is covered with sheets the garments will be quite as free from dust as if folded away in drawers.

For Shabby Leather.

For improving shabby leather chairs take a pint of linseed oil, boil it and let it stand till nearly cold, then stir in half a pint of vinegar. Stir till mixed, then bottle for use. When required, shake the bottle well, pour a little on a soft cloth, rub well into the leather, turning the flannel as it gets dirty, then rub with a soft duster till the polish is restored. This polish softens the leather and prevents it from cracking.



No range can bake so well as the Imperial Oxford, because no other range has the Diffusive Oven Flue that draws in pure air constantly, heats it just as hot as you want it heated, and sends it through every part of the whole oven every second. That flue, found only in this perfect range, keeps that heated pure air—DRY air—constantly moving DOWNWARD through the oven, over the baking food, and out up the chimney. When it enters the oven it's hot and dry; when it leaves it, it's wet air,—carries with it all the moisture, all the odors, but NONE of the juices of the food that's being baked.

Please visit any of our stores and see why this is the right range for your kitchen.

It certainly does do good baking

INDIA'S 'DEADLY COBRA'

ENCOUNTERS WITH IT IN LAND OF VENOMOUS SNAKES.

Reptile's Bite Is Not Always Fatal, and It Falls Before the Attacks of the More Agile Mongoose — Experiences Related by a Recent Traveler in India—Europeans Suffer Little — How the Cobra Bites.

On the very first morning, as the tourist flops down in his long armchair on, say, the elevated veranda of the Esplanade Hotel, Bombay, he will find the inevitable juggler appealing to him with uplifted eyes, accompanied by his bag, his basket and the other paraphernalia of his craft, and though the mango growing trick may be more mysterious, the fight between the cobra and the mongoose will be more interesting.

The inborn mutual hatred between these creatures must be supposed to serve some purpose in the wise economy of nature, says Chambers' Journal, and yet would look very strange did we not know that similar aversions exist between other more familiar creatures, and for some reasons not always apparent. Irrespective of the danger of it, why does the mongoose attack the cobra? A live mongoose is said never to touch a dead cobra in the way of food, and the bristly carcase of a mongoose is probably too tough for even the capacious digestion of his mutual adversary. We can only account for it, therefore, on the same principle that the best bred game dogs will not touch the flesh of the quarry that they are so fond of hunting.

The active little mongoose is almost always the aggressor, for the comparatively awkward cobra, unless he got him asleep, would probably never think of attacking his more nimble opponent; and it is generally the mongoose that is victor in these encounters. Though the cobra rears his head, expands his hood umbrellalike to the utmost, and hisses viciously, his dabs at the enemy seem misdirected and aimless, for the wily mongoose suddenly becomes double his natural size by the erection of his tough bristly coat in a way that seems quite to deceive even the wise serpent as to what may be bristles and what not. It is only just to say for the cobra, though, that if his fangs were not extracted or the poison glands destroyed, a successful chance peck would finish the mongoose, in spite of his activity.

The natural animosity is no doubt greatly toned down in the specimens possessed by the jugglers. Familiarity breeds tolerance, if not contempt, on both sides, so that they must attack one another with less ferocity than in their natural wild condition, and must often laugh in their sleeves when the farce is over.

I had the good or bad luck to come across many cobras here and there, the most of which I killed. Indeed, there is little to fear from a cobra in the open. If you do not attack him he is not likely to attack you, unless he takes it into his head that you are going to tread on the tail of his coat. It is a popular delusion that a cobra, after rearing himself, can jump at the enemy. This he is quite unable to do, for the motion of the head is along the arc of a circle of which the radius extends from the head to the part of the serpent touching the ground.

This Snake Met His Fate.

On one occasion, during the late war in Upper Burmah, when resting on a small tent bed of an eighty pound service tent, I saw a cobra walking steathily into my parlor, as the spider would say to the fly, through the open door. I say "walking" advisedly, because serpent do actually walk on the end of their ribs instead of wriggling along after the fashion of worms. The presence of this snake naturally created an uneasy feeling, with such a narrow compass to move about in, but the snake did not get out alive.

There are such incredible stories invented about cobras in India, and so extravagant, too, that one hesitates to mention one's own more modest though truthful experiences, as not quite thrilling enough to be placed on record.

My own creepy sensation was at an up-country station in India. I had newly arrived there from Burma, and was writing at night time on one of the usual kinds of writing desks, with drawers on each side and an empty interval below and between, the desk being, as usual, placed against one of the walls of the room.

I was dressed, moreover, in thin, hot-weather clothing, and therefore particularly vulnerable to the bites of snakes. My legs were in the empty space beneath the lid and in the interval between the drawers on either side. But what was it that I suddenly observed creeping round from the end of the table to my right, and going into the hollow, almost in touch with my right foot? It was a vile cobra. I could not jump away on account of the position in which I was placed. I at once realized that to move in any way would probably rouse the serpent immediately to rear and strike. At any rate, whether it was by calm calculation or that I was too petrified with horror to move, I never did move a muscle till, to my intense relief, the cobra got beyond my feet to the back of the hollow against the wall.

"Then I moved away with less grace than agility and shouted to my bearer, 'Boy! Boy' at the top of my voice; for it is scarcely needful to tell that not even the common or garden bell rope has yet penetrated into the remote Mofossil stations of India, not to speak of the electric press-the-button variety. Hindoos as a rule are not fond of killing snakes, or anything else, for that matter. Indeed, they look upon the cobra as sacred and worship it in their purblind fashion, especially at the yearly festival of Nag Panchami (or the Feast of Snakes), naga being the Hindostanee word for a cobra.

"At this time, however, one or two of my servants were Mussulmans, who had no great regard either for cobras or Hindoos, and we soon hunted out the cobra and despatched him forthwith.

Even the venomous cobra can be made a pet of, minus (if one is wise) his fangs and poison glands; and as for the mongoose, he is one of the most companionable of wild beasts. There is more than one variety of this animal, and they vary in size according to their breed and geographical distribution. One of the most interesting pets I had of this kind was a mongoose that was sent me from the Sultan of Lahel, an Arabian district some thirty miles from our outpost of Aden, when I was stationed in that very sultry locality. I thought this Arabian variety was smaller than those I had seen in India.

How the Cobra Bites.

Some people doubt if there can be any recovery from the full bit of a grown cobra. The poisonous bored fangs of this creature work on a kind of hinge, and are folded back on the roof of the mouth when the animal is in repose; but when the cobra prepares to strike, the mere mechanism of the upper jaw in opening the mouth raises these folded fangs. If the fangs then hit the victim straight I fancy recovery must be very rare.

But there is not always a full complement of poison in the glands at the root of the fangs, and every successive stroke makes the quantity less for the time being. Again, the dress may catch up the greater portion of virus before the skin is reached, and, lastly, the fangs may not strike straight, and then they are easily doubled up on account of the joint spoken of, so that in such instances the front or outer portion of the fangs may graze the skin with, perhaps, no poison at all.

I remember a strange thing happening once regarding the bite of a snake. In a certain part of Beloochistan a detachment was in search of a new site for a temporary cantonment in place of the undesirable one we then had, Thull Chotiali. On our first camping ground we were seated at dinner inside the mess tent, when a sudden cry was raised that one of the camp followers had been bitten by a snake almost immediately outside the tent. The medical officer of the detachment, with the knife he was at the time holding in his hand, rushed out at once. The wound was plain enough on the man's bare leg.

He had been, native fashion, squatting on the ground, and had been bitten on the outside fleshy portion of the leg, a few inches above the ankle. The major at once made a slash on each side above and below the wound, and cut a V-shaped fid out of the poor man's leg within a few seconds of the cry being raised. As we had only gone some dozen miles away from our previous headquarters, and as our detachment was going on still further, the man was sent in next morning in a dhoolie to the hospital, where he lay very ill for some time, but eventually recovered to a certain degree. As it was night time and the other natives got flurried the snake unfortunately escaped in the dark; so I have always wondered whether it was a cobra, and if the prompt excision saved the camp follower's life.

Considering that over twenty thousand —think of it!—human lives are annually lost in India from wild beasts, a very great portion of which is from venomous snakes, it is at first surprising to see the almost complete immunity of Europeans from snake bites in that country. It must be borne in mind, however, that there is only a mere handful (120,000 or so) of Europeans altogether, as against the vast number of native, approaching the stupendous figures of 300,000,000. The natives, moreover, grope about in the dark and roam the jungles with bare feet, and often bare everything else, a condition of affairs that leaves them particularly exposed to the bites of snakes. Be this as it may, it is seldom one hears of a death from snake bite among the European portion of the Indian population.

EDUCATION'S DARK SIDE.

Criminals Become Less Violent, But More Insidious.

The chief constable of Liverpool, England, is of opinion that the education is refining our criminals, and a prominent criminologist endorses this view.

"The burglar avoids violence, whenever possible, and choses, when occasion offers, more subtle forms of roguery," says the chief constable in his annual report.

The criminologist says: "Bill Sikes is to be dreaded less than Raffles, and the latter is to be feared less than the accomplished scoundrel who lays far-reaching plans to swindle a whole community.

"Men who, fifty years ago, would have been burglars or highwaymen today are bogus company promoters and well-dressed swindlers of various kinds. Their profits are enhanced and their risks diminished, and I have no doubt this is one of the fruits of the board school.

"Education has its dark side. An inevitable result of a little learning is to develop hypochisy where the moral training is not commensurate with the merely intellectual culture.

"The child of to-day whose ethical teaching is neglected, and who has inherited criminal instincts, is launched on society with a better equipment for a career of crime. His education has made him sharper and fuller of devices, it gives intelligence to his fraudulent instincts, and widens his radius of practice.

"Criminals of this kind are the most dangerous to society, because they are the most insidious.

"'As the twig is bent so the tree inclines.' Insist on the moral and religious training of children. If the moral restraints and religious influences of the Bible are separated from our primary education, we shall stimulate clever but criminally-inclined children to become more skillful in devising crime and more adroit in its execution."

Movable Theatre Seats.

A new idea in theatre construction intended to prevent a panic in case of fire is that of the German engineer Haussllardt, who has just perfected new and original plans. In case of a fire the orchestra seats, the lower boxes and the gallery could be made to glide out into the street on rails. All the fire escapes at each of the windows would be made movable and when crowded would slide down into the street on specially provided rails and take all the people to safety.

A Long Time Back.

Miss Chinn—I met Miss Gidday's fiance to-day.

Miss Ascum—Indeed! Who is he?

Miss Chinn—Why, you told me you knew her fiance very well.

Miss Ascum—Oh, but that was nearly a month ago.

A SONG FROM THE PERSIAN.

Ah! sad are they who know not love,
But, far from passion's tears and smiles,
Drift down a moonless sea, beyond
The silvery coasts of fairy isles.

And sadder they whose longing lips
Kiss empty air and never touch
The dear warm mouth of those they love—
Waiting, wasting, suffering much.

But clear as amber, fine as musk,
Is life to those who, pilgrim-wise,
Move hand-in-hand from dawn to dusk,
Each morning nearer Paradise.

Oh, not for them shall angels pray!
They stand in everlasting light.
They walk in Allah's smile by day,
And slumber in His heart by night.

QUEER COINCIDENCES.

Andrew Lang Tells Real Curious One About a Clock and a Letter.

Here is a real curious coincidence, reported to me by a trustworthy friend. My friend paid a visit, with a companion, also known to me, to a lady. On the chimneypiece of the drawing-room was a black marble clock, not going, and near it a small round clock in working order. Suddenly a child of the lady of the house, standing on the hearth rug, said, "Mother, the big clock" (the black marble clock) "is ticking." "Impossible!" said his mother. "It has not ticked for many a month. I broke the pendulum myself." Every one present then examined the marble clock, which was ticking away steadily, and the coincidence was that it had taken up the time correctly and was in accord with the small clock beside it. No one had touched the black marble clock.

Of this coincidence I can only offer the explanation which must already have occurred to every reader. Somebody in the house must have got the clock mender to mend the marble clock without informing the lady of the house. The clock must have been set to the right time, and neither the lady nor her visitors happened to notice its ticking till it was observed by the child on the hearth rug. If this view be disproved, then there was a genuine miracle—a clock going, or ticking at all events, with a broken pendulum. Such is the weakness of human testimony that my friend does not tell me whether the big clock's hands were moving or whether it only ticked.

I know nothing analogous to a clock that ticked without going except a queer story of a letter, which is vouched for by the signatures of the persons who wrote the narrative and who stuck to it when cross-examined orally. They were a brother and sister, living together. One evening a letter came to their house directed to their care, but addressed to a third person, who did not live with them. The sister placed the letter on the chimneypiece, meaning to put on the proper address. Presently the letter began to tick like a watch and kept on ticking. The brother came in and heard the ticking. They examined the letter, could find no explanation and next morning carried the strange epistle to the person for whom it was meant. The letter proved to be extremely important, though the envelope was not marked "Immediate," like envelopes containing advertisements. Apparently the letter, like all matter, according to Haeckel, was not destitute of consciousness and knew that it was in a hurry. Of course, the black marble clock may on those principles have had not only consciousness, but conscience, and said to itself: "Let me fulfill the purpose of my being. Go I cannot without a pendulum, but tick I can and will." None the less the normal explanation seems the better.—Andrew Lang in Illustrated London News.

A Lost Lesson.

The proprietor of an engineering works in Scotland, according to The Dundee Advertiser, was watching the leisurely efforts of an apprentice who was swinging his hammer in a gentle way.

"Look here, laddie," he said, going up to the youth and taking the hammer from him, "when I see a man that takes his hammer by the end of the shaft and strikes a proper blow like that I give that a man 32 shillings a week, but a man that takes it in the middle like this only gets 25 shillings a week and the sack whenever we get slack. See?"

Hoping he had sufficiently well driven home his point, he surveyed the lad more in sorrow than in anger, but the latter requested an extension of the lesson.

"Please, sir," he said, " where do I hold it for four shillings a week?"

Two Mistakes.

An Irish merchant who had more money in his pocket than his appearance denoted took a seat in a first-class carriage. A dandy fellow-passenger was much annoyed at Pat's presence and, missing his handkerchief, taxed him with having picked his pocket. After recovering his handkerchief, which he had put in his hat, he made a lame apology, but Pat stopped him with this remark:

"Make yourself easy, darlint. Don't bother about the matter. You took me for a thafe. I took you for a gentleman. We were both of us mistaken, that's all, me honey."

Have the Billiard Habit.

Natives of New Zealand are victims of the billiard habit. The inspector of native schools in New Zealand attributes the lax attendance of the young Maories to the fact that their parents "spend their whole time playing cards or billiards." He alleges that the children are often kept up all night billiard-marking and are of course utterly unfit for school work next day. He says he encounters billiards everywhere on his travels. The game is even played on the roadside.

He Had Not Lost It.

A London bus driver had shouted, "'Igh Oborn!" says a writer in Pearson's Weekly, till the passenger on the seat behind him could no longer resist the temptation to make a joke.

"Excuse me," said the passenger, "but haven't you dropped something?"

"I see wot you're driving at," returned the driver keenly, "but never mind, I shall pick it up when we get to Hoxford street."

The Web of Venice.

In Venice one is as if caught in an immense network, or spider's web, which, as one walks in its midst, seems to tighten the closer about one. The streets narrow overhead, push outward with beams and stone balconies and many turning angles; seem to loosen their hold for a moment where a bridge crosses a narrow canal between high walls and over dark water, and then tighten again in close lanes where the smells of the shops meet and fume about one's face. The lanes are busy with men in rough clothes and with women in shawls, bareheaded and with great soft bushes of hair, who come and go quietly, slipping past one another in these narrow spaces, where there is hardly room to pass, as the gondolas slip past one another in the narrow canals. The road is difficult to find, for a single wrong turning may lead one to the other end of Venice. This movement, the tangles of the way, the continual arresting of one's attention by some window, doorway or balcony put a strain upon one's eyes and begin after a time to tire and stupefy the brain. There is no more bewildering city, and as night comes on the bewilderment grows almost disquieting. —Arthur Symons in Scribner's.

Happiest People In Europe.

If it be in harmony with one's surroundings to work and to thrive a little and to rear children, to have liberty and security and be tolerant and self respecting constitute any measure of happiness, then the Swiss are by all odds the happiest people in Europe. Such, I think, is the judgment of all observers that have been much among them. You can test it by a simple reference. From every other nation in Europe there is emigration; from Switzerland little or none. At all times about 300,000 Swiss are in foreign countries learning languages or methods of combining travel with work, but they come home, always they come home. The typical Swiss never thinks of making permanent residence outside of Switzerland, or, if once thinking so, he changes his mind when he makes trial thereof.

A Few First Aid Hints.

The following first aid advice was given at a meeting of railway surgeons:

"Don't put your finger on an open wound; don't put a quid of tobacco on a wound, no matter how small it may be; don't use cobwebs or hornet's nest to stop bleeding; don't dose the patient with whisky, brandy, rum or gin; don't bind or cover a wound with a handkerchief or rag (if you cannot get a first aid packet use clean old muslin that has been dipped in boiling water for a few minutes); don't sit a patient up when he is very pale or weak; don't wash a wound, and don't remove blood clots."

These hints are meant for public instruction for those of the laity who may have occasion to extend first aid in case of accidents.

Professional Fees.

It is sometimes claimed that the surgeon or the physician is the only man who is paid for his mistakes, but that is clearly untrue. Lawyers receive fees for the cases that they lose, and other men are not "docked" whenever they fall short of complete success. The truth is that the idea of human compensation is based upon intelligent, honest effort and reputed skill. If all fees and salaries were contingent upon absolute perfection in the task undertaken they would have to be increased many times over, since absolute perfection or complete success is very rare in any line of activity.

Decapitating Words.

A writer in the London Chronicle says: "Our language's trick of decapitating words, as in 'bus,' 'phone' and wig,' is not at all a modern failing. Take the common words 'spend' and 'sport.' Our very early ancestors had the verb 'spendan,' and yet 'spend' is really a disguising abbreviation of the Latin 'dis-pendere,' to pay out. 'Sport' is another very old English word, yet it is really 'disport'—'dis-port,' to carry apart, which acquired the metaphorical sense of pleasure or amusement precisely as 'divert' and 'transport.'"

The Coughing Habit.

An irritating cough is not always due to having a cold. It is very often a habit acquired during the period of having one and afterward is more of a nervous, reflex action. When you find you are getting into the habit of continually coughing—a dry, short cough—try to check the inclination, and more often than not the local irritation in your throat will disappear and the cough with it.

His Finish Plain.

"Glad to meet you," said the polite cannibal chief to the new missionary. "I shall expect to see more of you tomorrow. We dine at high noon."

"Er—thanks, awfully. I shall be delighted"—

"Not at all. The pleasure will be all mine, I assure you."

Easy.

First Maid—Have you got an easy place to work? Second Ditto—I should say! It's no trouble to keep the house in order at all. I'm working for a bride and groom, and they never use anything but the cozy corner.

Delinquent.

"Does Dodsy put up with you when he is here?" asked the traveling man of the hotel clerk.

"No. He used to stop with us, but he never put up a cent."

An Invitation.

Dick—You are such a funny girl. I never did know how to take you. Kitty (coyly)—You never tried.

LEGENDS OF OLD MINES.

The Value of the Records of Past Production.

American mining engineers are familiar with speculative schemes, based upon the real or supposed former productiveness of the mines upon which they are started. To say nothing of such enterprises as that of Richard Burton, who thought he had rediscovered in Egypt the sources of Solomon's treasure (itself somewhat mythical), there are more recent instances in abundance. The books of Humboldt and Ward on Mexico gave rise in the first half of the nineteenth century to an immense and disastrous investment of English capital in the unwatering of old Mexican gold and silver mines on the strength of reports from "government archives," showing their immense production and sundry legends, accounting for their temporary abandonment. In the prospectuses of such schemes, references to pestilence, war, quarrels among owners, etc., as the causes of the interruption of an almost incredibly profitable business are well known features.

No doubt all ancient evidence, whether historical or legendary, has its value for mining enterprises, but it is well to bear in mind that Mexican miners did not usually leave rich ore when they stopped working a mine, and there is another proposition, applicable to many mines outside of Mexico, yet too often overlooked—namely, the record of past production is a measure not of what is left, but of what is not left, in the ore deposit of a mine.—Engineering and Mining News.

GOOD CHEER AT MEALS.

The Value of Laughter as an Aid to Digestion.

Nothing else will take the place of good cheer and laughter at meals or any other time in the home. There is a vital connection between amiability and digestion—between good cheer and assimilation. Laughter is the best friend the liver has and depression or melancholia its worst enemy. Numerous experiments have shown that mirth and cheerfulness stimulate the secretion of the gastric juices and are powerful aids to digestion. Yet, knowing this, many of us sit as gloomy and absorbed at the table as at a funeral. In many homes scarcely a word is spoken at meals outside of requests for an article of food.

The meal hour ought to mean something besides supplying a mere animal function. The bell which calls the family to the table ought to be the signal for a good time generally, when all cares should be thrown off and everybody appear at his best. It ought to signalize the time for mirth and laughter. It ought to be looked forward to by the members of the family as the recess or nooning is looked forward to by pupils in school as a letup from the strenuous life.—Orison Swett Marden in Success Magazine.

Mushrooms.

An enthusiast on the subject of mushrooms says there is no more reason to mistake a good mushroom for a poisonous toadstool than to confound nightshade with huckleberries. The distinctions are clear and simple and easily learned. Real mushrooms are known by their beautiful pink gills, not reaching the stem, which stem carries a well marked white woolly ring; by the very fleshy down covered top, the delicious and enticing fragrance, the firm, white flesh, sometimes inclined to pink when cut or broken. One or two rules in regard to gathering mushrooms, we are told, will remove all the peril from the pursuit of them. Examine carefully every specimen you gather. If at all doubtful, throw it away. Show it to somebody that knows. Never cook mushrooms unless you know they are gathered by somebody that knows.

Bow Legged Men.

Do not revile the bow legged man, for he plays an important part in the world. It is estimated that 40 per cent of mankind are bow legged, so numerically this class is entitled to great respect. Bow legs invariably accompany a robust physique. We find them one of the conspicuous features of athletes. Comedians are almost always bow legged. Of the bow legged geniuses to which humanity points with pride the most illustrious examples are Caesar, Horace, Napoleon, Wellington, Schopenhauer and Cavour, the celebrated Italian statesman.—London Answers.

The Bright Side.

Words of cheer are words of help; words of gloom are words of harm. There is a bright side and a dark side to every phase of life and to every hour of time. If we speak of the bright side, we bring the brightness into prominence; if we speak of the dark side, we deepen its shadows. It is in our power to help or to hinder by a word any and every person with whom we come in contact.

In the Hall of Fame.

"His father is in the hall of fame."

"Why, I didn't know the old gentleman was dead."

"Have to be dead to be in there?"

"Sure."

"Well, he is only in there dusting the busts."

The Limit.

The height of superfluity was voiced the other day by a commuter who said that he regarded a certain man, then under discussion, as the fourth ball to a pawnbroker's sign.

Pursue not a victory too far. He hath conquered well that has made his enemy fly. Thou mayest beat him to a desperate resistance, which may ruin thee.

THE PRINCE IN INDIA.

In a Ceremonial Sense the Tour Has Been Attended With Complete Success — Display of Loyalty.

The closing scenes of the Prince and Princess of Wales' visit to India have been fully in keeping with the spirit which has made their progress remarkable even among royal journeys. In the ceremonial sense the tour has been attended with complete success. With the exception of the tiger-hunt in Nepal the long and exacting program has been carried out without a single hitch. The presence of the Prince and Princess has evoked a display of enthusiastic and affectionate loyalty from all classes of the King-Emperor's subjects. That outburst of feeling has been due in no small degree to the tact and sympathy characteristic indeed of all members of the royal family, and not least of our furture King and Queen. Practically every important centre of the Indian Empire has been visited. The Prince's drive up the Khyber Pass without any guard except an escort of Afridis will remain an especially memorable incident, and the confidence which he thereby reposed in the chivalry of the hill-tribes is among the most valuable political results of the tour. But if in its ceremonial aspect the royal progress has been thus singularly felicitous, other consequences to which it is bound to give rise are almost more significant. People in England are apt to overlook the fact that in the last resort the dominant factor in our Indian administration is the personal relation between the governors and the governed. In this country the vicissitudes of political life give color to the impression that the fortunes of our great dependency are determined, at least to a large extent, by the Minister who by the suffrages of his fellow countrymen finds himself temporarily in charge of the Indian Office. In a great measure this is of course true, but it is nevertheless a consideration which is seldom or never present to the minds of the majority of our fellow-subjects in India. In their eyes the raison d'etre of the Government, to which they stand in a relation of almost questioning obedience, is the rule of the Emperor of India. Personal sovereignty is, in short, the source of the only power which they recognize or which indeed they are able to understand. In this sense the person of the King-Emperor acts as a connecting link between India and this country, without which our dominion would at once cease to be intelligible. The loyalty and affection with which this personal rule is associated in the eyes of the great masses of Hindoos is due in the first instance to the veneration with which they regarded the late Queen, the first Empress of India. Although Queen Victoria was never able to visit her dominions in Asia, the sympathy which she never failed to display in the fortunes of her subjects in that continent, her efforts to learn their language, and her constant reliance on her Indian attendants secured for her a regard indistinguishable from the closest personal ties. To the millions who dwell in India the death of the Queen was a loss which they could only compare to the loss of a mother. The affection with which Queen Victoria was regarded by her Indian subjects has been extended without diminution to King Edward. The memory of his visit, as Prince of Wales, is still green in the memories of a people singularly alive to the qualities of sympathy and justice. It is well, therefore, that the traditions of English sovereignty in India should have been worthily continued at the hands of the Prince of Wales. The experience he has gained can hardly fail to be of the utmost value when he in turn is called upon to wield the sceptre over the millions who will hail him as their Emperor. The outcome of his journey was well expressed in the concluding words of his speech at Karachi in which he referred to the figures of Peace and Justice at the base of Queen Victoria's statue. "You do well," said the Prince, "to connect them with the memory of Queen Victoria, for she greatly desired that her Indian subjects should ever enjoy these blessings." —London Morning Post.

Queen Is Taller Than King.

There is hardly a King in Christendom to-day whose wife does not overtop him by a head.

King Edward is quite six inches shorter than Queen Alexandra.

The Czar is overtopped a full head by the Czarina.

Kaiser Wilhelm is of the medium height, but the German Empress is tall, and that is why the proud Kaiser will never consent to be photographed beside his wife, unless she sits while he stands.

The King of Italy, short and squat, hardly comes up to the shoulders of the tall, athletic Queen Helena.

The King of Portugal, though fatter, is less tall than his Queen.

Even the Prince of Wales is shorter a good four inches than the Princess.

The young King of Spain is several inches shorter than his new bride.

The Queen of Denmark towers above her royal spouse.

In Bonny Scotland.

Pressing business engagements made it highly important that a tourist in Scotland should catch the 6 o'clock train for the south on Monday morning. Boots was interviewed on Sunday night, a hansel administered, perhaps incautiously, and a solemn promise received of an early call. Next morning the tourist awoke of his own accord at half-past seven and aroused the boots, who listened to the torrent of anger that was poured upon him in mild surprise. "Cot bless me, sir, you was not so bad at all! The man in the next room to you was to catch the 5 o'clock boat, and he's no wakened yet."

Australia's Empty Spaces.

Richard Arthur, M. P., president of the Immigration League of Australia, has been pointing out some startling facts in reference to the lack of population in the Commonwealth. In the vast northern territory there are only 820 whites, or one inhabitant to every 700 square miles. The immense empty spaces, he says, cry out for population. The world has grown so small that the only solid title to any part of its surface is effective occupation. Modern methods of transit have brought the vast, unoccupied northern territory of Australia within easy reach of the teeming Asiatic people.

WANT TO USE NETS.

FISHERMEN IN PRINCE EDWARD COUNTY PETITION THE GOVERNMENT.

Toronto, July 4. — The question of fishing with nets in the Bay of Quinte is a burning one in Prince Edward county. During the session a deputation of sportsmen waited upon the Government and requested them to prohibit their use on the ground that the game fish for which the region has so long been famous were disappearing fast. The fishermen immediately began to get busy and a petition with thousands of names upon it was presented to the Government yesterday afternoon by a deputation consisting of Messrs. Belknap, Macdonald, and Fox, representing the fishermen of the county. The deputation was introduced by Mr R. A. Norman, the defeated Conservative candidate. The petition sets forth that many of the fishermen have made their living for generations in the business, and that it would be a hardship to prohibit them from making a living. About 50 families would be affected by the prohibition. The Government heard the petition but took no action so far.

Belleville Musician Met With an Accident.

News has reached the city that Mr. Frank W. Robinson, the clever local musician, who for several seasons has been away travelling with the Kilties Band, lately met with an accident which proved somewhat serious in its consequences. It seems that about three weeks ago, in Youngstown, Ohio, Frank was playing baseball with some other members of the band, and hurt his left arm. The matter was not regarded as very serious, but the injury grew no better, and finally, in Pittsburg, four doctors examined the injured arm and pronounced it to be broken. Since then Frank has been two weeks in hospital, and lately wrote to his parents that he expected soon to be convalescent. He is now travelling with the Band.

THE ENTRANCE EXAMINATIONS.

PEOPLE IN THIS CITY WHO CRITICIZED THE PAPERS, WERE NOT ALONE IN THEIR FAULT-FINDING.

The papers set for the candidates at the recent entrance examinations this year came in for a good deal of criticism at the hands of many parents and practical people in this city. The utility of the different papers did not appeal to them very strongly. And in the papers of many other places we find similar criticism. The following editorial comment from the Toronto Telegram will probably find a responsive echo in many quarters of this city:

"The geography paper set for the candidates at the entrance examination this year was a smart effort full of man-traps, pitfalls and spring-guns.

"The paper was not a fair test of the eleven, twelve, thirteen or fourteen year old child's knowledge of geography as taught in the Public schools.

"It was a paper on which an urchin who ran away from home in the old country, tramped through a few English cities and finally reached this country as a stowaway could easily get pass marks even if he never saw the inside of a Public school.

"The paper abounded in semi-economic questions that could be answered from the fulness of a tramp printer's experience more readily than from the abundance of a child's knowledge.

"Ontario's Educational Department is not growing in common sense when it confuses the troubled minds of nervous children with such "a bag of tricks" as its geography paper.

"The objection is not that the paper was hard, although it was hard enough. The objection is that the paper was full of traps and tricks. The child who travelled a good deal could make pass marks on the paper and might know nothing about geography at all, except in so far as geography is taught by travel. The child who had gone to school faithfully and studied geography earnestly might fail or barely scrape through on the paper, because it had been denied the superior educational advantages enjoyed by the tramp printer or the stowaway."

OTTAWA REVIVAL.

GREAT SUCCESS ATTENDED THE EFFORTS OF MESSRS. TORREY AND ALEXANDER.

Ottawa, July 4. — The three weeks' revival which Messrs. Torrey and Alexander have conducted in this city concluded on Saturday. It is estimated that 1500 conversions are the result, and that Christians have been so greatly stirred that there will be considerable accession to the church not indicated in the above figures. All the current expenses, $1700, were met by the offertories, and there will be $300 surplus to divide among the hospitals. In addition, thank offerings were taken for the evangelists and their assistants. It was explained by the chairman of the local committee that they had come without any stipulation as to pay, and would accept whatever the people gave. Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander received each $500, and a further sum of $400 was divided among his workers.

Dr. Torrey, when asked if he was satisfied with the results of his work in Ottawa, replied; "I am more than satisfied. I am delighted. Why, this is one of the best missions we ever had think of fifteen hundred professed conversions in three weeks, among whom are some of the finest young men in Ottawa, and also some who were the most wicked people in this city. The ministers who opposed us at the first, or were indifferent, are among our most active sympathizers now," and with a smile of satisfaction, he added: 'Oh, the Canadians are a great people to work with.'

Already a movement has been started by the Ottawa choir to charter a special train, and visit Montreal when Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander go there to conduct a mission, beginning on April 7 next.

Garden Party on the Convent Grounds.

A very successful garden party, under the auspices of the Sodality of the Children of Mary of St. Michael's Church, was held on the Convent lawn last evening. There was a good attendance, and a pleasant time was spent by all. The Fifteenth Regimental band was present, and furnished excellent music.

A Dangerous Spot.

At the northeast corner of Front and Bridge streets the grating over the street gully has been broken for some time. Yesterday afternoon a little girl stepped upon the grating and not noticing the break, her leg went through. She fortunately escaped with a slight abrasion of the skin. The grating should certainly be repaired.

Berries Were High.

The market to-day was fairly well attended and prices remain about the same. Strawberries sold at two boxes for 25 cents.

The Mad Mullah of Free Trade.

(Toronto Telegram.)

"Trade laughs at tariffs," says the Globe.

"Common sense laughs at the Globe," says experience.

'Tis thus the Globe mumbles incantations to its mud-headed, clay-footed Moloch of free trade;—

> "Even if we exported nothing to the United States, that importation ($172,738,571 from the United States) would not necessarily be other than advantageous to us."

The economic creed that the Globe preaches but dare not practice, taxes human credulity more severely than human faith is taxed by the most orthodox religious creed in Christendom.

How does Canada buy $2.50 worth of imports from the United States with $1 of exports to the United States?

Common sense assumes that Uncle Sam collects the difference in money.

But the Globe knows better. Facts that Canadians see with their eyes, the truths that they feel in their pockets are not to be overcome by the vain repetition of the Globe's shibboleth that EXPORTS PAY FOR IMPORTS.

Wanted a Wife.

(Peterboro Review.)

Yesterday an elderly young lady called at the Review office and handed in the following notice which was printed on a hand bill;

NOTICE.

The subscriber wishes to engage the services of a lady of experience as housekeeper, with a view to matrimony if the parties can agree.

The subscriber is a widower with six children. He is a mechanic in good circumstances, has a cheerful disposition, and is religiously inclined.

A spinster preferred; if a widow, must be without children.

None but Protestant need apply. References given if required.

Apply by letter to M.G.S., care of Mr W. Croft, hotelkeeper, Peterboro.

Peterboro, 8th August, 1871.
(Review Steam Print.)

Our fair friend wishes to know if M. G. S. has yet secured a wife or whether the position is still open. The above notice was posted up all around the country, and the one brought into the Review office had been carefully preserved by one of the oldest residents. It was found on Dominion Day again while the young lady referred to was rummaging through the old trunks in the garret. If M. G. S. is still looking for a spinster or a widow without children, he might apply at this office, and it is just possible a match might be made. If one does not suit there are two or three more to choose from.

PENSION VESTED RIGHT

Sir Adolphe Caron Protests Against Repeal of 1905 Act.

For Himself and Other Privy Councillors He Claims It Would Be a Breach of Faith—Senate Is Being Lobbied to Defeat Measure, and It Is Believed Movement Has the Secret Support of the Government.

Montreal, July 5.—There was a despatch in The Star last night from Ottawa, covering three columns, giving the text of a protest addressed to the Governor-in-council at Ottawa from Sir Adolphe Caron in his own behalf, and of his co-pensioners, against the repeal of the pension to privy councillors. Hon. Mr. Tarte of La Patrie has been at Ottawa all week lobbying in the same direction.

They claim that they have a vested right, and that it would be a breach of faith for Parliament to repeal a pension once given.

A gentleman who came here last night from the capital says that there is a decided effort being made to induce the Senate to throw out the bill repealing the pensions, and that this movement may even have the secret support of the Government, notwithstanding that they and their supporters in the Commons will carry the act of repeal in the popular chamber with a rush.

The Senate is being lobbied now to do this.

FOURTEEN PASS MILLIONS.

Other 200 Representatives of the People Supposed to Be Satisfied—To Deplete Welland Canal.

Ottawa, July 5.—When the orders of the day were called in the House of Commons yesterday Mr. Fisher answered a question put by Mr. Lake Tuesday regarding H. J. Moberley, said to be a census enumerator for a certain district in Saskatchewan, who was alleged to be a man who had been fined $100 for election irregularities. Mr. Fisher said there was no such person as Moberley in that district. The work was being done by two men, Alex. Macbeth and James Flett.

Supply Items Passed.

The House went into Committee of Supply, taking up harbors and rivers items in the Public Works Department. Items amounting to $73,750 for Prince Edward Island, $314,600 for New Brunswick, $22,500 for the Maritime Provinces generally, were passed, with little discussion.

An item of $750 to complete the Disraeli Wharf revived this familiar scandal. The so-called "wharf" is nothing more or less than a municipal bridge. The town is midway between Lake Aylmer and Black Creek which are connected by a long, marshy depression, used as a cow pasture, and sometimes as a meadow in summer, but over-flooded in the spring. There was an amusing colloquy between Mr. Morin (Dorchester) and Mr. Tobin (Richmond and Wolfe).

W. F. Maclean (South York) suggested that it would be economic to present this bridge by deed of gift to the municipality. As it was, the Government would be called upon to keep the so-called "wharf" in repair. He would not be at all surprised to see a wharfinger appointed.

The committee passed bills respecting the Manitoba & Keewatin Railway Co. and incorporating the Temagami, Cobalt & Temiskaming Railway Co.

Would Deplete Welland Canal.

During the hour for private bills, a bill, which had passed the Senate, and had been reported by the private bills committee, and sought to incorporate the Grand River and Western Power Co. was discussed.

Its real purpose and effect was pointed out by W. F. Maclean (South York). The Grand River was to be the ostensible source of supply, but the scheme was to divert the water from Lake Erie. One direct result would be to deplete the Welland Canal.

Mr. Hyman stated the Government would oppose the bill. The International Waterways Commission had recommended their respective Governments to grant no further franchises for water powers, and there has been an order in council adopting this policy. Indirectly, this scheme would affect the waters of Lake Erie and might deplete a feeder of the Welland Canal.

R. L. Borden asked to see the order in council. There were some curious rumors afloat respecting the opposition from some members of the Government. It was said that they were interested in a rival company.

Mr. Hyman did not produce the order in council, and Sir Wilfrid Laurier, upon being appealed to, could not recall the order.

Mr. Emmerson said he cared nothing about the order in council, but he opposed the bill as threatening navigation on the Welland Canal. The public works of the Government in that part of the country were imperilled.

The bill was still being discussed when the hour for private bills expired.

Fourteen Pass Millions.

Among other matters discussed in supply last night were the dredging of Toronto harbor, by Claude Macdonell, the collapse of the wharf at Sorel by Mr. Kemp, and the resignation of Mr. Taylor, the supervising architect of the Laurier tower, by R. L. Borden.

Substantially all the estimates presented by Mr. Hyman, involving as they did, many millions of dollars, were passed after 11 p. m., by about 14 members, the remaining 200 representatives of the people are supposed to be entirely satisfied.

G. T. P. Bill Passed.

Ottawa, July 5.—In the Senate railway committee yesterday the Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines Co.'s charter was passed without amendment.

B. C. Railway Bill Beaten.

Ottawa, July 5.—The bill to incorporate the Pacific & Eastern Railway Co. from Victoria, B. C., to Edmonton, was defeated by 27 to 42. The incorporators were Sir Henry Pellatt, B. F. Pearson, Halifax; Hugh Blain, Toronto; E. T. [illegible]se, J. F. Bethune, Ottawa.

Commons Rules Revised.

Ottawa, July 5.—The special committee appointed to consider the rules of the House of Commons reported yesterday. It was decided that all speeches must be relevant to the subject under discussion. Then as to the argument of the House, before a member can move the adjournment he will have to notify the Speaker beforehand, and after he has done this, when he rises on the orders of the day to do so twenty members must rise in support of him or he cannot proceed. Every Wednesday the House will meet at 11 o'clock and adjourn at 6 p.m.

MISS BUTTON DROWNED

Body of Young Woman Identified by Her Father.

Had Been Teaching School at Garden Lake, Algoma, and Was Going Home For the Holidays—Her Parents Suppose, That, Having Traveled All Night, She Sat Down on Wharf, Fell Asleep and Into Toronto Bay.

Toronto, July 5.—Through the description published yesterday of the body of the young woman found floating in the bay on Tuesday evening, Charles Button, clerk of the Township of Culross, hastened to Toronto, and yesterday afternoon identified the body as that of his daughter, Miss Mae Button.

Miss Button had been teaching school at Garden Lake, Algoma. She had written to her parents in Teeswater that she would reach Toronto at 6.35 on Saturday morning, making connection with her home-bound train at 8.35, and arriving at Teeswater the same day. Mr. Button says members of the family met the two trains, and every train thereafter until yesterday morning. On that date Mr. Button drove to Teeswater as usual, and upon his arrival his attention was drawn to the story of the discovery of the body, and he decided to come to Toronto, and upon his arrival positively identified the body as his daughter Mae.

Coroner Orr issued a warrant for an inquest to be held on Friday morning, but it is understood the warrant will be withdrawn, and the father will take the body home to-day.

Miss Button was 27 years of age, and was the eldest of five children.

As far as the parents know, she was in good health, and with no pressure on her mind. They are totally unable to account for the accident. It is supposed that having traveled all night, and presumably being drowsy, sat down on a pile of boards, lapsed into sleep and fell over and into the bay.

HIS BACK BROKEN.

Charles Marlow of Beachville Fell From the Roof of a House.

Ingersoll, July 5.—An accident which may have a fatal termination happened to Charles Marlow, a Beachville carpenter, while at work on the roof of a new house on the farm of E. Dodge, West Oxford, Tuesday afternoon. He fell a distance of 22 feet and as he is paralyzed from the waist down, it is thought his back is broken. Marlow is a married man, 57 years of age.

Patrick McKelvey Killed.

Toronto, July 5.—Mangled almost beyond recognition the body of Patrick McKelvey, an employe of the Toronto Bolt & Forge Co., Swansea, was found near the Sunnyside crossing about 5 o'clock Tuesday evening. The dead man was not identified until yesterday morning, when an employe at the bolt works saw the body.

CAVE-IN ON C. N. R.

One Man Gets Broken Leg and Another Is Covered by Sand.

Port Arthur, July 5.—A cave-in occurred at the Rossmere pit on the C. N. R. yesterday afternoon. Arthur Black, a laborer, was engaged in breaking down the bank when the whole mass suddenly gave away, completely burying him.

In his hurry to rescue the buried man, the man in charge of the steam shovel swung the dipper around, not noticing Saunders, his assistant, who was standing near the dipper. The shovel struck Saunders, breaking his leg.

Black was uncovered within a few minutes. Both men were brought to the hospital, where it was found that Black had suffered no serious injury, and will be around in a day or two.

Was Wound Around Shafting.

Windsor, July 5.—While G. W. Langdon, in the employ of Caldwell & Co., was assisting in unloading a cargo of sand, his coat caught in the shafting of the machinery, and he was wound around it. He suffered a fracture of one leg and was unconscious when picked up. He had a very narrow escape from death.

Three of the men who were supposed to have lost their lives in the fire have been found. Only one, a bell ringer of the church, named Beule, perished. He had lived for 30 years in the tower.

Skull Fractured.

Guelph, July 5.—Two Italians employed on the Guelph & Goderich Railway, quarrelled Tuesday, and one hit the other over the head with a spade, fracturing the skull and inflicting a severe scalp wound. The injured man is in the hospital in a critical condition. The assailant escaped.

NOW UP FOR BIGAMY.

Young Woman Acquitted of Man-Killing Arrested Again.

Montreal, July 6.—Miss Tracy, nee Eva Beard, who was acquitted Wednesday evening at Sweetsburg by the coroner's jury of the charge of murdering Howard, is once more under arrest. At the inquest Eva Beard, the admitted slayer of Howard, gave her age as 26. She was alone in her home with her two children when Howard came in, she said, and he asked where her husband was. She told him Ed. was in the glen washing the wagon. Howard looked through the window and said "Ed. is coming." She went to the window to look out, when Howard grabbed her.

When Howard rushed at her with open arms, she grabbed the first thing to hand, which was the gun. She told him that unless he got out she would tell Ed., and when he came towards her again she leveled the gun and fired. When he fell she ran to Mrs. Gleason's.

She declared she had married Ed. Tracy at Richmond, Vt., five years ago, but knew that he had another wife living. She has a marriage certificate. She knew the deceased, and declared that he had previously tried to assault Nancy Whitehead, Emma Beard and Floyd Tood.

Local Option Is Quashed.

But Owen Sound Will Stay Dry Pending An Appeal.

No Licenses Will Issue Until Appeal Is Disposed Of—Town Clerk Exceeded His Authority In Proclamation and 316 Votes Against Measure Which Should Have Been Counted Were Thrown Out—Many Irregularities.

Toronto, July 6.—Judgment was yesterday morning given by Mr. Justice Mabee quashing the local option bylaw in Owen Sound. A vote was taken on the question and resulted in a poll of 1,238 for and 762 against local option. The result was disputed by a ratepayer, who moved to have the bylaw quashed.

Mr. Wallace Nesbitt, K.C., appearing on behalf of W. H. Sinclair, a contractor of Owen Sound, charged that women had lobbied and been influential in securing the vote. He also specified other irregularities.

His Lordship in giving judgment finds that the courts do not interfere with the preponderating will of the electors except for the clearest and plainest of reasons.

No Authority For This Notice.

It was argued that the by-law was not duly approved, because the ratepayers in the different wards were not allowed to vote where their names appeared on the lists. The decision quotes in full the printed proclamation issued by the Town Clerk to the effect that voters must poll in the subdivisions in which they resided and there only, and calling attention to the statutory penalty for voting more than once.

"There is no authority in the act for giving a notice of this sort,' says his Lordship, "and the Town Clerk was a friend of the by-law."

The act is quoted to show the ratepayers are entitled to vote in each ward where they are qualified, and, although the Town Clerk claimed that wards had been abolished in Owen Sound by by-law in 1898, the by-law did not have this effect.

316 Good Votes Thrown Out.

As ratepayers were entitled to vote in each ward where they qualified, Mr. Justice Mabee finds that 316 votes against the measure were thrown out which should have been counted, and it was shown that in addition 100 people voted who had no right to. These favored the by-law, and this reduces the majority to 60 votes. It was contended that there was nothing to show that the 573 votes to which 257 persons in one ward were entitled to in all wards were cast, and if so this effectually sets aside the by-law; on the other hand, if 257 were assumed to have voted, the majority of 476 is reduced to 160, and the 100 illegal votes reduces it to 60.

"It appears that some at least who had no votes not only voted, but were very energetic supporting the law. Practically a threat of prosecution was held over the heads of the voters," says the judgment.

"The very greatest confusion was likely to arise from the similarity in size and color in the local option and the Keenan by-law, in his Lordship's opinion, and error actually did occur, a clergyman and a banker voting in mistake.

"The applicant complains of many irregularities connected with the vote, and certainly very many existed.

Omitted Certain Duties.

"The clerk, Charles Gordon, entirely omitted to comply with the provisions of secs. 152 and 348, but furnished each deputy with a large printed volume, entitled 'voters' lists of the town of Owen Sound,' declaring it to be the revised list.

"Many irregularities were attributed to the carelessness of deputy returning officers.

"In one case James Buchanan, deputy returning officer in No. 10, and Joseph Meeburn, poll clerk. The deputy certified that all proper entries had been made in the poll book. There were 267 votes recorded at the poll, yet the poll book does not show that a single voter voted on either of the by-laws.

"Very many glaring omissions and irregularities," observes his Lordship, "appear in connection with proceedings upon the vote, leading to the irresistible conclusion that the election officials were selected without regard to fitness. I think the by-law must be quashed, with costs to be paid by the town corporation to the applicant."

There Will Be An Appeal.

Mayor Joyce, Owen Sound, wired the license department yesterday that the local option by-law had been quashed and requested that no licenses be issued in the town pending the result of an appeal against the decision. The department telegraphed the chairman of the commissioners of North Grey saying that no licenses are to be issued until the appeal is disposed of.

Fruit Crop Report.

The Department of Agriculture sends out the following to the press:

Apples.—As was to be expected the reports for the month of June on apples are not quite so favorable. There are many reports of serious dropping, and the general tone of the reports would place the crop at not more than medium. In forming an estimate of the crop the classification of apples into early, fall and winter should be kept in mind inasmuch as the three classes may have an entirely different value. In District 1 early apples are reported almost a full crop, the fall and winter apples a medium crop, Baldwins and Spies light. If, however, the season should prove a warm one the whole of the apples in District 1 will be classed by apple buyers as early chipping stock In District 2 early apples are almost a full crop, the fall apples less and the winter apples only a medium crop. In District 3, 21 per cent. of the correspondents reported the crop light, 53 per cent. medium and 27 per cent. a full crop. Reports from Annapolis and Cornwallis Valleys, District 6, indicate a crop above medium but not quite a full crop. The tent caterpillar, the bud moth and canker worm have all been particularly severe as well as several minor pests in different parts of the valleys, and it is not improbable that the codling moth will appear later. Wind storms and other contingencies will probably reduce the crop of winter apples to medium or less Summer and fall apples will be slightly above a medium crop. Gravenstein has set very heavily, and, where they are sprayed thoroughly, will doubtless yield a large crop. Nova Scotia Kings and Russets have also set well. The Baldwins in Nova Scotia will be light. The British Columbia crop of apples will be about the same as last year.

Pears.—The prospects for pears have deteriorated during the month. In Districts 1 and 2, producing the largest commercial crop, Kieffers are reported a full crop. Bartletts, a medium crop with many failures, Clapp's Favorite, Anjou, Bosc and similar varieties, less than medium. This condition will also hold good for British Columbia.

Plums.—Plums are almost a failure, no large section reporting even a medium crop. The American varieties are producing best; the Japanese varieties are almost a total failure

Peaches.—Correspondents report 17 per cent of the crop of early peaches a failure, 17 per cent. light, 35 per cent medium, and 31 per cent. a full crop; late peaches, 12 per cent. of the crop is a failure, 21 per cent. light, 43 per cent. medium and 24 per cent a full crop. Early peaches will probably be sufficient to supply the demands of the market, but there will probably be some shortage of good canning peaches.

Cherries.—Cherries are everywhere being marketed a large crop, of good quality and freer from insects than usual.

Grapes. — Grapes are reported in good condition almost equal to last year, with some complaints of winter-killing, especially north of Lake Ontario.

Small Fruits.—The strawberry crop is maintaining the conditions reported last month. The principal markets report fair receipts of good quality. Prices are 10 per cent. higher than last year. The estimate for raspberries, black and red, is about the same as for strawberries.

Foreign Countries. — The Continental apple and pear crop is reported medium to good. The prospects for the English apple and plum and pear crop have fallen off seriously, and if this is confirmed by next month's reports market conditions will be materially changed for early and fall apples.

Ointment quickly cures Itching Piles, Eczema, and other skin troubles.

Leo Corrigan, 475 Ferguson Ave., N. Hamilton, had Eczema since childhood. He consulted specialists—lay weeks and weeks in hospitals—and despaired of ever getting better.

"I thought Mira would be like other remedies I had tried," he writes, "but, to my delight, a few hours after the first application I felt great relief. It has worked wonders for me."

Don't put it off—get a box of Mira Ointment at once and be relieved. Price 50c.—6 for $2.50. At druggists'—or from The Chemists' Co. of Canada, Limited, Hamilton—Toronto.

TIMELY TOPICS.

"A Mother" writes; "I notice by your paper that our three new policemen are large men. I hope they will be large enough to turn out the boys and young men who stand in doorways on Front St. and pass vulgar remarks as ladies go by."

It is sincerely to be hoped that they will, and if they do not, by the same token, they will not earn their salaries

It looks as though the Zwick's Island filtering scheme was sidetracked again, and if it goes past this year the by-law authorizing it will have to be re-submitted to the people—unless the Municipal Commission could be persuaded to pay us another visit. The blossom will soon be on the water, but then that's nothing, the bloom is on the rye all the year round."

• • •

Fruit crop report says plums will be scarce this year. Does that mean there won't be any more Arctic and North Atlantic Trading Company jobs?

How about that baseball match, Old Belleville Boys vs. Belleville Boys of to-day, which was being mooted for when the Toronto Old Boys come? Don't let it fall through. It would be a great attraction.

We might have a tug-of-war, too, the Belleville police force vs a team picked from the Fifteenth. It looks, at this distance, like ice cream and candy for the cops, but you never can tell.

Then again, His Worship the Mayor might don racing togs and show us how Billy Sherring won the Marathon race. That would be the finest stunt of all.

A story comes from Stirling, Ill., of a man who left church there twenty years ago owing $50,000 and asserting that he could not be a Christian under the conditions. He has just paid the debt and rejoined the church. And there wasn't a word said about "tainted money."

Two silly young men referred to a stout girl on the beach at Ocean Grove, N. J., as a baby elephant and she knocked them down and stamped on them with both feet. It makes one tremble to think what that young woman would do to young fellows who stand in doorways on Front St.

Considerable surprise is expressed that the city authorities should allow such a nuisance as that opposite Hotel Quinte to exist. As everyone knows who has passed that way, there is on the new drill shed site, a pool of stagnant water, covered with green scum, which acts as a mosquito breeder and possibly a typhoid breeder. And this nuisance, mind you, is across the street from our principal hotel and right in the heart of the city. Somebody should get busy and abate it.

Of course it may be said that the city authorities have no right to interfere in any way with Goverment property. In this case it would be well to haul sand or ashes and fill in the stagnant pool, and then ask permission afterwards. This is a matter the health authorities should look into at once.

• • •

It is stated by a Toronto paper that the Ontario Cabinet was yesterday afternoon wrestling with the problem of locating the new normal schools. The Toronto News says "it is tolerably certain that two of them will go to Hamilton and Kingston respectively," and four in all will be built.

• • •

It is possible, of course, that the News is sufficiently in the confidence of the Government to be able to tell with certainty where the schools will go, but we take the liberty of doubting that Kingston will get one. Certainly there would be little of either justice or sense in slighting Belleville for the Limestone City.

However, it seems tolerably certain that the Cabinet has taken the matter up in earnest, and that it will be settled before Premier Whitney leaves for the Old Country, which will be on the 15th inst.

If the authorities of this city have any intention of moving in this matter they should do so without delay. Belleville's claims are undeniable and her advantages par excellence. These facts might well be again drawn to the attention of the Minister of Education.

Widespread and universal regret is being expressed to-day at the untimely and shocking death of Mr. W. J McCamon, the circumstances of which are related in our news columns to-day. Mosquitoes are so prominent just now that it is interesting to learn how they are propagated. They can be propagated only in water. the female mosquito laying her eggs on the surface of the water to the number of 300 or 400 at a time. In a day or so these eggs develop into a larvae, or "wigglers." In eight days more the larvae become somewhat abruptly enlarged at one end, and a few days later arise to the surface of the water, burst their gossamer-like skin and emerge as full fledged mosquitoes, all ready for business.

The Band Concerts.

To the Editor of The Intelligencer;

Dear Sir, — In your report of the proceedings of the Council in settling the matter of Band concerts on Victoria Park, Alderman Sinclair was reported as stating that the 15th Regiment Band had only proposed giving concerts as cheaply as the Oddfellows' Band to the extent that, if they played for nothing, the 15th would do likewise. Such was not the fact, and the report of such an unbusinesslike statement is a serious reflection on the management. We were asked by Ald. Vermilyea to give eight concerts for $75.00, which we considered too low to seriously contemplate. That the representatives of the Council did not have any definite business proposition to lay before us is plain by their settlement of giving $125.00 for six concerts and previously asking us to give eight concerts for $75.00. If the Council had, in a business way, asked tenders for so many concerts, our estimates would have been placed before them.

Our main regret in the matter, and we feel it is general, is that more liberality was not shown toward the public and the Oddfellows' Band, whose past service in the Park have been enjoyed and appreciated. A few more concerts at more expense in a good cause would have been endorsed by all our citizens. Trusting you will set us right with the people.

Yours respectfully,
The 15th Band Executive.

The Man Who "Looks Into the Eye."

IS COMING TO BELLEVILLE.

Beginning Tuesday, July 17, and continuing for seventeen days, a great campaign of optical education and demonstration will take place at the jewelry store of Allan McFee. Dr. Wm. E. Montgomery, the Toronto expert "Shadow test" specialist, has been engaged; a new optical dark room has been built, new appliances installed, and a new day will dawn for those who suffer with defects of vision. Dr. Montgomery, the originator of this new system of sight-testing, is doing a wonderful work throughout Canada. He is teaching one jeweler in each town his new and perfect way, a way that does no guess work, a way that makes no mistakes. Everywhere that his work is known it is pronounced a revelation in optical science and a great achievement in ophthalmic practice. Each day at the store Dr. Montgomery will conduct free examinations for all, charging for material only. Appointments are now being made. Do not miss this grand opportunity.

AS SMOOTH AS A BILLIARD TABLE.

Your comfort on a railway journey very largely depends upon the roadbed of the route you select. No matter how luxurious the coaches, or how much personal attention you receive from the employees, you cannot be comfortable if jolted and jarred by a poor and irregular roadbed. On the Lake Shore Railway no expense has been spared to make a roadbed as nearly perfect as the most skilful engineering could build, and as a result, throughout the entire length and breadth of the system the right of way is as smooth as a billiard table. No jolts or jars, nor dust nor dirt. This perfection of service extends throughout the entire system. Lake Shore trains are the most luxurious, they are equipped with every comfort and convenience and are run at highest speed and in safety. They run on time. For your own sake you should see that your ticket reads "via Buffalo and The Lake Shore Railway." Write for full information about rates and routes to J. W. Daly, Chief A.G.P.A., Buffalo, N. Y.; A. J. Smith, G.P.A., Cleveland, O., or W. J. Lynch, Passenger Traffic Mgr., Chicago, Ill.

A WOMAN TO BE PRETTY

Must Have Luxuriant and Glossy Hair, No Matter What Color.

The finest contour of a female face, the sweetest smile of a female mouth, loses something if the head is crowned with scant hair. Scant and falling hair, it is now known, is caused by a parasite that burrows into the scalp to the root of the hair, where it saps the vitality. The little white scales the germ throws up in burrowing are called dandruff. To cure dandruff permanently, then, and to stop falling hair, that germ must be killed. Newbro's Herpicide, an entirely new result of the chemical laboratory, destroys the dandruff germ, and, of course, stops the falling hair, and prevents baldness.

Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

A Cautious Lover.

A correspondent of the London Globe tells of a gilded youth who left instructions at a jeweler's shop for the inscription of an engagement ring he had just bought. He wanted it inscribed, "From Bertie to Maud." As he left he turned back and added as an after thought, "I shouldn't—ah—cut 'Maud' too deep, don't you know."

Close.

She—Do you know I've induced my husband to give up cigars? He—Is that so? Well, I've known him for seven years, and I never saw him give up one.

The hold-up man's rule of three is "Put up, give up and shut up."

Never call a convention of your friends to find out what you think yourself.

WALL PROTECTORS.

Make the Splashers to Harmonize With the Rooms.

It is well to keep a splasher behind the washstand to protect the wall, and there are so many kinds to choose from that each room can be fitted with harmonizing material and designs.

For the very dainty room use a fine linen and decorate it with a hemstitched hem and, if desired, an openwork border of needlework. If a design is wanted it should be in white and depend upon the ribbon bows at the upper corners for the necessary bit of color. The particular advantage in having the splasher entirely white is that it can be boiled without injury, besides being particularly dainty and pleasing.

For the young miss who likes a good deal of color about all of her room furnishings the designs on the splashers may be done with colored silks. These can be kept very nice by washing them in cool pearline suds, rinsing well and drying in the shade. They should be ironed on the wrong side with a moderately hot iron.

For the children's room white oilcloth is very pretty for splasher and stand cover if it is scalloped around the edges. It only needs to be wiped off with a cloth wrung from weak pearline suds to make it look as nice as new. A spray of flowers painted across the top of the splasher with oil paints makes it very pretty.

BOILING MEAT.

The Chief Points to Observe In Order to Insure Success.

Utter ignorance in this particular branch of cooking meat, boiling, is often the cause of much waste. The chief points to observe in order to insure success are (1) to skim well, (2) to keep the pot really boiling all the time the meat is cooking, but—and that "but" should be in capitals—the slower it boils the better; (3) to ascertain the exact time required for the size of the joint and to remove the pot directly the time is up.

If the liquor is required for stock it is best to put the meat into cold water, skimming carefully and taking the time from the moment the water boils, allowing twenty minutes to each pound of meat. Others prefer to plunge the joint into boiling water, observing the foregoing rules. This insures the whole goodness of the meat remaining in the joint.

Fresh killed meat takes longer to cook, and frozen meat should be thawed before cooking. The less liquor used for boiling the better, but it must always cover the whole of the meat.

Time for boiling a twenty pound ham, six and a half hours; a tongue, three hours; neck of mutton, one and a half hours; a fowl, three-quarters of an hour.

NURSERY NOTES.

A baby's mouth and gums should be washed every morning with water in which a pinch of borax has been dissolved.

If a child gets a bump an application of witch hazel as warm as he can stand it will take out all soreness and prevent discoloration.

Always take care that children's toys are light, have no sharp corners or projections that may cause injuries to the eyes, and, above all, see that they are washable.

Every child, at least as early as eight years of age, should have a room of its own, or, if two must occupy it, then each should have a half devoted entirely to itself and its small belongings.

A physician says that with delicate babies inunctions of sweet oil, lard or vaseline are invaluable. The oil should be gently and thoroughly rubbed in. A little massage over the baby's abdomen is a better cathartic than medicine.

To Fill Holes In Plaster.

We have all heard of filling holes in wood with newspaper pulp, but do you know that holes in the plaster wall may be as easily filled in? Boil the paper hard in clean water, then mash it fine, add a little thick liquid glue and fill in the crack or hole. If it is a very large hole put in a thin layer next the laths, pushing it in well between them, and wait until this is dry before putting it level with the rest of the wall. It depends so much on weather and warmth in the room that no time can be set for this drying, but when it feels hard to the finger the second coat may be safely put on. Put the first coat on with rough "front," so it will take the last smoothed coat well. If in a rough plastered room, a little experimenting and perhaps the addition of some plain white paper will enable you to catch almost the exact tint of the original plastering.

Combing the Hair.

When combing the hair if one directs the teeth downward they catch in the first obstruction, and a struggle ensues, with the result that one loses hair. Study the action of a groom who knows his work when combing a horse's mane. At the first the teeth are directed slightly upward. The comb is drawn down rapidly again and again, each stroke gently loosening tangles and letting obstinate tangles go. In a few minutes he sets the comb at right angles, and only toward the end does he turn the teeth downward.

Curdled Mayonnaise.

To bring back mayonnaise when it curdles is as follows: Take a lump of ice as big as your fist and rub it quickly through the mayonnaise for a couple of minutes. Then take out and stir very briskly. The evil will have been remedied without the bother of using a fresh plate and egg yolk. Be sure to have a large lump of ice. Small pieces will do no good, as they do not chill the mixture quickly enough.

SURPRISE FOR BRITAIN

Danger Ahead in Egypt Warns Sir Edward Grey.

If Weakness Be Shown Now There Might Arise the Necessity for Extreme Measures — Recent Punishments Were Necessary to Avoid Worse Clashes With the Natives—Tabah Attacks Not Accidental.

London, July 6.—Parliament and the country were given a surprise last night by an unexpected and sensational speech by Sir Edward Grey, the Foreign Secretary, on the situation in Egypt.

Speaking in a solemn tone and amid a tense silence, the Minister declared that the recent attacks on British officers at Tabah was not accidental, but a deliberate manifestation of the fanatical spirit which had necessitated the strengthening of the garrison in Egypt.

He declared that unless the authority of Lord Cromer and the Egyptian Government were strongly upheld it might lead to a situation requiring the adoption of such unconstitutional measures to meet the emergency as would be especially distasteful to the Liberal Government.

During the consideration of foreign estimates several members offered criticisms specially urging that a fleet be not sent to Constadt.

John Dillon (Nationalist) strongly denounced what he termed the brutal barbarism of floggings and executions in Egypt, accusing Sir Edward Grey, the Foreign Secretary, of a desire to cloak the affair.

Sir Edward, in a general reply, stated that all foreign relations were friendly, and, speaking in a solemn manner, said:

"As things are now, I say deliberately and with a full sense of responsibility that if Parliament does anything at this moment to weaken or destroy the authority of the Egyptian Government, you will come face to face with a very serious situation, for should fanaticism get the better of constituted authority there might arise the necessity for extreme measures."

Dealing with the Congo question, the Foreign Secretary said he distrusted the proposed reforms because the system was wrong. If other powers would join Great Britain in insisting on reforms the Government would welcome them

Politics in Custom House at Toronto.

Ottawa, July 5.—The Department of Customs have arranged for something like a general increase in the salaries of Toronto Custom House officials. The department will not announce the details, but the increase averages fifty dollars for thirty to forty officials. There is no statutory rate of increase for the outside customs service, and each case has to be treated upon its merits.

Toronto Telegram: While none of the local customs will talk of the increases granted, there is a general feeling of dissatisfaction among the staff

That there had been increases soon became noised around, and the 'happy ones' were subjects for congratulation, and the 'unhappy ones' for sympathy. From what can be learned from those who frequent the Customs House, the increases were awarded more as a matter of politics than of merit. Many of the clerks work overtime and are paid for the extra hours, while some who did not get increases are compelled to work overtime and receive nothing for the extra service.

What grounds there have been for the flagrant discrimination on the part of the Minister of Customs, who approved the increases, cannot be learned, but rumors are current that, while many of the oldest and most valuable men in the service received no increases, appointees of the present Government received generous increases

THE SPHINXES.

Asks the child untiringly
Questions which inquiringly
All the world has pondered long and deemed solution vain;
Problems metaphysical,
Whimsical and quizzical,
Past the bounds of common wit to answer or explain.

Then his elders, knowing it,
But afraid of showing it,
Try to hide their ignorance and cover up the way;
Tell him naught conclusively,
Answering elusively;
"Take your little building blocks and run away and play;"

Asks the man despairingly,
Recklessly and daringly,
Fires and earthquakes lay me waste and all my work is vain;
While I labor painfully
Look not down disdainfully,
Tell me, O ye powers that be, the purpose and the gain."

Though he cry appealingly
Sternly and unfeelingly;
Still there comes replying in the old familiar way,
Answers Fate unmutable,
Providence inscrutable:
"Take your little building blocks and run away and play."

Scarcely a week passes but there are signs that the Britisher is becoming more and more impressed with the advantages which will accrue from cultivating Canadian trade. Nearly every port in the United Kingdom is also making an effort to obtain direct sailings to Canada, the latest town to put in a claim being Aberdeen, which is contemplating running steamers with general cargoes from Aberdeen.

Calgary is throwing out its chest and buying larger sized hats upon the report of Henderson's Directory that it has a population of over 20,000. Its pride is warranted for the showing is a marvellous one. Calgary is now where Winnipeg was twenty years ago, and going strong. Doubtless it has high hopes of being where Winnipeg now is in less than twenty years, and, in view of the development that is taking place, it is quite possible that these hopes will be realized.

The three baronies given to prominent Canadians — those of Mount-Stephen, Strathcona and Macdonald of Earnscliffe—bear a similarity in the fact that they can boast of no male heir. Lord Mount-Stephen who was seventy-seven last week, has been twice married, but has no children, so that the title is in danger of extinction. Such is the case with the Macdonald barony, given to the widow of Sir John Macdonald, one-time Prime Minister of the Dominion. Lord Strathcona has no sons, but by special remainder his barony descends to his daughter.

People who take a great deal of care to keep their lawns looking well are often annoyed by pedestrians cutting across the sward in order to shorten a walk by a step or two. Few things are more trying to the owner of a well kept lawn. There may be no one in Belleville who sympathizes with the Detroit man who put three bullets into a neighbor who was thus trespassing, but there are a number who can at least understand his feelings.

Here is something from an English exchange to interest not only Canadian boot and shoe manufacturers, but to open the eyes of those Canadians, who give the preference to American made goods:

'A rather remarkable confirmation has been given to an argument advanced in a recent batch of notes with reference to the boot trade. The contention was that British manufacturers ought to supply a larger share of Canadian footwear instead of leaving the trade almost entirely in the hands of United States firms. It then stated that British houses, who have much improved their methods in the last few years, can now supply boots which unite the comfort of American uppers with the weather resisting qualities of English soles. Investigations made by the British Tanners' Federation have since shown that the practice of adulteration in American sole leather exists to an extent which has no parallel in this country. The effect is to increase the weight, and considerable percentages of glucose and Epsom salts are worked into the texture of the leather to achieve this object. Of the samples tested, from 18 to 33 per cent. of the material supplied as sole leather could be washed away by cold water. Although it would be unfair to say that all trans-Atlantic producers are adepts at this doctoring process, it is as well that Canadian buyers should have their eyes open to the risks they run from Yankee trade cuteness."

A JOCULAR MONARCH.

Ivan the Terrible Had Cold Blooded Notions About Jesting.

Ivan the Terrible forgot neither his devotions nor his diversions. His palace alternately resounded with praying and carousing. For his pastime bears were brought from Novgorod. When from his window he perceived a group of citizens collected he let slip two or three of these ferocious animals, and his delight on beholding the flight of the terrified creatures, and especially on hearing the cries of the victims, was unbounded. His bursts of laughter were loud and long continued. To console those who were maimed for life he would sometimes send each of them a small piece of gold.

Another of his chief amusements was in the company of jesters, whose duty it was to divert him, especially before and after any executions, but they often paid dearly for an unseasonable joke.

Among these none was more distinguished than Prince Gvosdef, who held a high rank at court.

The czar, being one day dissatisfied with a jest, poured over the prince's head the boiling contents of a soup basin. The agonized wretch prepared to retreat from the table, but the tyrant struck him with a knife, and he fell senseless to the floor. Dr. Arnolph was instantly called.

"Save my good servant!" cried the czar. "I have jested with him a little too hard."

"So hard," replied the other, "that only God and your majesty can restore him to life. He no longer breathes."

Ivan expressed his contempt, called the deceased favorite a dog and continued his amusements.

Another day, while he sat at table, the waywode of Staritza, Boris Titof, appeared, bowed to the ground and saluted him after the customary manner.

"God save thee, my dear waywode. Thou deservest a proof of my favor."

He seized a knife and cut off an ear. Titof thanked the czar for his gracious favor and wished him a happy reign.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF LOVE.

Love is kindly and deceitless.—Yeats.

Love can sun the realms of night.—Schiller.

They do not love that do not show their love.—Shakespeare.

Love's a thing that's never out of season.—Barry Cornwall.

He that shuts out love in turn shall be shut out by love.—Tennyson.

The greatest miracle of love is the cure of coquetry.—La Rochefoucauld.

Love is master of the wisest; it is only fools that defy him.—Thackeray.

Love never dies of starvation, but often of indigestion.—Ninon de l'Enclos.

The magic of first love is the ignorance that it can ever end.—Beaconsfield.

Man's love is of man's life a thing apart; 'tis woman's whole existence.—Byron.

It is impossible to love a second time when we have once really ceased to love.—La Rochefoucauld.

Bulow's Wonderful Memory.

Bulow had a wonderful memory, as was evidenced by his astonishing feat of memorizing Kiel's concerto, which the man who wrote it could not accompany without notes. His accuracy was almost infallible. He was once rehearsing a composition of Liszt's for orchestra in that composer's presence without notes. Liszt interrupted to say that a certain note should have been played piano. "No," replied Bulow, "it is sforzando." "Look and see," persisted the composer. The score was produced. Bulow was right. How everybody did applaud! In the excitement one of the brass wind players lost his place. "Look for a b flat in your part," said Bulow, still without his notes. "Five measures farther on I wish to begin."

The Word "Asphalt."

Of deceitful ancestry is the word "asphalt." Apparently it means "not slippery." The Greeks themselves were tempted to derive "asphaltos" from "a," not, and "sphallo," make to fall or slip. However, the word is really of unknown barbarian origin—Phoenician, some say. Asphalt was in use very early in history. It is said to have been the slime with which the infant Moses' ark of bulrushes was daubed and which the builders of the tower of Babel used instead of mortar.

It is the privilege of posterity to set matters right between those antagonists who by their rivalry for greatness divided a whole age.—Addison.

THE TIME OF HER LIFE

By CONSTANCE D'ARCY MACKAY

Copyright, 1906, by K. A. Whitehead

One morning, when Billy and I were lingering over our rolls and coffee, Betty came in with a tragic air and an open letter in her hand.

"Listen to this!" she exclaimed. "Eleanor Cuyler is coming to New York to visit her aunt, and she says she simply must see us because she's always wanted to visit the shores of Bohemia!"

"The shores of what?" said Billy. "I'm sure there's nothing Bohemian about us."

"That's just it," wailed Betty, "but Miss Cuyler doesn't see it that way. She's daft about people who 'do things,' and she says she never met any, so she begs that she may come to dinner some night, quite informally, and be one of us. She thinks that because Kate writes and you're an artist and we all live in a little flat—I mean apartment—we are—well, we are queer and unconventional."

"Who is this Eleanor Cuyler?" said Billy, with a frown.

"She's a Philadelphia girl Kate and I met when we were in the mountains last summer. She was awfully nice to us in ever so many ways, and now it's our turn to do something for her. It's no use suggesting the matinee or a luncheon. Eleanor's rich as Croesus and tired of all that, and there's nothing else we can afford. Oh, I don't see what we're going to do!" And Betty puckered her brows in despair.

"Do," cried Billy. "Why, it's as plain as day! Satisfy her craving for the unconventional! If we're not Bohemians, we can at least put up a good imitation of the real thing. We can ask the Englishman, Harry Rockminster—he'll add a continental flavor. And there's Perry Dashwood; he can sing stein songs better than any one I ever knew. We'll get Cynthia to come and recite, and Worthington to bring his violin. They can pretend they're professionals. Cynthia will be an actress just starting on her career, and Worthington a struggling musician—'struggling' is the right touch, isn't it? And—let's see—this is Monday. Write and invite Miss Cuyler for Wednesday evening. Bohemians aren't supposed to give much notice when they ask people to their parties." And Billy looked over at me and laughed.

While Betty was jubilantly writing her note I went to explain things to Aunt Pattie. Aunt Pattie has mothered us ever since we were children, and nothing we do ever surprises her, so she fell in with our plan at once. "But I couldn't be a Bohemian if I tried," she declared. "I wouldn't know how to act, and I'd make you all miserable and myself too. You can easily excuse my absence."

"But you'll miss all the fun," I objected.

Aunt Pattie's eyes twinkled. "Oh, I mean to be there!" she cried. "Since we have no maid I'm going to serve the dinner myself."

In vain we all protested, coaxed, commanded. Aunt Pattie was firm in insisting that as Miss Cuyler had never seen her it could make no possible difference. Yet somehow it did to me, for I could imagine with what horror my Englishman might look on such proceedings. Even after I had written to him and explained the circumstances I was tormented by misgivings, for, although he didn't know it, his good opinion mattered more to me than anything else in the world!

All Wednesday Betty and I worked like majors. We had always rather prided ourselves on the artistic arrangement of our little parlor. Now, in order to make it look Bohemian, we had banked it with all the bizarre and startling things we could lay our hands on. Billy's delicate water color sketches were jostled by flamboyant posters, theatrical photographs adorned the mantel, and sundry pipes and ash trays littered the table. It certainly looked queer; but, as Betty and I confessed to ourselves, we didn't. Betty was demure in a gray gown, and I wore my black net. I was just fastening one of Harry Rockminster's roses in my hair when the bell rang.

"There she is!" cried Betty hysterically. "Now, don't act as if anything unusual were happening!"

Eleanor Cuyler was enthusiastic in her greeting, and she was still telling of her joy in seeing us when we crossed the threshold of the parlor. At sight of the room she smothered a little gasp, which showed that our work had not been in vain. Then Billy came forward, and the loose blouse and soft tie which he wore for the occasion made him look as if he had stepped straight out of the Latin quarter. But Miss Cuyler wasn't any more surprised at his appearance than he was at hers. Somehow neither Betty nor I had told him what a beauty Miss Cuyler was—a childish little beauty with a fluff of golden hair and deep blue eyes that opened very wide when anything astonished her.

Perry Dashwood and Harry Rockminster came early, but there wasn't a sign of Cynthia and Worthington.

"They're half an hour late already," said Betty to me in an aside. "What on earth can be keeping them? I'm afraid the dinner will be spoiled."

Something of our uneasiness reached Billy, and he turned abruptly to Betty. "I really think we'd better not wait for the others," he said. "They may be quite late. You never can tell what may happen on the shores of Bohemia."

But we were hardly seated before we heard the turn of Worthington's latchkey and the swish of Cynthia's skirt down the hall. She made a dramatic pause at the dining room door and looked perfectly dazzling in a crimson Spanish costume, glittering with spangles.

"I hope you won't mind my coming in costume," she said. "We were kept late at rehearsal, and there wasn't time to change. I met Worthington on the stairs," she continued nonchalantly. "He'll be in in a moment. He's a musician, Miss Cuyler, and you know what uncertain hours musicians are forced to keep, especially when they are young and struggling."

Cynthia moved toward her chair with sinuous grace. She said afterward that the Spanish costume had entered into her blood, and she wasn't responsible for anything she did. Neither was Worthington, for he wore a peculiar, shabby black coat and carried his violin under his arm. But his crowning glory was his hair, or perhaps I should say his wig, which was very long and straight.

"'The Music Master,' by Jove!" ejaculated Harry Rockminster.

Yet not once did a triumphant gleam illumine the eyes of Signor Worthington. To this day I've always wondered how he managed to keep that dreamy, abstracted expression. Of course I knew I could count on Cynthia and Worthington, but I never knew I could count on them to such an extent as that. Eleanor Cuyler was delighted. She looked at them and listened to them in open eyed wonder as if they were beings from another world. And all my fears of what Harry Rockminster would think were set at rest when he whispered, "I say, isn't this a stunning lark!"

And now if Aunt Pattie didn't act too much like a lady our Bohemian dinner would be a complete success, but one false note would ruin everything. I toyed with the grape fruit as long as possible. Then I rang the bell. As I did so I kept my eyes fixed on Billy. He sat opposite the kitchen door and would be the first to see Aunt Pattie. The kitchen door creaked, swung open, and the expression on Billy's face signaled me that something had happened.

"Aunty," he burst out and then checked himself.

From behind me came a soft voice with the pleasant slurred accent of the south. "I reckon yo's 'sprised to see me, Mars' Billy! Yo' didn't know I was to cook de dinnar, did yo'?"

I turned and beheld Aunt Pattie! And yet not Aunt Pattie! For the face that beamed from beneath a bandanna turban was as black as the ace of spades!

To Miss Cuyler this apparition was nothing more than a loquacious dusky servant, but the rest of us were in ecstasies of mirth. We have vowed ever since that we owed the whole success of the evening to Aunt Pattie, for not only was the dinner deliciously cooked and splendidly served, but it went with a whirl. Harry Rockminster was never more brilliant in his life and told stories of marvelous escapades in which he had taken part. Cynthia recited "Lasca" with true dramatic fervor. Between courses Worthington played snatches on his violin, and we all sang songs—songs for which Perry made up funny impromptu choruses. The men smoked, and through the blue haze shone the radiant face of Miss Cuyler.

When dinner was over she leaned back in her chair with a little sigh. "It's just as I fancied Bohemia would be," she declared. "Oh, what fun you all must have gathering round the table this way every evening. Of course it's just a common occurrence to you, but I shall never forget it. Never! And I can't thank you enough for this glimpse of it."

Billy said she thanked him fervently again when he saw her to her carriage. "I've had the time of my life," she reiterated, "the time of my life!"

"Well, she wasn't the only one," said Worthington. He had taken off his wig and was mopping his brow while the rest of us sat about the dining room table nibbling at the remains of dessert and teasing Aunt Pattie to have something more substantial than lobster salad and a cup of coffee.

"Miss Cuyler did seem to appreciate it," said Cynthia.

"Appreciate!" cried Billy. "I think it's we who ought to appreciate her coming! Why, just to look at her is a feast! She has exactly the kind of eyes I want for my 'Queen Titania.'"

"Why don't you ask her to pose for it, then?" suggested Cynthia slyly.

"I have asked," answered Billy quite simply, "and we are going to begin tomorrow."

"Whiff!" sniffed Betty. "I smell orange blossoms!" And under cover of the laughter Harry turned to me.

"Miss Cuyler's had the time of her life. Billy's had the time of his, and there's just one thing wanting to give me the time of mine." His lips were smiling, but there was no mistaking the look in his eyes.

"I'll hate to spoil your evening by saying 'No,'" I whispered back. And then, although I was so happy, I had an absurd desire to cry, and if Billy hadn't suddenly interrupted with a toast to the shores of Bohemia goodness knows what might have happened!

Trout's Narrow Escape.

A correspondent of the London Field relates that he shot a flying heron that had been fishing in the river Colne at Uxbridge, and as the bird fell there dropped out of its mouth a trout nearly one-half pound in weight. The fish was alive, though scored on the back. A keeper procured a live bait can, filled it with water and put the trout into it. After a minute or so the fish gained strength. In a few hours it seemed quite resuscitated and apparently none the worse for its narrow escape from death. It was accordingly returned to the river to recover itself fully.

WOMEN'S ATHLETICS.

A Physician Warns Against the Dangers of Overtraining.

Dr. Sargent of Harvard is not an enthusiast on public school developments in the way of girls' teams of basketball or hockey players. In a recent talk on the subject he expressed the opinion that girls and women are in possible danger of overdoing athletics when they take up certain sports which are popular with boys and men. Let woman rather confine herself to the lighter and more graceful forms of gymnastics and athletics, says Dr. Sargent, and make herself supreme along these lines, as she has already done in aesthetic dancing. Among the athletic sports and games likely to prove injurious to most women if played in the form in which they are played by men Dr. Sargent mentioned football, ice hockey, basketball, pole vaulting and heavy gymnastics. These games prove injurious to women, he said, because of the limitations imposed by their physical configuration, the tendency to become masculine in form and character if they try to excel in masculine pursuits and their inability to bear prolonged mental and physical strain. Nevertheless such sports could be so modified as to meet the peculiar requirements of the sex, with the result that they could be played by women with reasonable hope of physical, mental and moral development. The advice is so sound and timely that it ought to have the widest possible publicity. The extreme to which some matches of basketball among girls of high schools has been carried right in Massachusetts would be enough of itself to convince the average observer that Dr. Sargent had spoken none too sharply. There can be a hysteria in sport as well as in any other healthy diversion. Nor is the hysteria always confined to women's athletics, but at least it is more harmful there.—Boston Advertiser.

DRESSING THE NECK.

An Important Factor In Improving a Woman's Appearance.

Few women realize how much their appearance depends on the way they dress their neck. Women with short necks bundle themselves up until they look as if they had chronic sore throats, while a girl with a neck like a giraffe wears a little turndown collar.

Let her who has the long neck wear all the high, soft adornments she can get together. With an evening gown she need not be afraid to put a band of ribbon under her necklace, and she will look all the better.

In the daytime medium necked women should never wear a collar that confines the neck too much, in the evening the least adornment possible, and if she be fortunate enough to have a pretty neck and throat she is much better without any jewels. If she must wear some, let them be a string of pearls or a necklace of solitaire diamonds.

The thin necked, scrawny women are the ones than can drape themselves with the old fashioned necklace with pendants. A dress cut open at the throat is always much more dressy and even for old ladies is becomingly pretty. But their necks must be thoroughly covered with folds of net or soft tulle. Nothing is ever prettier for old ladies' wear than the kerchiefs which consist of a square or net folded and put under the gown.—Woman's Life.

DRESS HINTS.

A lady always wears gloves with an evening dress whether she is receiving or not.

A velvet garment should always be made up so that the nap inclines upward. If done in this way it will not shade white and look shiny.

If a material has a pattern running one way only, care must be taken when cutting out a blouse that the two fronts do not have the pattern going in different directions.

Never patch a woolen dress unless it is absolutely unavoidable. Tack a piece of the material underneath the weak place and darn on the right side, and if carefully done the repair will hardly show.

When shirt waist cuffs begin to fray an excellent plan is to dampen the cuffs and carefully cut along the top of the stitching line; then, while still damp, turn in the edges and restitch. This will freshen up your waist and make it last for some time.

A Nerve Pillow.

A "nerve" pillow is something which physicians are said to recommend and which can easily be made at home. One needs only to gather or buy a quantity of dried soporific herbs, such as hops and catnip leaves, bayberry and sweet fern, adding to them sweet grass, balsam pine and as many sweet smelling, sleepy things as one can think of. Dry and powder and mix all together. Then fill your "nerve" pillow with the sachet powder thus formed. Stuff the pillow with down or cotton batting or feathers, and either scatter the powder thick through the filling, or, what is better, make flat sachet bags and fasten them securely to the inner seams of the pillow.

Choosing Meat.

In selecting beef for roasts or steaks see that the lean is firm and red and that the meat is finely grained. The fat should be firm and white. Never accept any meat which looks flabby or discolored or on which the fat is yellow. In choosing mutton the meat should be dark, with plenty of fat in it. Meat without fat shows poorly fed stock. If the fat is yellow and the meat seems wet or moist do not accept it. As a general rule all meat should be firm, never flabby. Lamb and veal should both be light colored, pale—veal, in fact, cannot be too white.

MISS FLORENCE WIESER.

A Talented Artist Connected With the Geographical Survey.

Miss Florence Wieser of Washington, who is in the employ of the geographical survey, is an artist whose love for brush and pencil began with babyhood. The passion for drawing led her first to portrait painting, then to fine pen and ink work and on to the scientific and artistic reproduction of nature in fossil form.

Miss Wieser possesses an enviable name among scientific students throughout geological and ethnological fields. She does a grade of work in the ferreting out of fine detail in fossil brachiapods and trilobites that has rarely, perhaps never, been equaled, and as a result she is much in demand by those engaged in research or authors of monographs upon scientific subjects. She has been connected with the survey for the past twelve years, where her collection of drawings forms part of the great stride in geological progress that has been made of late.

"The brachiapod, which is a tiny shell, formerly the home of a now obsolete form of marine life, is found imbedded in rocks," explains Miss Wieser, "and for purposes of classification and publication has to be drawn to enlarged scale. Every infinitesimal line and curve of the valve, every muscle scar, every convolution, must be shown accurately, although these are barely visible with the most powerful glass. The work upon the trilobite, now extinct, but from which our king crab and horseshoe crab are probably descended, is even more close, as often only parts of the fossil remain."

MISS FLORENCE WIESER.

Miss Wieser's free hand drawing of the minute markings of these specimens is most interesting. To detect the outline and characteristic differences of form of water creatures which have become fossilized and part of the rock that holds them and to transmit these in perfect accuracy to paper in the form of a sketch of singular beauty is to accomplish not only an unusual feat of fine draftsmanship, but to render a real service to scientific knowledge.

Miss Wieser inherited her artistic talent from her father, who was one of the portrait painters of Washington.—Washington Post.

See That the Collar Fits.

"Whenever I buy a new suit," said the woman who had a new suit for every season, "my husband always looks at the collar, and if that suits him he says it's an excellent fit. When I announce that I'm going on a shopping trip he always admonishes me to get a good fitting collar. It's true of most men who observe women's clothes at all that the set of the collar determines whether they think a woman is well dressed or not. I suppose it's because the plainness of masculine attire makes a snug, well shaped collar an absolute necessity to a well groomed appearance. And I believe men are right about insisting on this feature in a woman's suit and that women would do well to pay less attention to the fit over the hip and bust and pay more attention to the fit of the collar. A bulging collar can make the entire suit look ugly, while a somewhat careless fit in other lines may be forgiven if the collar only looks trim."—New York Press.

Working Dresses.

One of the cleverest housewives is one whose cleverness lies not so much in the way she does the work—though that merits a big word of praise—as in the way she dresses. All her working dresses are made with skirts that just escape, with sleeves that end in buttoned cuffs (so that she can roll them up well out of the way), with collars already adjusted or stocks that go on "in a jiffy" and with hooks and eyes in just the right places to keep waist and skirt together. When every woman learns that it's about as easy to look neat as to be untidy there'll be a revolution that is worth while. White is the daintiest thing to wear, but white must be "always at its whitest" to be permissible, and housework leaves its marks too plainly upon it. Medium colors are best—old blue ginghams or little shepherd's checks or dark blue and white calico and chintzes. Even white with stripes or dots seems to keep its freshness better than all white.

Cracks In the Floor.

Where it is desirable to take up an old carpet and replace it with a rug the floor underneath may not be hardwood and may need renovating before the rug can be laid. In that event cracks must be filled before the stain is applied, else the stain will not improve the floor very much. The homemade papier mache which will effectually remedy this defect is so easily made and applied that unsightly floors really have no excuse for remaining so.

This is the way to make it: Stir one pound of flour and one tablespoonful of alum into three quarts of water and as soon as this boils stir in strips of newspaper till the mixture becomes like soft putty and press this into the cracks with a knife while warm.

Some burned sienna added to the mixture right after the papier has been put in makes a deep reddish brown and prevents its wearing lighter than the boards if they are stained mahogany or deep cherry.

Minds and Bodies.

"May the time come when all mothers will devote as much care to their children's bodies as some do now to their minds and social accomplishments. I know mothers who are sacrificing the health of their children that the latter may stand at the head of a class or skip a grade." Dr. William H. MacEastline, assistant director of physical culture at Teachers' college, New York, stirred a responsive chord in the hearts of the members of the Mothers' club recently when he said this. Continuing, he told them that not big muscles, but the perfect functioning of all the organs and the development of the individual to his very best ought to be the mother's ideal for her child.

Keep Children Busy.

There are several rules that should be observed for the health and beauty of any child. The first is to give it something to do. No child can play all day. There should be some kind of regular task. This will make the child beautiful as well as healthy. It will cultivate its mind and its body. A healthy child should also have something to occupy its mind. It can, in Japanese fashion, paste pictures on the wall or play with handsome embroideries or train the eye by doing a little light carving and painting. These are matters for the individual to decide. But a child should keep itself occupied if it is going to be healthy and handsome.

The Baby's Dress.

Instead of attaching the baby dress to the dainty yoke of embroidery or lace, make the dress with a yoke of plain material, then over it, and attach only at the neckband, set the fancy yoke, finished at the edges with lace or embroidery. The plain yoke takes the place of a cover for the underwaist, which has a distressing way of showing through a transparent yoke. The fancy yoke is relieved of all strain, wears longer and is easier to launder, as it can be laid back and ironed flat on the wrong side.

An Idea In Shades.

Really handsome lamp and candle shades may be made of Japanese rice paper. Usually the straw colored is used for the foundation, and over this is laid a cut-out pattern of, say, red, and on top of that in some portions a blue or a red, the idea being to obtain a mosaic effect. The entire pattern is then outlined with black India ink. The frames are either made to order or they may be bought for a small sum at any of the shops where oriental goods are sold.

Almond Milk.

Almond milk is made by blanching thirty good sized Jordan almonds and bruising them to a powder in half a pint of distilled water. A lump of sugar must be worked in at the same time to prevent the oil from separating. The process takes some time and should be done in a mortar. Strain through cheesecloth. To make the milk richer increase the number of nuts used. The preparation is one of the most soothing and bleaching.

The Hostess.

Perhaps no surer index of breeding exists than is displayed in the knowledge of just what degree of effort is proper in entertaining. If a hostess' chief concern is to show off her possessions, to give herself a good time or to save all possible effort she does ill to call her intent hospitality. The true essence of hospitality is distilled of the kindly, unselfish wish to give pleasure and a tactful understanding of the fitness of things.

Lining Net Curtains.

If you have made the mistake of getting curtains of too thin a net to hang over natural wood shutters, get sheer muslin or silk or one of its substitutes and hang it from the same pole by way of lining. A delicate tint of color may be used in certain rooms instead of white or ecru, but it must be so delicate as to suggest white.

Hairdressing.

A mode of hairdressing which is tremendously becoming to one woman will be absolutely impossible to another. It all depends upon whether her chin is square or pointed, her eyes set high or low, whether her face is oval, thin, pudgy or beautifully curved.

Tie absorbent cotton around needle bar and foot bar of the sewing machine just above the screws. This absorbs oil, and the machine may be used immediately after oiling.

Hot bread will cut as easily as cold if the knife used is heated. Dip a knife in cold water before using to cut warm cake.

When airing bed clothing, carpets and rugs hang them wrong side out to prevent fading.

When the skin is sallow the system requires acids.

A TASK FOR GIRLS.

To Make a Pretty and Convenient Little Pincushion.

A very pretty and convenient little pin and needle cushion for a little girl's room or bureau may be made by taking six pieces, each five inches in length, of ordinary skirt braid, three pieces of a light color and three of a darker, harmonizing shade. Overseam them together with neat small stitches along the selvage and then fringe an inch at each end, as shown in Fig. 1.

Now overseam the dark edge to the light of the side pieces, featherstitch each seam with bright colored silk on the right side, and you will have a little round case open at each end. Stuff this with bits of yarn, of flannel or of any kind of small woolen pieces; never use cotton or cotton goods for this purpose, as needles and pins will not go through it.

FIG. 2

THE PINCUSHION.

Run a drawing string around just inside each fringe, draw the strings up and fasten them, and tie pieces of very narrow ribbon in little bows on each end, as shown in Fig. 2.

Pink and white, blue and white, violet and white, crimson and gold, or two shades of any one color make pretty combinations.

A CARD TRICK.

You Can Only Play It, Though, With the Picture Cards.

It will be found upon examining a pack of cards that the white margin round the court cards almost invariably differs in width at the opposite ends. The difference is frequently very trifling, but is still sufficiently noticeable when pointed out and may be made available for a trick which, though absurdly simple, has puzzled many. The performer places four court cards of the same rank—say four queens—in a row, face upward, taking care that the wider margin of the cards is all one way. After inviting one of the company to turn round lengthways one or more of the cards during his absence he leaves the room. On returning he can readily distinguish which card has been so turned, as the wider margin of the card will now be where the narrower margin was originally, and vice versa. There is so little chance of the trick being discovered that it may, contrary to the general rule, be repeated if desired. Should the performer repeat it it is better not to replace the cards already turned, as this might give a clew to the secret, but to choose from other court cards.

A Little Experiment.

Lay a piece of oilcloth on the carpet in your room and let the room get good and warm. Wait several hours, if you wish, until everything in the room has had a chance to reach the same temperature. Then touch your bare foot to the carpet and the oilcloth in turn, and the oilcloth will be found much the colder of the two.

You know that the oilcloth cannot really be colder than the carpet, for they are both subject to the same degree of heat and must necessarily be of the same temperature. Why, then, should the oilcloth seem to be so much colder? It is simply because it is a good conductor of heat, while the carpet is not. To put it more plainly, the oilcloth carries the heat away from your foot so fast that it gives you a cold sensation, but the carpet carries hardly any of the heat away.

Water and Ice.

Did you ever think how good for us it is that ice is lighter than water, so that it floats on the surface? Everything that we know of expands with heat and contracts with cold except water. Boiling water, if allowed to cool, will become smaller in bulk only until it reaches a certain point—39 degrees F.—and then it begins to expand again until it turns into ice. And as ice is lighter than water it floats on the surface. Can you imagine what would be the result if water got smaller by freezing instead of larger? Simply this, that all the lakes and ponds would be so filled with ice that they would not thaw out in even the hottest summer, for they would begin to freeze at the bottom and the ice would continue to form all the way to the top.

Friday.

It's heaps of fun to be a boy
When Friday comes along.
That day a boy don't mind a bit
No matter what goes wrong.

Sometimes on Fridays we are good,
A reg'lar model class.
The teacher smiles at 3 and says,
"The first line rise and pass."

We get our hats; our books we strap,
And, whistling a tune,
We hurry out. There's nothing like
A Friday afternoon.

You say it's odd that Friday should
A part so noted play?
Just ask a boy. He'll tell you why—
The next is Saturday.

"SWISS FOOD"

One Ingredient of Zutoo
Is soda—just old-fashioned soda, that our grandmothers took to settle the stomach.

The principal ingredient—the one that stops the headache, is a vegetable ingredient, imported for us from Japan. It wont hurt you any more than will the soda.

The other ingredients of Zutoo are just as harmless.

If you knew what the drug cures contain, and their ultimate effect on the system, you would discard them at once and take Zutoo, which is harmless as

Bu-Ju
THE GENTLE KIDNEY CURE

Hundreds of people, who have been cured of Kidney Trouble by Bu-Ju, were first induced to try this wonderful remedy by friends who had themselves been cured. The sales of Bu-Ju are daily increasing, because everyone who takes them is benefitted—and these in turn, tell others. So the good news is spread.

Here is what a Picton man says about Bu-Ju:—

"I have used Bu-Ju with great benefit to myself, and cheerfully recommend to all who, I think, are suffering from Kidney Troubles and Rheumatism.

"I think Bu-Ju the best remedy made."

Yours sincerely,

DOWN BY THE RIO GRANDE

By CURRAN RICHARD GREENLEY

Copyright, 1906, by P. C. Eastment

The long gray adobe walls of the hacienda lay bathed in the quiver of yellow light. Alleyne watched Margaret's face for a sign of truce, but the shadows came and went between the vines that draped the patio as the interminable Sabbath afternoon dragged away and Margaret remained buried in her book. "And all about a beggarly horse thief," he murmured to himself as he sat up straight and sent the pile of magazines crashing to the floor.

There was a look of consciousness about the back of that shapely brown head that held itself so persistently averted, but Alleyne deemed it wiser not to reopen the subject of Miguel.

Over in the corral things wore a deserted air. Two or three men lounged in the shade of the high wall. Alleyne yawned and looked at his watch and at a faint movement of the figure in the rocker. "Margaret, I"— Crack-ack-ack! Somewhere away to the west three shots rang out in rapid succession, a pause and then three more.

Over in the corral the lounging figures sprang to life, and an instant later three ponies were galloping in the direction of the shots. Alleyne dashed into the house, reappearing with the field glasses. "They've got him!" He was peering at a collection of black dots on the edge of the horizon.

"Got who?" Margaret laid her hand upon his arm.

"The mischief!" Alleyne jerked the glasses down. "I forgot you were here." Under her steady gaze his color changed. "Yes, if you will have the whole ghastly truth and cannot be persuaded to stay out of it, it's that scoundrel Miguel."

Margaret shrank away from him with a low cry of distress. The look in her eyes went straight to Alleyne's heart, and his voice softened to a tender pleading as he tried to draw her to him. "Little woman, you cannot be the judge of these matters, and you cannot shield a horse thief. I could have told you this morning, but I preferred to let you think me a bit hard on Miguel than to shock you with the truth. There have been some queer happenings lately both here at the Alaho and at Jose's. Last night a bunch of Jose's best ponies came up missing, and the boys have been trailing him since sunrise."

"John Alleyne, do you mean to let those savages of yours murder a man here on the Alaho just for the sake of a few bronchos?" Margaret faced him sternly, and Alleyne lost his hard kept patience.

"You forget that there are men's laws to be considered as well as God's, and out here on the fringe of the world the code knows no greater crime than lifting a broncho, and the lifting of many bronchos aggravates the case. It is not a question in which my wife may meddle." And Alleyne strode toward the corral, while Margaret picked up the glasses.

The wind blown stretch of bare brown mesa told her nothing of the tragedy brewing behind its crest. She watched Alleyne until her eyes ached.

A clatter of hoofs and a voice calling her name brought her to the door, where a half broken cayuse snorted and pawed. Astride of him sat Bright Eyes, Miguel's Indian wife, the brown baby swung to her back. There was a queer ashen pallor on the woman's stolid face as she slid from the pony's back, one hand clutching at the deerskin thong that held the papoose. "White man got Miguel. Miguel he die." Here she pointed to her throat and made a gasping sound. "White squaw much hurree. Miguel he no die. Sabe?"

Margaret cowered before the awful pleading in those savage eyes. "Not a question in which my wife may meddle," John had said, but there was no time to weigh scruples, and five minutes later a strangely assorted pair rode into the face of the setting sun, and the rough little cayuse strove to keep pace with the swinging stride of the Hindoo mare. Far ahead a black dot moved against the sky that Margaret knew to be Alleyne. A glimmer of consequences flashed across her mind, but the sweet young mouth only grew a little firmer as she struck the trail of many horses and knew the goal to be in sight.

On and on, sagebrush and prickly pear, the yellow sand beneath and overhead the blue melting into the evening's violet crown—nature's own smile upon the scene that swept into view, where men and horses were grouped around the impassive figure wrapped in the ragged poncho that lounged in careless grace against the white scarred trunk of a large mesquite. Margaret's eyes went instinctively to the lariat knotted about the bronze throat. It was not the first time that Miguel had felt it there, but Rusty Pete himself held the end of this one.

The voices hushed instantly, and to a man the wide sombreros were lifted as Margaret slipped from the saddle and stood looking from one dark face to another. An awful sense of self engulfed her, and in another moment Miguel's cause would have been lost. But the grim set of Alleyne's mouth as he started toward her gave her the courage that is born of cowardice. Before he could reach her she had broken through the circle to Miguel's side, and the sun struck along the barrel of a revolver leveled straight at Rusty Pete. "Drop that rope!" she cried.

Pete let go as if the lariat were red-hot iron; then she wheeled to face the ring of Miguel's accusers. "Men of the Alaho, you are many. This man is but one, bound and helpless, but the first man that moves toward him does so at his peril. If you persist in taking him it will be over my body!"

Alleyne's eyes were blazing, but not a man stirred for a long moment, an interminable time, it seemed to the woman, who stood between that ring of fierce faces and their prey.

"God in heaven, will it last forever?" Her brain was reeling and the black figures danced in a blood red mist as earth rose in waves beneath her. The silent battle was almost done when a wild yell from the darkening mesa scattered the circle to right and left as the man from Jose's galloped in. "Cut that rope!" yelled the leader as he bore down upon the group under the mesquite.

Margaret staggered blindly into Alleyne's arms, seeing nothing but the flash of Pete's knife as he cut the thongs, then utter blackness until she awoke to the white walls of her own room.

Alleyne was bending over her. There was something distinctly apologetic in his attitude. Margaret grasped her advantage. "Well?" Her tone was tentative. Alleyne settled himself on the side of the bed, laughing a bit uneasily.

"I suppose you have the best of me, little woman. Your dramatic entrance upon the scene saved the day or we would have sent Miguel on the long ride on another man's count. Jose's men would have come too late."

"Who did it?"

"One of the greasers. Miguel had been over to the post loading up on fire water, as usual, and the greaser ran across him just about the time he discovered that the boys were close on his trail. Things were getting pretty warm for him when he persuaded Miguel to take charge of the ponies while he skipped out. Naturally the boys did not stop to question Miguel when they found him heading away from the ranch and the proof trotting alongside. It would have been all over for Miguel but for the fact that the greaser met a man who had good reasons for wanting to find him—and found him. Explanations came later, and when the greaser realized that a few bronchos more or less couldn't count against a man who had only about twenty minutes to live he set things in motion to reach Miguel. That is all the story."

The south wind rustled the vines in the patio. Margaret looked down to the grove of mesquite just beyond the big corral, where a brown baby rolled in the dust at the door of Miguel's tepee. Alleyne's eyes followed hers. He understood.

A Good Lacquer.

It is often the case that one finds it convenient to have at hand a first class lacquer with which to coat instruments, ornaments or other articles, to add either to their durability or finish. The following recipe will be found reliable and not specially expensive: One pint of best rectified alcohol, two drams each of saffron and Spanish annotto, an ounce of ground tumeric. Put these ingredients together and place them where there is a moderate heat. Leave them for several days, shaking them occasionally. When nearly dissolved add three ounces of the best seed lac in rough powder. Let this stand until the lac is all dissolved, shaking it frequently. If the color is to be a bright yellow, use less annotto; if a deep orange, use more. Put the mixture on while warm. Apply with a brush as one would use paint. The number of coats depends entirely upon the article and the purpose for which it is used. For blue lacquer add prussian or aniline blue to white shellac varnish made very thin. In making lacquer take great care not to use too much seed lac, as the mixture is likely to dry unevenly or in streaks.

A Veil With a History.

The bridal veil is evidently of eastern origin, being a relic of the bridal canopy held over the heads of the bride and bridegroom. Among the Anglo-Saxons a similar custom existed, but if the bride was a widow it was dispensed with. According to Sarum usage, a fine linen cloth was laid upon the heads of the bride and bridegroom and was not removed until the benediction had been said.

The old British custom was to use nature's veil unadorned—that is, the long hair of the bride, which was so worn by all brides, royal, noble and simple. Only then did every one behold the tresses of maidenhood in their entirety and for the last time, as after marriage they were neatly dressed on the head. Among some the tresses were cut and carefully stowed away on a woman becoming a wife. It was customary in Russia for village brides to shear their locks on returning from church.

The Precept of Idealists.

Listen to the old men seated upon the benches in the towns or during their walks in the parks. Listen to those who are in the midst of life, in the thick of bitter conflicts and heart sickening struggles. Listen to the women who have been married these several years. What discouraging remarks! Vanity of vanities! All these people have filed their reports, and, worn out, without the courage to put the ideal into life, it ends in inevitable and horrible bankruptcy. But in all this it is not life which is at fault. It is man. You must supply what is missing. Let us, then, to the professors of the ideal. Their precept is very simple. It resolves itself into this: "Be prepared for difficulties, but be faithful in the little things, and you will attain the great ones." It is by the very little steps that one rises slowly to the summits.—Charles Wagner in Harper's Bazar.

THE SENSE OF BEAUTY.

Charm of the Rose or the Pretty Bow In the Hair.

"So long as a woman clings to the rose or the bow in her hair she has not lost her sense of poetry, and so long as a woman keeps her sense of poetry just so long does she hold man in the hollow of her hand."

It was a gentleman of the old school who said this. He understands the fair sex from A to Z. He began his study of women when they wore hoopskirts, and he has pursued his studies along the line of years reaching to tailored cheviots.

"The laws have not changed," he says today. "A rose in the hair means now what it meant fifty years ago and will mean fifty years hence."

A sense of poetry is a sense of beauty. There is nothing in a woman which has more attraction for the other sex than this. It is so closely akin to beauty itself that it is often mistaken for the much desired gift. Few of the world's greatest actresses have regular features, but they have a sense of beauty which prompts them to graceful motions, artistic dressing and the fascinating daintiness which is so potent a charm. Little touches of coquetry in a woman's dress are more dangerous to a man than a flawless Grecian nose, and the old gentleman was right in claiming what he did for a rose or a bow in the hair.—Exchange.

FOLDING FOOTSTOOL.

The Happy Scheme That an Inventive Woman Worked Out.

A little woman of an inventive turn of mind, who has suffered no end of discomfort from high seats in which her feet couldn't touch the floor, has had a little folding footstool especially made for her. It has proved to be so useful that she now keeps one or two on hand to give to any friends whom she thinks may appreciate them. The stool is made of hardwood, about eight inches long by five wide and stands several inches high. The legs are hinged so that it may be folded up, and a strip beneath the top of the stool is also fastened on with hinges, so that when it is turned up it keeps the legs in place. When folded up the footstool makes a nice flat little parcel which may be tucked under the arm of the little short body when she goes to the theater, where it makes her much more comfortable than she was without it. Turned upside down, with the center strip left down, it makes a neat little book rack. It is of very pretty wood and so nicely finished that it is quite as suitable for a book rack as for its humbler office of a footstool.

CULINARY CONCEITS.

The fruit in solid cakes will sink to the bottom if they are put in a slow oven.

Adding a spoonful of molasses to buckwheat batter is said to make the cakes fry a delicate brown.

Skewer baked fish with thin slices of salt pork or bacon. Fresh fish will be improved in flavor if fried in fat used previously for the same purpose.

Allow a shorter raising for bread to be cooked by steam, since the dough will rise during the cooking because of the lower temperature employed.

Ordinary poached eggs arranged on toast are delicious covered with white sauce or with tomato sauce. A minced green pepper is a tasty addition to the tomato sauce.

When meat is being roasted and there is danger of it becoming too brown place a basin of water in the oven. The steam will prevent scorching, and the meat will cook better.

The Wife's Wages.

The wife is a wage earning woman, but she is generally underpaid. In all the vast hullabaloo raised over the ladies who go forth and make their own way in the world, a word is due the wife and mother, who is a harder worker than the busiest of them. A husband supports his wife, so runs the popular prejudice, yet where could he find a housekeeper, nurse, mother and general buffer to work for her board and clothes, as does his wife, so long as her life shall last? Not for $3, $5—nay, or $8—a week. This is the truth. Speaking always of the wife who works rather than the idler wife with no children, society's moth, who eats holes forever in the useful world fabric, but knows not nor cares not to repair them. A man supports his wife, yet often she is the prop that holds him up resplendent before the world.—Philadelphia Telegraph.

A Baby Box.

A baby box is not only better than the ordinary folding pen, but a whole lot cheaper, especially if one is carpenter enough to make it at home. A good sized packing box will answer the purpose very well, though if the upper half of the sides can be arranged as a railing so much the better. The sides should be at least three and a half feet high to keep an active child from climbing out of the box. The inside should be lined with felt or thick canton flannel, and if a tiny hammock is swung from the opposite corners it will make an ideal place for a nap. In warm weather box, baby and all may be moved out of doors.

Change Your Shoes.

Sufferers from tender feet should only wear cashmere or merino stockings and never use the same pair of boots two days following. If you are obliged to be on your feet nearly all day, you should make a point of changing your shoes several times for a fresh pair. You will be astonished, if you try this, to find how much it will rest your feet. The reason is that no two pairs of shoes press the feet in exactly the same place.

QUAINT PRESENTS.

Odd Wedding Gifts That Have Been Received by Celebrities.

Celebrities are often the recipients of quaint presents. For instance, on the marriage of Queen Victoria the farmers of East and West Pennard, Somersetshire, wishing to show their loyalty, manufactured from the milk of 750 cows an immense cheese nine feet in circumference. The gift was graciously accepted and was stored at Buckingham palace, where it would undoubtedly have found its way to the royal table had not its donors wished to exhibit it as an advertisement. Their request was granted, but after it had been exhibited and the makers would have returned it her majesty signified that owing to the altered conditions she could not accept it as a gift.

An equally homely gift was made to the late King Charles of Wurttemburg on the morning of his marriage to Princess Olga of Russia. A peasant woman sent him a pair of trousers of her own design, with a note expressing the hope that they might be found a better cut and fit than those which she had last had the honor of seeing his majesty wear.

The Italian singer, Signor Mario, inspired a hopeless passion in the hearts of so many women that at the time of his wedding some of this affection found expression in various strange gifts. One was in the shape of a cushion stuffed with tresses from the heads of many of his hopeless admirers. Another was from a lady in Munich who had had one of her teeth set in a scarfpin surrounded with pearls and emeralds. In an accompanying note she expressed the hope that by sometimes wearing the gift he might be reminded of his unknown worshiper.

THE FIRST SPECTACLES.

They Were Made In Italy In the Thirteenth Century.

Spectacles were invented late in the thirteenth century. The use of glass to aid the sight of defective eyes is, however, much older. Nero looked through a concave glass in watching the gladiatorial games, and many other historical men of his day were dependent on similar devices for lengthening their sight.

Till the latter part of the thirteenth century only the single glass was in use. In 1290 the double glass was invented, and in the fourteenth century spectacles were used quite frequently by the very wealthy and high born, although they were still so scarce that they were bequeathed in will with all the elaborate care that marked the disposition of a feudal estate. The first spectacles were made in Italy.

Somewhat later the manufacture of cheaper glasses sprang up in Holland, and it spread late in the fourteenth century to Germany, Nuremberg and Rathenow acquired fame for their glasses between 1490 and 1500.

For many years glasses were used only as a means of aiding bad eyes, until the fashion of wearing merely for the sake of wearing them sprang up in Spain. It spread rapidly to the rest of the continent and brought about the transformation of the old thirteenth century spectacles into eyeglasses and eventually into the monocle.

Quicksilver.

Quicksilver is found in veins of rocks, like gold, silver and other metals. Sometimes the tiny globules of the mercury appear in the interstices of the rock, but usually it is found in the form of cinnabar, a chemical compound containing 13.8 per cent of sulphur and 86.2 per cent mercury. When pure and reduced to a powder it is a bright red color.

The principal uses of quicksilver are for removing free gold and silver in placer and quartz mining, for manufacturing vermillion paints and dyes, for backing mirrors, for making thermometers and many other scientific instruments.

What Water Did.

A certain liquor dealer, a hard headed old Scot, grew rich in the trade. After he had grown rich the old man built himself a fine house, a limestone mansion on the hill, with a park around it, with conservatories, stables and outbuildings—in a word, a palace. One day the old Scot rode in the omnibus past his fine house. A temperance man pointed up at the grand edifice and said, with a sneer, "It was the whisky built that, wasn't it?" "Na, na, man; the water," the Scot answered.—London Mail.

The First Sapphire.

There is an Indian legend that Brahma, the creator, once committed a sin that he might know the torments of remorse and thus be able to sympathize with mortals. But the moment he had committed it he began repeating the mantras, or prayers of purification, and in his grief dropped on the earth a tear, the hottest that ever fell from an eye, and from it was formed the first sapphire.

Happy Thought.

Doctor—Your throat affection is one of the rarest in the world and is of the deepest interest to the medical profession. Patient—Then remember, doctor, when you make out your bill that I haven't charged anything for letting you look down my throat.

The Strong Point.

He—Really, I never loved anybody before. She—That isn't the point. Are you sure you'll never love anybody by and by?

In so far as you approach temptation to a man, you do him an injury, and if he is overcome you share his guilt.—Johnson.

UNCOVERS DUST OF AGES.

Egyptian Temple 3,900 Years Old Brought to Light—Built to the Memory of Thothmes III.

The world possesses another archaeological treasure. When, some months ago, in the valley of the Kings' tombs at Thebes, there was discovered a tomb hitherto unviolated, containing a profusion of marvelous furniture, jewelry, vases, and carvings, as fresh as if they had been made yesterday, it was supposed that the land of the Pharaohs had yielded up ancient objects which could not be surpassed in beauty and in interest. But this discovery, wonderful as it was, has been far surpassed by the latest find in Egypt, the news of which has just been made known by C. T. Currelly, an Englishman, and Prof. E. Naville, a French savant, who are both working under the auspices of the Egypt exploration fund.

For the last two years the explorers employed by the fund, Prof. Naville, Mr. Currelly, Mr. Hall, and Mr. Ayrton, have been engaged in excavating the oldest temple that has so far been discovered at Thebes.

It was built in the eleventh dynasty, in the reign of King Menthuhetep Nebhelpet-Ra, who lived somewhere about 2,000 B. C. It was in the ninth and tenth dynasties that Thebes began to be transformed from an obscure little town on the upper Nile to the home of the Pharaohs, with magnificent palaces and temples of stupendous size and grandeur.

The temple which Prof. Naville and his associates have been laying bare is built on a platform, to which access is given by a ramp, and it is remarkable because it has in the middle a great block of masonry, the purpose of which is not known, but which, it is thought, was perhaps the base of a pyramid.

This year the efforts of the explorers have been directed toward the back part of the temple. They wished to see how it ended and how it was connected with the mountain at the end of the amphitheatre of Deir el bahari.

Early in the work Mr. Hall discovered the inclosure wall of the temple and found that the inclosure was interrupted by a court or wide avenue, lined on both sides by a single row of columns and directed toward the mountain. The rock had been cut open to make way for the avenue.

On the north side of the court, over the inclosure of the old temple, remains of a shrine of the eighteenth dynasty were found. The shrine was built in the reign of the great King Thothmes III. He lived 1,500 years before Christ, about 150 years before the exodus of the Jews to the promised land.

This was the King who in seventeen campaigns subdued Palestine and Syria, planted a tablet of victory alongside that of his father on the banks of the Euphrates, penetrated northern Mesopotamia, stormed Karkemish, on the Euphrates, planted garrisons and appointed governors everywhere, and when he died, after a reign of fifty-four years, was regularly receiving tribute from an empire extending from the upper waters of the Euphrates to the fourth cataract of the Nile. He was the greatest conqueror among the Pharaohs and the greatest military genius in his history of Egypt.

It was with the rich booty that Thothmes III. obtained that he embellished the temples of Egypt in a manner unequaled by any of his predecessors, though they had all been great builders. The gigantic temple of Ammon at Karnak was mostly built by him, and under his rule Egyptian art attained its greatest development.

LONDON'S LATEST FAD.

Chameleons Which Change Color to Suit Dress of Mistress.

The chameleon promises to be a favorite pet in London this year.

One great point in favor of the chameleon is its accommodating habit of taking on the hue of the color against which it is placed. Thus one chameleon will match up with gowns of half a dozen different shades. So, though fashionable, it is really quite an economical adornment.

Much, however, will depend upon the weather, for, like the summer girl, the chameleon only thrives when the sun is bright. To import them now would be almost madness, as a cold snap would rob them of their brightly colored little lives.

The chameleon is really the ideal pocket pet. It has a habit of sitting on its hind legs, and it has weird, staring eyes perched on the top of its head. To pursue natural history further, it may be pointed out that the chameleon never goes far from home.

It has two little arms, with almost human-fingered hands, and with these it clings for an indefinite time to anything on which it is placed. For instance, if you put a chameleon on a plant it will cling to that plant until removed. Or if a lady attaches it to her gown it will cling passionately to the dress. It will never fall off, and it will never run away. In fact, it may be said that chameleons always become very much attached to their owner.

The species most recommended is the one hailing from Morocco, which is about five inches long, and has a fascinating habit of curling its tail between its legs and up its chest. One of these placed on its hind legs and provided with penholder as a walking-stick will sit for hours on end without moving.

The diet of the chameleon consists of meal-worms—with which your baker will surreptitiously supply you — and flies. The latter the chameleon catches for himself in the summer months by shooting out his comparatively immense tongue.

There is one sad aspect to the chameleon fashion. When the summer has flown and cold weather comes, the chameleon must die unless sheltered in a very hot plant house or sent south for the winter. One well-known marchioness, who became very fond of her chameleon, last summer sent it to Biskra during the winter months. At the present moment it is in excellent health, and will be restored to its devoted mistress when spring develops.

Modified Romance.

"Would you marry a man for money?"

"No," answered Miss Cayenne, "and yet I don't think I should regard a man as being especially desirable because of his poverty."

An Angel

By MARTHA McCULLOCH-WILLIAMS

Copyright, 1906, by P. C. Eastment

Margaret came from the orchard whistling cheerily, a heaped basket of jewel red apples poised carefully upon her bare brown head. Miss Prudence Heathcote, her aunt and guardian, frowned at the whistling, but had to smile a bit when Margaret broke out: "Now, Prudence, precious, come at me with the saying about whistling girls and crowing hens! I know you hate my sole musical accomplishment, but this day is enough to set a graven image whistling, even dancing, if it was of anything softer than granite. You ought to be out in it. The orchard is a place enchanted. I didn't know until now things so prosaic as apple gathering and cider making could set themselves to music."

"H-m!" Miss Prudence said. "H-m! May I ask if Jimmy Blair is out there, as he promised to be?"

"Of course! A gentleman keeps his promises, doesn't he?" Margaret answered, tossing her head, but flushing in spite of herself.

Again Miss Prudence said "H-m!" There appeared to be nothing else to say. But after two breaths she got up and moved toward the kitchen, sighing out: "And of course he'll be here to dinner. That means cooking things. Men do have such atrocious appetites."

"I'm glad they do," Margaret retorted shamelessly. "I've got one to match anybody. Oh, Aunty Prue, do make a potato pudding! Make it very rich and have lots of thick, sweet, real lemon sauce."

"Go 'way, you baggage!" Miss Prudence said over her shoulder. "Who told you what Jimmy likes best? I've the greatest mind to make dried apple pies, just to see if he would know the difference," smiling at Margaret as she spoke the last sentence.

Margaret blushed very red and began to pout. "You mean Jimmy is so gone on me he's not in his right mind," she said. "But you're all wrong, Aunty Prue. I—I don't believe he—he cares for me a bit—hardly. Not that way, at least. All this week he's been as kind as could be, but distant—as if he was afraid I wouldn't understand."

"Then there's mischief afoot, what sort I've got to find out," Miss Prudence said vigorously, her hand on the door knob, "for if ever any lad was clean out of his head, clean idiotic about a chit of a thing, it was Jimmy about you, all last week and all the weeks before it, since you came to stay with me."

"Mischief afoot, but where?" she kept mentally repeating to herself as she whisked about the trim kitchen, her brows puckered, her eyes introspective. On the surface she could see nothing. Nobody had openly any right or reason to be interfering between the pair. Jimmy was an orphan the same as her Peggy. Moreover, he had never had the least shadow of an entanglement. True, various and sundry young women had been setting their caps at him—pretty caps, modestly set—but he had overlooked them all — unless it were—Miss Prue gave a great start. There was the root of the trouble; its name, Videlia Bane. Jimmy had rather made up to her in the weeks just before Peggy came. Now that she thought of it, he had squired Della to church two Sundays running, besides buying many things for her at the strawberry supper and fair. And Della, it was well known, wanted to marry and settle herself. She had three younger sisters crowding her in the home nest. Naturally she would do what she could to hold Jimmy, the best chance in all Easton town.

But how she had done it Miss Prudence could not fathom, although she studied the problem almost to the detriment of her dinner. She sat down to it still puzzled. Jimmy greeted her and the dinner rapturously and talked a great deal of his appetite and of many other things, but somehow did not eat with his usual zest, although he made a fair meal. Nobody with a palate could help doing that with such things as Miss Prudence set before him. Jimmy assured Margaret more than once that if such cooking ran in the family her future husband was the luckiest fellow alive.

"I think so too. That's why it's so provoking not to have him come along," Margaret said at last. "Only think, Jimmy, I'm almost twenty-one and have never had a real business beau! Isn't it shameful when Aunty Prue is going to will me all her pretty dishes and the Heathcote silver? Fancy an heiress without a sweetheart!"

"Such destitution is painful—so painful I hardly believe it exists," Jimmy said, turning away his head, then breaking inconsequently into talk of something else.

Miss Prudence, watching him, saw that his teeth had set before he could speak. Of the seeing came enlightenment in part. She meant to make it whole before she was much older. So as soon as dinner was over she sent Margaret upon an errand and herself drew Jimmy on to the barn with a pretext of wanting his advice as to the new hayloft and stalls. She was a straight speaking person, womanly, withal courageous. So as soon as they were inside the stall space she wheeled upon Jimmy, asking plumply, "What cock and bull story has Della Bane told you?"

"Who said she had told me anything?" Jimmy retorted. "Besides, she didn't need to. My eyes are fairly trustworthy."

"Sure of it?" Miss Prudence asked. "If you are, please to tell me what they have told you about my Peggy. I know you think you've got a grievance—no, not exactly a grievance, but a hurt."

"It is a hurt, but I don't blame her for it. I can't—she—she must have met the other fellow first," Jimmy said, turning away his head. Miss Prudence stamped her foot. "What other fellow?" she demanded.

Jimmy answered miserably:

"The one I saw her kissing and hugging Saturday out under the chestnut trees. She was all dressed up, in white and low necked, and they were carrying on like mad, else I shouldn't have seen them. I—I started to go up when I heard her talking, but after I caught a word or two sneaked away, like a whipped hound."

"No doubt," Miss Prudence said angrily, "but tell me this—where did you sneak to? Went straight home, I reckon, and after supper over to the Banses. That right?" Jimmy nodded. "Now tell me straight what Miss Della told you and how she came to do it."

"I won't!" Jimmy said stoutly. "I'm no telltale. I'd seen enough, and Della saw it had made me mighty miserable. All she did was to set me right—let me know Margaret was"—

"Playing, play acting with her?" Miss Prudence broke in. "Did she tell you that—tell you how the girls have been practicing against the church sociable? Della was dressed up in man's clothes and my Peggy playing sweetheart to her. I know. I was there, up on the big dead trunk, holding the play book and laughing fit to kill. Now, don't you wish you had sneaked the other way?"

"You—you don't mean there isn't any other fellow?" Jimmy cried incredulously.

Miss Prudence sniffed. "Of course I don't mean any such thing. There are twenty other fellows—bound to be with a girl like Margaret—but I don't believe she likes any of them best unless it is the very chucklehead I'm talking to right now."

"Miss Prudence!" Jimmy ejaculated, then caught her tight in his arms. He was shaking like a leaf, as near to laughing as to crying.

Thus Margaret came upon them and called out roguishly: "Is it to be really Uncle Jimmy? Well, I don't mind so long as we have you in the family."

"It's to be anything in the world you say," Jimmy said, darting to her. Then as he caught both her hands and laid them against his breast he turned a beaming face upon Miss Prudence, saying: "Peggy is sweet enough, pretty enough, for anything, but when it comes to looking like an angel to a man in trouble, why, she'll never be in it with our Aunty Prue."

The Cause of It.

"In a village which is a suburb of New Bedford," said Mark Twain, "a friend of mine took me to the dedication of a town hall and pointed out to me a bronzed, weather beaten old man over ninety years old. 'Do you see any passion in that old man?' said he to me. 'You don't? Well, but I can make him a perfect volcano to you. I'll just mention to him something very casually.' And he did. Well, that old man suddenly gave vent to an outburst such as I had never heard in my life before. I listened to him with that delight with which one listens to an artist. The cause of it was this: When that old man was a young sailor he came back from a three year cruise and found the whole town had taken the pledge. He hadn't, so he was ostracized. Finally he made up his mind he couldn't stand ostracism any longer, and he went to the secretary and said, 'Put my name down for that temperance society of yours.' Next day he left on another three year cruise. It was torture to him to watch his men drinking and be pledged not to. Finally he got home. He got a jug of liquor, ran to the society and said, 'Take my name right off.' 'It isn't necessary,' said the secretary. 'You never were a member; you were blackballed.'"

Concerning Oranges.

An eminent Japanese bacteriologist has shown that the acids of lemons, apples and other fruits—citric acid, malic acid—are capable of destroying all kinds of disease germs. Cholera germs are killed in fifteen minutes by lemon juice or apple juice, and typhoid fever germs are killed in half an hour by these acids, even when considerably diluted. If you squeeze a lemon into a glass of water containing cholera germs and let it stand fifteen or twenty minutes you may drink the water with impunity, as the germs will be dead. These juices will kill other disease germs. Instead of telling a man to have his stomach washed out we can now tell him to drink orange juice, which will cleanse the stomach as thoroughly as a stomach tube, provided it be not a case of gastric catarrh. If we have to deal with gastric catarrh, in which there is a large amount of tenacious mucus adhering to the walls of the stomach, a stomach tube to dislodge it is required, but in ordinary cases of biliousness, foul tongue, bad breath, sick headache and nervous headache a fruit diet is a wonderful purifier.

Lightning Conductors.

The efficiency of lightning conductors is fairly well attested by the freedom of the great cathedrals and tall spired churches from injury. St. Paul's and Westminster abbey, for example, are well protected and serve to safeguard a large area surrounding them. Experience in the navy is to the same effect. In former days, before conductors were employed, there was an annual charge for damage to his majesty's ships by lightning. Between 1810 and 1815, according to Sir W. Snow Harris, thirty-five sails of the line and thirty-five frigates and smaller vessels were completely disabled. That item has now vanished from the votes.—London Telegraph.

DORAN — HARDEN. — In Belleville, on Saturday, June 30, 1906, by Rev. Fr. Twomey, Florence W., only daughter of Mrs. Wm. Harden, and Mr J. W. Doran, of Paterson, N. J., formerly of Belleville.

The man who "Looks into the Eye" is coming to Belleville.—At Allan McFee's.

Found Dead At Foot Of Stairs.

SHOCKING ACCIDENT DISCOVERED BY POLICE AT AN EARLY HOUR THIS MORNING—MR. W. J. McCAMON, POPULAR LAWYER AND POLITICIAN, MET AWFUL AND UNTIMELY DEATH.

Universal regret was expressed this morning when it became known that Mr. W. J. McCamon, lawyer, politician, society man and good fellow, had been found dead. It hardly seemed possible to many people, for they had seen him on the street about 11 o'clock last night, when he looked the picture of health. However, the sad tale was only too true, and enquiry elicited the following facts:

A STARTLING DISCOVERY.

About three o'clock this morning Sergeant Hayes and Police Constable Snider, whilst making the round of the back yards on Front street made a discovery which startled them greatly. They were at the time at the rear of the Robertson block, east side of Front street, at the back stairs in the centre of the building when they saw a man lying at the foot of the stairs. Upon investigation it was ascertained that the man was dead and it was none other than Mr. W. J. McCamon, the well-known barrister of this city.

The officers did not then make any further examination, but immediately called Dr. Yeomans, coroner, to the scene.

The Doctor, upon examination, found that death had resulted from the neck being broken. There were also some abrasions about the face, but these were not of a serious nature

It was plain how Mr. McCamon had met such an untimely death.

HOW THE ACCIDENT HAPPENED.

He had gone up into the block above named from the Front St. entrance and upon reaching the landing at the top of the first floor had evidently taken a few steps ahead and fallen down the back stairs. These stairs are partially protected by a door which comes against the second step, and the door was ajar, thus forming no protection whatever to a person who might accidentally go against it. The unfortunate man evidently fell from the top of the stairs to the bottom.

NO INQUEST NECESSARY.

Dr Yeomans, after viewing the remains and looking over the place where the accident occurred, deemed it unnecessary to hold an inquest, as there was no doubt that the deceased had met his death in the manner described above.

The news of the unfortunate and terrible affair spread fast and at an early hour in the morning and even during the day many citizens viewed the place where the accident occurred.

As soon as it was decided not to hold an inquest the remains were taken to Tickell & Sons undertaking establishment and prepared for burial.

A RESPECTED AND POPULAR MAN.

Deceased was not only well known in this city, where he was universally respected, but also throughout the county. He was born in the village of Tweed, in this county, some 45 years ago, where he spent his boyhood days. When a young man he came to this city and, entering the office of Mr. P. J. M. Anderson, now County Attorney, studied law. Soon after passing his examination and being admitted to the Bar he was for some time in partnership with Police Magistrate Flint. Of late years he had conducted his own office in the McAnnany block. By close attention to business, and being obliging and courteous, Mr. McCamon had built up a lucrative legal business.

Deceased was a Liberal in politics and always took an active part in political affairs. At the time of his death he was President of the West Hastings Liberal Association. Upon more than one occasion his name had been brought forward as a candidate for political honors, but he invariably declined.

In the Board of Trade Mr. McCamon took an active interest and at the recent annual election of officers was elected Secretary of the Board, a position which he most acceptably filled.

In the year 1898 Mr. McCamon was a member of the City Council, being one of the representatives from Coleman Ward, and for some years he was one of the License Commissioners for West Hastings being at one time chairman of the Board.

In fraternal society work the deceased took an active part, and was a member in high standing of several. He was a member of Moira Lodge, A.F. & A.M. and a Knight Templar; Past Grand Councillor of the Chosen Friends, and also Past Chief Councillor of the same society. At the time of his death he was treasurer of the local court. He was also a member of the A. O. U. W., and of the Independent Order of Foresters. In all these societies Mr McCamon was a valued member and his counsel was often sought.

Some years ago the deceased married Miss Downs, of this city, who survives. The union was childless. The deceased's parents survive.

SENTENCE HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Woman Pleads to Be Allowed to Serve Terms For Both.

Woodstock, July 6.—Five years in Kingston Penitentiary was the sentence yesterday meted out to Alfred Nowell, the self-confessed burglar, arrested on Sunday morning.

The authorities called Mrs. Nowell into the dock and sent her to the same institution for two years and six months on a charge of receiving stolen property, knowing it to be stolen. Nowell took his sentence like a stoic, but was moved to tears when his wife was sentenced and broke down.

Nowell stood up valiantly for his wife, and pleaded with the magistrate not to sentence her, while the young woman asked to be allowed to serve both her husband's term and her own, a period of seven and a half years. This was denied her.

On six separate charges Nowell elected to be tried summarily by the magistrate, and pleaded guilty. He was sentenced on each count, the terms to run concurrently.

Was Glad to Be Saved.

Windsor, July 6.—Edward Gough, whose home is in Toronto, and who travels for a Chicago house, attempted to drown himself here Wednesday night by jumping into the river from the Michigan Central dock, but shouted for help as soon as he struck the water. Watchman Girardin fished Gough out of the water. He cried for joy at being saved. He was despondent as a result of habits he feared he could not overcome.

Cholera at Manila.

Washington, July 6.—The War Department was advised yesterday of the virulent outbreak of cholera in Manila.

For the week ending July 4, there were 116 cases and 99 deaths. For the 24 hours ending at 8 o'clock in the morning of July 5, there were 12 cases and 5 deaths in the provinces. During the same period in Manila there were 29 cases and 23 deaths.

Killed While Asleep at Crossing.

Windsor, July 6.—Celestine Soulier was ground to pieces under a Canadian Pacific train a few miles from here on Tuesday night. He drove home from the city, and must have been asleep as he approached the crossing. The train struck the end of his rig, throwing him under the train. He was 38 years of age and leaves a widow and a daughter.

The New Life-Saver.

Victoria, B. C., July 6.—Capt. J. C. Voss, who recently established a world-wide reputation for navigating an Indian war canoe around the world, is the man to whom the new Government lifeboat at Esquimalt has been given in charge. Voss will make his own choice of a crew.

Butchery In War.

In one of the Du Guesclin's victories so many English were taken captive that even the humblest soldier among the French had one or more prisoners. The victors, however, fell to quarreling, and, ill feeling becoming rife in the French army in consequence of these quarrels over the prisoners, Du Guesclin ordered all the captives to be butchered, and the brutal order was carried out.

Political Speeches.

Some people think, for instance, that political speeches do not matter. Political speeches matter far more than the acts of parliament which they introduce. Men care less even about what is being done than about why it is being done. The spirit in which a thing is effected is of far more practical importance even than the thing itself. This can be tested by the simple experiment in social life of removing a gentleman's hat for him, first in one spirit, then in the other. If you get rid of all the talk about practical politics (talked by tired men with £10,000 a year) and really look impartially at the history of human society you will see that collisions have arisen far more from insults than from injuries. Some of my imperialist friends, for instance, tell me that because I think South Africa a nuisance to England therefore I should permit Germany to pluck it from us in war. This is like saying that because I think a top hat ugly and uncomfortable I should let another man knock it off in Piccadilly. No doubt it is uncomfortable. But why should he knock it off? Who is he? I wonder.—G. K. Chesterton in London News.

STORMY IN RUSS DOUMA.

Cossack Radical Beaten by Police—M. Alladin Warns Ministers In Fiery Speech—The Bialystok Report.

St. Petersburg, July 6.—There was a stormy scene at the opening of the Lower House of Parliament yesterday. M. Sidelnikoff, a radical Cossack member of the House, was beaten while in the hands of the police Wednesday night, after having been arrested for exhorting a crowd of people to resist the police, who were breaking up one of the mass meetings which are becoming more frequent. When M. Sidelnikoff was searched at police headquarter a revolver was found in his possession.

He was released later in the evening. When the House opened yesterday M. Sidelnikoff gave his version of the affair, and proposed that the House interpellate the Minister of the Interior, asking him what measures had been taken to punish the policeman who were guilty of assaulting a member of Parliament and to prevent a recurrence of such incidents in the future.

M. Alladin, the fiery Danton of the House, declared that he expressed the views of the group of toil when he announced that if such an incident recurred no Ministers would be permitted to speak in the House and he could not even answer for their personal safety.

The Minister's Reply.

Interior Minister Stolypin gave the House his personal assurance that ample measures would be taken to assure the inviolability of members, and if the police were guilty in this case they would be punished.

President Mouromtzeff then administered a severe rebuke to the members of the left for lowering the dignity of the House by such a demonstration.

The interpellation eventually was adopted unanimously.

After recess Mr. Schtepkin presented the Biolystok report. In a speech he emphasized the inefficiency of M. Stolypin's measures, in the early stages, to stop the rioting and said that Police Lieut. Sheromtleff and other organizers of the riot in Bialystok acted under secret inspiration and influences more powerful than the Minister, thus plainly indicating Gen. Trepoff, although his name was not mentioned.

Permitted Killing.

M. Schtepkin declared that the evidence obtained proved the following facts:

1. That no religious race prejudice existed to warrant the measure.
2. That the rioting was deliberately prepared by accusing the Jews of being revolutionists.
3. That the day of the riot was announced in advance by the authorities.
4. That the administration and the troops acted lawlessly in permitting the systematic killing of peaceful Jews, including women and children, under the guise of suppressing a revolution, and that six of the military and civil authorities not only assisted, but participated in the murders, tortures and robbery.

In conclusion M. Stchepekin presented the recommendation of the commission that Interior Minister Stolypin and War Minister Rudiger be interpellated, asking that if steps have been taken to prosecute the guilty civil and military officials.

Machias, Me., July 6.—The loss of four men and of the three masted schooner Ella G. Elks of Rockport, Me., were reported in a message sent here yesterday by Capt. W. A. Breen, the schooner's only survivor. The schooner was wrecked late Wednesday on Libby Island, in Machias Bay, while bound from New Bedford, Mass., to Windsor, N. S. The dead: E. Brown, St. John, N. B., mate; W. Duplissis, steward; C. Johnson, seaman; unknown seaman.

The schooner struck the submerged ledges, her hull was pierced and she at once began to break up.

Cotton Spinners Strike.

Montreal, July 6.—The cotton mill at Magog is closed again. After a meeting the men Wednesday to the number of 400 walked out. The strikers demand an increase of 20 per cent. in wages, recognition of the union, and that all agreements signed be null. The company consider these demands excessive and will resist them.

Negro Boy to Hang.

Baltimore, Md., July 6.—Wm. Lee, a colored youth of 17 years, was tried in the Circuit Court here yesterday and sentenced to be hanged in Somerset County for criminal assault on two white women six weeks ago. He confessed his crime.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDED

Mr. Emmerson's Bill Passes the House of Commons.

Amendments In Direction of Public Ownership, and Two-Cent-a-Mile Passenger Fare, Voted Down — Mr. Aylesworth of Opinion That We Will Never See Public Ownership, But Mr. Borden Thinks It May Come Within Their Lifetime.

Ottawa, July 6.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier, announced yesterday in the House that the report of the committee on the revision of the rules would be considered on Monday, thus disposing of the hope that Parliament would prorogue this week.

Replying to Mr. Borden, Mr. Aylesworth said the bills relating to the election laws and independence of Parliament had been referred to a special committee, which had failed to meet. They were too late to be dealt with this session.

Subsidies For Mail Carrying.

Mr. Fielding submitted a statement showing the annual return made by various railways which have received subsidies to the Dominion by way of service in carrying mails, etc. This commenced in 1901 with $700 and grew to $18,20.. last year, and made a total of $32,072.

Railway Act Amendment.

In committee again on Mr. Emmerson's bill to amend the railway act, Mr. Lancaster moved an amendment embodying the conclusions of the special committee on his bill. The amendment provided that trains may run up to a speed of ten miles an hour over level crossings in thickly peopled parts of cities, towns and villages, but if they desire to exceed that speed they must protect the crossings in a manner satisfactory to the Railway Commision. The amendment was adopted and the date of coming into force was fixed as Jan. 1, 1908.

An amendment by Mr. Emmerson was accepted relating to regulation of express charges, providing that it shall not apply to existing contracts prior to Nov. 1, 1906, or until such time as the Railway Commission may determine.

Mr. Lancaster appealed for the insertion of an amendment giving townships, as well as cities, towns and villages, control over the erection of telephone poles, etc., on their highways.

Mr. Emmerson was willing to give control of villages, "incorporated or otherwise." He was willing to go far enough to give control in settled communities, but he did not think it fair to require a telephone company to get such permission in large, unsettled regions.

Mr. Lalor supported the amendment, which was not disposed of when the House rose at 1 o'clock.

Mr. Emmerson's Amendment.

At the afternoon session, Mr. Emmerson proposed an amendment, so as to make the section apply to "any city, town or village incorporated or otherwise."

Mr. Lancaster (Lincoln and Niagara) moved to strike out the words "city, town or village," making the section apply to any municipality.

The Emmerson amendment was adopted by a vote of 66 to 25.

Mr. Staples (Macdonald) moved an amendment conferring power upon the several provinces to expropriate existing telephone trunk line systems.

W. F. Maclean (South York) supported the amendment.

Appeals to Aylesworth.

Mr. Stockton opposed the amendment. He appealed for an opinion to the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Aylesworth opposed it. He did not regard public ownership as a practical question. It was something unlikely to ever happen. The Bell Co. had been declared for the advantage of Canada. Why could not Manitoba start a system of her own

W. F. Maclean warned the Minister that the belief in the principles of public ownership was growing with wonderful rapidity.

R. L. Borden submitted that both he and Mr. Aylesworth might live to see the advent of public ownership. He was not prepared to admit the constitutional difficulties suggested, although it presented a difficult question.

The amendment was lost.

Maclean's Amendment.

The bill itself was then reported, and upon its third reading W. F. Maclean (South York) proposed an amendment fixing a maximum passenger rate of two cents a mile.

Mr. Emmerson opposed the amendment.

The amendment was lost on a vote of 8 to 105.

Interchange of 'Phone Business.

Dr. Sproule, seconded by Mr. Maclean, proposed an amendment compelling full interchange of business on terms to be fixed by the Railway Commission between all telephone companies.

This was lost by 21 to 86.

Mr. Emmerson's bill to amend the Railway Act was then passed.

Militia Estimates Pass.

The House in supply passed the estimates for the Department of Militia and defence.

Canadian Hall Mark.

Ottawa, July 6.—The Commons banking and commerce committee yesterday morning passed the Senate bill respecting the sale and marking of manufactures of gold and silver, i.e., to establish a Canadian Hall Mark.

Retail Merchants Feel Restraint.

Ottawa, July 6.—Yesterday morning a large delegation, representing the Retail Merchants' Association, waited upon the Premier, Mr. Paterson and Mr. Aylesworth and asked that they be relieved from the existing law under which the retail merchants could be held guilty of conspiracy for restraint of trade because they met in conference with wholesale merchants to discuss prices. Sir Wilfrid Laurier assured the deputation that the Government would give the matter most careful consideration.

Mr. Hendrie's Will.

Hamilton, July 6.—It is said that the late William Hendrie's estate is valued at about $3,000,000. The four sons are the executors of his will.

Exporters.

Shipping cattle sold at $4.70 to $5 per cwt., one load bringing $5.05 per cwt. Bulls sold at $3.50 to $4.25 per cwt. There was a light supply of export cattle, and it was well that it was so, as few were wanted.

Butchers.

Prime butchers' cattle were scarce, and picked lots sold at about $4.80; in fact, one load brought that price. Loads of good butchers' sold at $4.50 to $4.60; medium at $4.35 to $4.45; common mixed loads at $4 to $4.25; stall-fed cows, finished on grass, sold at $3.75 to $4; canners and grass cows, at $2.50 to $3.25 per cwt.

Feeders and Stockers.

Harry Murby reports receipts as being more liberal with a little more life in the trade. Prices were easier all round, the common to medium classes suffering the most, having declined from 25c to 50c per cwt., and even the best classes, for which there is a fair demand, suffered slightly. Mr. Murby bought 250 this week, as follows: Steers, 900 to 1050 lbs, at $3.80 to $4; steers, 800 to 900 lbs, at $3.70 to $3.90; best stockers, 500 to 700 lbs, at $3.25 to $3.60; common stockers, $2.50 to $3 per cwt.

Milch Cows.

Between 40 and 50 cows were offered on Wednesday and Thursday, and as a few cows were wanted by a Montreal dealer, trade was a little more active, but prices did not advance very much. Prices ranged from $30 to $48 each for the bulk.

Veal Calves.

About 300 veal calves were on sale. Prices, as usual, were good, considering the quality of the bulk. Prices ranged from $4 to $6.50 per cwt.

Sheep and Lambs.

The run of sheep and lambs was large. Sheep sold at about the same quotations as on Tuesday, but lambs sold at lower quotations. Export sheep sold at $4 to $4.25; bucks at $3.50. shearling lambs or light butchers' sheep at $5 per cwt; lambs sold at $6.50 to $7.50; the bulk sold at about $7 per cwt.

Hogs.

There was a fair delivery, and prices were quoted 10c per cwt. higher. Mr. Harris quoted selects at $7.00 and lights and fats at $7.35 per cwt.

TRAIN WRECKS DEPOT.

Crowds of Passengers Have a Very Close Call.

Niagara Falls, July 7.—A big freight wreck occurred about 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon at Niagara Falls Station.

A heavy freight was coming at a good rate of speed from Buffalo and when crossing Third street just east of the depot train shed, the third car on the train mounted the rail at a frog and with seven other cars following plunged into the train shed that was filled with passengers waiting for different trains.

Had not Mr. Weber, city fire commissioner, who was on Third street at the time, promptly cried out a timely warning to the crowd of passengers someone would certainly have met instant death, as the derailed cars plunged in all directions through the shed.

The waiting passengers ran in all directions to places of safety from the tumbling cars, that pulled the long train shed roof and supports down almost on the heels of the flying passengers. Some of the derailed cars crashed into the northwest wing of the station proper, demolishing the stone wall of the conductors' room.

The hundred or more passengers and train crew escaped without a scratch. grow for several days is indicated by despatches recording injuries believed to be fatal.

THE CAUSE OF A TRAGEDY.

Duncan McArthur Left a Letter Explaining a Terrible Deed.

Peterboro, July 7.—"To Don Fraser goes all the property, real estate and personal, and pay all debts, for there is no living here for man nor beast with woman, for she kills all the offspring she has, so endeth this life.

(Signed) "Duncan McArthur."

"I will follow later—8.15; woman died first, 7.40 a. m. Pay Hugh Logan $70 value on note."

This letter, produced at the inquest on the death of Duncan McArthur and his wife, found dead at Kirkfield, explains the motive the man had in view in shooting his wife, and later taking his own life. It gives a glimpse into the inner life of a childless home, which was on the surface a happy one.

McArthur was 35 years of age, and was a prosperous farmer. Having attended a picnic with his wife on the holiday, he committed murder and suicide the next morning.

An Auditor's Duties.

At the last general meeting of the Trust & Loan Company of Canada in London, the chairman, Sir Vincent Caillard, remarked; "We should, of course, depend upon our auditors, who would not let us do anything that is not absolutely safe and within the power of the board." A different conception of the auditor's place seems to rule among Government members at Ottawa, remarks the London Free Press. It will be recollected how the late Auditor-General, Mr. J. Lorne McDougall, was hounded because he dared to point out instances of wrong-doing with regard to the public accounts. The Finance Minister, Hon. Mr. Fielding, called Mr. McDougall "fussy" and "overmeddlesome" when he undertook to check the passage of accounts which would not bear close scrutiny or that exceeded largely the amount appropriated. There was no feeling of "dependence upon the auditor" to keep things moving aright, but on the contrary a sense of resentment at his interference with deals which were not in accordance with the recognized methods of clear procedure.

The Government was anxious to drive Mr. McDougall out of the office, and put in a more supple instrument. At last he agreed to retire upon a suitable pension. He was not destined to enjoy a very long period of pleasant leisure, however, being stricken with a serious physical collapse at Quebec, where he is stopping. No doubt the nervous wear and tear to which he was for years subjected had much to do with his breakdown in health. An able accountant, and a most scrupulously honorable man, Mr. McDougall was regarded by Canadians of all political parties as the right kind of an official as Auditor-General. While he was on duty the public could rely upon him to frustrate any unfair attempt upon the treasury, or at least to expose it for the information of Parliament.

That there was great need for such an independent and skilful official was testified to by the late Alexander Mackenzie in his famous letter to a friend (quoted in Mr. Ross' biography), wherein he said he, as Premier, had to lie on his arms like a sentinel to prevent the treasury from being raided by friends of the Government, and its enemies joining them, seeking remuneration they had not earned and offices they were unfit for. Mr. Mackenzie appointed Mr. McDougall, an old Liberal, in whom all had perfect confidence, as a safeguard to the finance department, a faithful watch-dog who would keep those dishonest friends at bay.

It remained, after all the years of Conservative rule, for another Liberal Government to cast him down and to give as a reason for his dismissal, that he was too "fussy" over items of account which the Ministers desired to "rush through" in the interest of friends and supporters.

We cannot but think that the sentiment voiced by the Trust & Loan president far better expresses the idea of what an auditor should be, and the degree of confidence to be reposed in him, than the opinion of Hon. Mr. Fielding, that an auditor who makes trouble by pointing out derelictions or attempted embezzlements, should be "fired" in favor of a pliable accountant.

MOTHER.

(E. H. Sweet.)

How many buttons are missing today?
Nobody knows but mother.
How many playthings are strewn in her way?
Nobody knows but mother.
How many thimbles and spools has she missed?
How many burns on each fat little fist?
How many bumps to be coddled and kissed?
Nobody knows but mother.

How many hats has she hunted today?
Nobody knows but mother.
Carelessly hiding themselves in the hay,
Nobody knows but mother.
How many handkerchiefs wilfully strayed?
How many ribbons for each little maid?
How, for her care, can a mother be paid?
Nobody knows but mother.

How many muddy shoes all in a row?
Nobody knows but mother.
How many stockings to darn, do you know?
Nobody knows but mother.
How many little, torn aprons to mend?
How many hours of toil must she spend?
What is the time when her day's work will end?
Nobody knows but mother.

The commission appointed to investigate the South African war stores purchased has discovered that one firm of contractors, starting out without a cent of capital, made $600,000 on sales of $1,150,000. Evidently all the war-time fever that rages when the bugle sounds, is not the result of genuine patriotism overheated. War is always a good thing for some people. To the enterprising contractor who is not compelled to expose his skin on the firing line and who can make a hundred per cent. on sales to the Government, war, no doubt, is a perpetual delight. If there was less genuine graft associated with war there would probably be less excited patriotism.

A statistician who has been studying the comparative prevalence of serious crimes in several countries finds that the homicides per million of inhabitants are as follows; For Canada, three; England, ten; France, fourteen; the United States, 129. This includes all the degrees of homicide. The unenviable prominence of the United States in this particular is remarkable. The New England States alone—commonly esteemed a law-abiding region—have as many homicides in a year as the whole German Empire. And New England is quiet as compared with the South and the West. Canada's record is no doubt better now than it will be as population grows more dense. By comparison at least, it is now an enviable one.

PASTE FOR ROYALTY.

Blazing Gems Themselves Are Really Stored In Vaults of King's Bankers.

The visitor to the Tower of London who is permitted to inspect the Crown jewels seldom knows that a large proportion of the blazing gems are merely paste, and that, although the Tower might be considered a safe enough place, most of the famous stones are in reality stored in the vaults of the King's bankers, their places being taken by cleverly executed counterfeits in paste. The Koh-i-noor is never on exhibition, and some of the other stones are represented by proxy, though the famous ruby worn in his helmet by Henry when he invaded France, and which now blazes in the centre of the Maltese Cross in the crown made for Queen Victoria is shown.

It was the early custom to provide an ornate but inexpensive crown for the Queen Consort, and, though these circlets blaze with jewels, none of them are real. When Victoria was to be crowned Queen Regnant it was realized that it would never do to offer her paste, and a new crown was provided, for which stones were taken from the earlier masculine crowns.

With the exception of the Queen's crown and some few stones in other badges of royalty, the entire display is of paste, and yet shows the original stones, even the Imperial crown never having boasted real jewels.

Oddly enough, most of these paste jewels attract more appreciative comment than the few crowns set with genuine stones, and the sightseer goes on his way rejoicing or envious, according to his temperament, although any fashionable jeweler's store will display ten times the number of real precious stones.

Intrinsically the entire display is not worth more than a quarter of a million.

Stomach Troubles

Mrs Sue Martin, an old and highly respected resident of Faisonia, Miss., was sick with stomach trouble for more than six months Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets cured her. She says: "I can now eat anything I want and am the proudest woman in the world to find such a good medicine." To be had at R. Templeton and Co.'s Drug Store. Samples free.

Kentucky's Names.

Kentucky is known as the Corn Cracker State from a game bird enjoying the same name which was formerly found in great abundance in most parts of the state. It is also called the Blue Grass State, from the belt of land running through the center, in which this variety of grass grows to great perfection. In the early days of our history it was known as the Dark and Bloody Ground, being so termed by the Indians. It was then a debatable land between the Indians living north of the Ohio and those living in the mountains of Tennessee and Georgia, a sort of battleground for these tribes, which fact gave it the name long before it was settled by the whites.

Planets With Three Suns.

The people inhabiting the planets in the solar system of Gamma have no need of electricity, gas, oil or other kind of artificial light. In those favored worlds they have continuous daylight and probably have no idea of a land like ours which is alternately bathed in sunlight and plunged into darkness. The Gammaneau planets are so situated that as soon as one of their three suns begins to decline another appears in sight. Each of these three suns is of a different color—red, yellow and blue.

Price and Imagination.

Housewives are apt to judge the quality of groceries by the price paid for them. As an illustration of this a grocer tells the following story: "I had two qualities of flour—one fine and the other poor. One day I accidentally sold one for the other. My customers, who paid a high price for the poor quality, said that it had given entire satisfaction, while those who had received the fine flour for a low price complained of it, and a few returned it as unfit for use."

Affection.

Talk not of wasted affection! Affection never was wasted. If it enrich not the heart of another, its waters, returning back to their springs like the rain, shall fill them full of refreshing; that which the fountain sends forth returns again to the fountain.—Longfellow.

THE DUTY OF FORGIVENESS — GOLDEN TEXT IS: "AND FORGIVE US OUR DEBTS, AS WE FORGIVE OUR DEBTORS."

THE LESSON WORD STUDIES.

Note.—The text of the Revised Version is used as a basis for these Word Studies.

Verse 21. Then came Peter—Having spoken on occasions of stumbling, both external and internal, in the lives of his disciples, Jesus called their attention to the attitude which they themselves as his disciples should assume toward those who went astray into sin, that is, those who gave occasion for stumbling (verses 15-20). The suggestion of Jesus that they should first seek in every possible way to bring an erring brother to acknowledge and forsake his evil way prompted Peter to ask the question. How oft shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him?

Seven times—According to Rabbinical rules no one could ask forgiveness of his neighbor more than three times. Peter, prompted by a generous impulse, ventured to suggest one more forgiveness than twice the number permitted by the Rabbinical rule.

22. Seventy times seven — An infinite number of times is the real meaning of the answer of Jesus. The limit to forgiveness had already been pointed out by him in verses 15-17 of this chapter. The limit is fixed by the attitude of the one committing the wrong. An impenitent spirit on the part of the wrong-doer makes impossible even the first forgiveness, but where sorrow and repentance are found, there is to be no limit.

23. The picture given us in this verse is of an Oriental court, Governors. and farmers of taxes, and other officers of the king are summoned into the royal presence to give an account of their administration.

Servants — Literally bond-servants or slaves. So throughout the narrative. Every subordinate of an Oriental monarch is his slave.

24. Talents—Probably the Attic talent is here referred to, in which case the amount would be approximately $10,000,000.

25 Had not wherewith to pay — The printing of a word in italics, as the word "wherewith" is printed in this verse, indicates that the word does not occur in the original but is added to make the meaning clearer in English.

Commanded him to be sold, and his wife. and children—According to the cruel custom of the time.

26 Worshipped — Bowed down to him. An act of humble obeisance merely, not an act of worship in a religious sense.

Forgave him the debt—The sense of the word forgave is here "remitted."

28. Went and found—Possibly even hunting out his fellow-servant.

A hundred shillings — Literally a hundred denari. The denarius was worth about seventeen cents. In actual purchasing value, however, one hundred denari was equivalent to about three months' wages for an ordinary laborer. The amount of the indebtedness, therefore, for one who was apparently of equal rank with the tax collector who had squandered the fabulous sum of many millions, was very small, and payment of the sum quite within the range of possibility.

31. His fellow-servants — In reality the fellow-servants of both men.

Their lord—The King.

32. Called him—The man to whom he had remitted the immense debt.

Forgave — In the sense of remitted, as above.

34. Wroth—In a state of wrath or anger. The word is now archaic, that is, old and going out of use.

To the tormentors — Those whose business it was to inflict cruel punishment in accordance with the decrees of the king.

35 From your hearts—That is, fully and freely.

Proof in Belleville.

Mrs. Green, of East James street, has proven what Anti-Pill can and will do.

"I think Dr. Leonhardt's Anti-Pill is the best medicine I have ever known," says Mrs. A. V. Green. "For years I have suffered with constipation, and I got so bad at last that no ordinary dose of medicine would help me. I suffered with piles a great deal.

"I am a working woman and always very busy, and I got nothing to help me till I tried Dr. Leonhardt's Anti-Pill. I found this a very satisfactory remedy and can cheerfully recommend it to any who may be suffering as I did."

Right at home here in Belleville is this case, and Mrs. Green will cheerfully testify to anyone in earnest what she knows of Anti-Pill, the Twentieth Century Cure for Constipation.

ALMOST HOPELESS.

THE CONDITION OF THOUSANDS OF PALE, ANAEMIC GIRLS.

"Almost hopeless is the best way to describe the condition I was in about a year ago," says Miss Mamie Mannett, of Athol, N. S. "My health had been gradually giving way until I reached a condition when I feared I was sinking into chronic invalidism I was as white as a sheet, my blood apparently having turned to water. I had no appetite, suffered from headaches and dizziness, the least exertion would leave me breathless, and it appeared that I was going into a decline. I had seen Dr. Williams' Pink Pills highly recommended by the newspapers, and I decided to give them a trial. It was a fortunate day for me when I came to this decision, as the pills have not only restored my health, but have actually made me stronger than even I was before. I now have a good appetite, a good color, and new energy, and I am satisfied that I owe all this to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, which I cheerfully recommend to other pale, feeble ailing girls."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills quickly cured Miss Mannett, simply because they make the new, rich, red blood which enables the system to throw off disease, and brings robust health and cheerfulness to pale anaemic sufferers. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure bloodlessness just as surely as food cures hunger, and the new blood which the pills make braces the nerves and tones and strengthens every organ and every part of the body That is why these pills strike straight at the root of such common diseases as headaches, sideaches and backaches, kidney trouble, indigestion, neuralgia, rheumatism, St. Vitus' dance, paralysis, and the troubles from which women and growing girls suffer in silence. It has been proved in thousands of cases that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure after doctors and all other medicines have failed. But you must get the genuine pills with the full name, "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People," on the wrapper around each box All medicine dealers sell these pills or you can get them by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by addressing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Some Irish Spirits.

In The Monthly Review Lady Gregory has collected a number of stories of the belief in spirits shown by the inhabitants of islands of the Irish coast. These spirits seem to swarm, and are but rarely friendly to ordinary mortals, who, we are told, unlike the dwellers in "far-off barbarous England," are not trying to recover their belief in this cloud of witnesses, for they have never lost touch with them—this is the way in which the spirits are referred to. And this is how the islanders account for the origin of the mysterious people: "Fallen angels they are said to be. God threw a third part of them into hell with Lucifer, and it was Michael who interceded for the rest. And then a third part were cast into the air, and a third in the land and sea. And here they are all about us, thick as grass." The stories that Lady Gregory has collected about these fallen angels are most tantalizing. They never seem to lead anywhere, and the most promising break off when we long to know the end. What, we wonder, happened to the girl who died, but returned to the curate with her spirit-lover to be married? The curate performed the ceremony, but nothing further is recorded. As a rule, the spirits merely play impish tricks, such as stealing sticks, for they are great fighters, and they are unimaginative enough to dress like ordinary people.

A Judicial Reproof.

A counsel in the middle of his cross-examination was handed a telegram. "Halloa!" he said as he read it, "So-and-so has won the Metropolitan stakes." "Mr. A——," said the judge severely, "it is very unseemly that in the course of solemn judicial proceedings, where a man's liberty and reputation are at stake, you should be talking of the winner of a horse race. Er—by the way, does the telegram say what was second and third?"—Tatler.

The Workhouse Organ.

Notwithstanding that they have twice been told by the local Government Board that they consider the price excessive, the Edmonton Board of Guardians has resolved to pay £235 for an organ for the new workhouse chapel. A quantity of hymn-books are also to be bought at half-a-crown each.

Queer Postal Address.

A letter from Cornwall has just been delivered in High Wycombe (Bucks) with the simple address: "To the Sawmill that cuts up large elm, High Wycombe."

In Dresden 300 years ago "epicures" used to eat Venetian oysters that had been on the way three weeks.

ODE ON SOLITUDE.

Happy the man whose wish and care
A few paternal acres bound,
Content to breathe his native air
In his own ground.

Whose herds with milk, whose fields with bread,
Whose flocks supply him with attire,
Whose trees in summer yield him shade,
In winter fire.

Blest, who can unconcernedly find
Hours, days and years slide soft away;
In health of body, peace of mind,
Quiet by day.

Sound sleep by night, study and ease,
Together mixed, sweet recreation
And innocence, which most doth please,
With meditation.

Thus let me live, unseen, unknown;
Thus, unlamented, let me die,
Steal from the world, and not a stone
Tell where I lie.

—Alexander Pope.

FIRST AID BY DOGS.

How the Intelligent Animals Find the Wounded In Battle.

Two specially trained dogs and the ambulance section of the London Volunteer Electrical Engineers had a field night on Wimbledon Common on Saturday.

Long shafts of brilliant light swept the entire range of the common, and under these the Electrical Volunteers and the dogs groped their way through the bracken and conducted a search for men who were supposed to have been wounded in a battle fought along nearly the entire width of the common.

The dogs have been specially trained for ambulance service by Major E. Hautonville Richardson of Carnoustic, Forfarshire, and their duty is to find the wounded who have crawled under cover in places that human searchers might overlook, says The London Express.

One of the dogs is a collie, and the other a cross-bred retriever. Their outfit is complete. Bandages and dressings, and also a flask of stimulant, are carried on their backs, and round their necks are bells, which tingle loudly as they move.

When the word was given for the bearer sections to advance. Major Richardson and his dogs, accompanied by an Express representative, made for a thicket in the centre of the line of fight. Here the collie was loosed from its leash, and at the word, "Seek, laddie!" it sprang into the undergrowth and nosed among the dark bushes and long grass, moving a a rapid pace.

The jangling bell enable the dog to be followed easily. After several minutes, during which a considerable portion of the wood had been traversed, the bell suddenly ceased ringing, and a low whine from the collie proclaimed a "find." Hurrying to the spot, the major and his companion saw one of the "wounded" lying under a tree and the dog licking his face.

At a word from his master Laddie resumed his search, and soon led the way to another casualty, and the cry of "bearer company" brought the stretcher men up quickly. Then for some time the dog ran along without a halt. He plunged into a dense growth of bracken on the extreme left flank, but Major Richardson judged that this was too far away for any wounded to be found, and called him back.

The dog ignored the call, and, as no bell could be heard, the only course was to follow him. A few yards away he was discovered standing over two men, who were well hidden in the bushes.

The retriever as also tried with similar success.

Major Richardson said he had six dogs now in training. He did not take up any particular breed, but trained any kind of dog. Some of his dogs were put through a severe test with the Black Watch in Scotland by Gen. Tucker, and a board of officers, and they were quite satisfied with the result.

"I sold six dogs to the Russian Government for the war in Manchuria, and they did good service," he said. "I was also approached by Norway when there was the danger of war between that country and Sweden, and the Sultan of Turkey wishes me to supply dogs for his army.

"I want, however, the British War Office to take them up, and I believe they will do so."

The dogs cost about 60 guineas each.

Stenographer's English.

In some stenographic systems an arbitrary sign may stand for one, two, or even three words. Sometimes the mistranslation of one of these signs leads to funny results.

"The deed shocked the nation to the heart core" was what was said, and the typewriter evolved, "The dead shocked the notion to the hard car." "The rumor was but transient, though," was hardly recognizable as "The rammer was trains end through." A rear-end collision was evidently in that girl's mind.

"As manna fed the Jews," was ingeniously tortured by another young woman into "As mamma fed the jays." Yet she was a Sunday school teacher.

"Plays, creep and laughs, the innocent," crooned the man one day, mouthing the opening lines of some projected baby verses. When the typewriter tapped out "Plays craps and leaves the innocent," he scanned her visage closely.

He said, "The voice of Dr. Jocelyn was heard calling for assistance," and it came out, "The vice of Dr. Josh Lane was hard killing four assistants."

When "But she held Jake too dearly for that, and so—passed on" was dictated, and it came out, "But she held jacks, two, drawing for that, and so passed one," would it have been unjust to credit the girl at the machine with an elementary knowledge of gambling?—Success.

Clock Not Crazy.

This story is told of Dan Leno, the late idol of the London music hall stage. His mind failed, and he was confined in a private asylum. Soon after this he got up an argument with one of the attendants about the correctness of the clock. "That clock's wrong," he said. "No, sir, the clock is quite right." "I tell you it's wrong." "No, sir, it's quite right." "Then, if it's right, what's it doing here?"

LITTLE BELL BIOGRAPHIES

Chopin

FREDERIC-FRANCOIS CHOPIN, born at Warsaw 1810, died 1849, stands alone as a composer and as a pianist. Unlike his great predecessors, his life from boyhood up was devoid of incident. He was celebrated, but not mighty. He had no failures and no triumphs. Yet in one department of music he remains the unrivalled master of the modern world. Although he never essayed the larger modes of composition, save the sonata and the concerto, he is unequalled in the dance forms—mazurkas, valses, polonaises—and in some other short forms, such as the etude and nocturne. From among these it is hard to choose any that are popular, although when heard they are greatly admired. They are all pure, sweet, sentimental, full of refined emotion and peculiarly haunting melody.

Almost all his works were written for pianoforte solo. When he made his debut in Vienna at the age of 19, he was even then a finished virtuoso. But he was the very opposite of his contemporary, the mighty Liszt, or his brilliant countryman, Paderewski. They could make the piano thunder and roar, but Chopin made it cry—with indescribable sadness and beauty. To bring forth all poetic effects of his music he needed an instrument like

A correspondent writes; "How is it that, according to your paper, there were only 16 marriages registered with the City Clerk last month. Personally I know more marriages than that took place in this city in June." That's easy, old chap. Dead easy. The marriages were not registered by the ministers who performed them.

The excursion season is now on, and for the next two months a good many people will nearly live on the water. Fine thing, too. There is ozone and vitality in the air one breathes down on the bay.

We heard a misanthrope say once that it was the excursion season which kept Belleville people poor. They spent then, he said, all the money they saved during the rest of the year. We don't believe that. Anyhow, it's a good deal better for people to spend their money on the water than on some other things you might mention. Eh, what!

Perhaps the Whitney Government declines to give Belleville a new Normal school because they think all the masons will be busy working on the new drill shed, and there will be nobody to build the new school. It would be well to disabuse their minds in that respect. If the stone masons of Belleville were waiting for a job till the new drill shed was started they'd soon be short of money to pay their bills.

In the course of an excellent write-up of the late Cobourg camp, the Trenton Advocate has the following rather amusing bit;

"The Catholics, who were about five hundred strong this year were paraded to High Mass in Cobourg by the 16th band. A fine sermon was preached by Rev. Father Murray. Last year there were but few Catholics in the 49th, and No. 5 Company could only send one man. So, filled with proper pride for their company and regiment, twelve Indians, staunch Orangemen, from the Mohawk Reserve, turned out for Mass, unsolicited, and kept up the boast of the 49th, of never having a "skeleton" company. In itself this is nothing, but it shows the spirit of the militia."

SUBSIDIZED RAILWAYS.

SIR MACKENZIE BOWELL THINKS THEY SHOULD BE COMPELLED TO RUN.

Ottawa, June 6. — In the Senate yesterday, Sir Mackenzie Bowell urged that railways which had received Government subsidies should not be allowed to discontinue their service. A line had been subsidized from Madoc to Eldorado, and had been run until the ore gave out and then discontinued. The Grand Trunk refused to operate the line or to allow anyone else to do so.

Sir Richard Cartwright admitted the justice of the complaint and promised to look into the matter.

Married at Brandon.

The following, from a Brandon exchange, refers to a young lady who is a cousin of Mr. C. S. Clapp, of this city and niece of Mr. W. H. Vantassel, Front of Sidney;

At the residence of the bride's mother, Thirteenth St., a very pretty wedding took place on June 27th, when Miss Edith Winnifred Van Tassel was united in marriage to Mr. R. J. Henderson, of the Henderson Manufacturing Co., Winnipeg. The ceremony was performed by Rev. C. E. McIntyre, of the Brandon Methodist church. Miss Edna Van Tassel, sister of the bride, assisted the bride, while Mr. W. R. Strager assisted the groom. Two nieces, Lillian Ashley and Belle Morgan, attended as flower girls and strewed beautiful rose leaves in the path of the bride as she advanced to the altar, leaning on the arm of her uncle, Mr. T. M. Morgan.

The bride wore a bridal costume of cream silk colienne with a beautiful bolero of Irish lace over cream silk and carried a spray bouquet of beautiful roses and lily of the valley. The bridesmaid was attired in a becoming gown of figured silk over cream silk taffeta. She carried a bouquet of pink roses. After the ceremony a reception was held at the residence of the bride's parents. The young couple immediately left for Toronto and other eastern cities of the United States and Canada. The bride was the recipient of many handsome presents, among them being an elegant piano, a pearl crescent brooch from the groom and several gifts from the organizations of the Methodist church The groom also presented the bridesmaid with a gold ring set with pearls and the flower girls each with a pretty ring.

The Reason Why?

If you are not well there is a reason. If you do not get well there is a reason. The reason is probably the same in both instances, namely, that your system is so run down, that it is in no shape to either resist or throw-off disease.

The remedy is obvious:—Build up the constitution and nature will do the rest. As a system builder

THE FACTORIES' REPORT.

Child Labor In Shops Should Be on a Par With Factories—Necessity For Ventilation—Cure For Burns.

The reports of the inspectors of factories have been issued by the Department of Agriculture and embody much useful information and the results of a year's acute observation of economical conditions in the province. The inspectors reporting are Messrs. James T. Burke, Thomas Keilty, Arthur W. Holmes, John Argue, Miss Margaret Carlyle and Mrs. James R. Brown. A list of accidents reported during 1905 numbers 635, 39 of which were fatal. To the International Harvester Co. are credited 131 of the accidents.

Child labor receives considerable attention, and it is believed the law is being better observed in this respect. The administration of the truancy act is required at the same time, as it is no davantage to the child to escape the factory to run wild on the streets. One inspector considers that the age limit for shops, which is now ten, should be fourteen, the same as the factories.

Ventilation Required.

Ventilation and the removal of dust in dust-generating industries are treated as matters of chief importance. The law requires employers to protect the health of their workers in this respect, but it is stated that the workers themselves do not always co-operate. Catarrh of the respiratory organs is usually the first result of inhaling dust-laden air, and it paves the way for pulmonary disease. Dust particles gain access to the system through slight abrasions of the skin and cause malignant pustules, ragpickers' disease, glanders and affections of the eyes. Rhee, a Massachusetts physician, is quoted on the average life duration in that state. Factory workers live 36.3 years; craftsmen, 50.8; farmers, 65.3, and workmen without definite occupation, 47.4 years. An examination of the sources of supply of fresh air concludes that there are no decisive reasons for preference in the adoption of any of the three locations, near the ground, 25 to 40 feet above ground or from the roof.

Canners From Buffalo.

The importance of the growing canning industry is dwelt upon, and it is regretted that Canadian labor is not more prevalent, Pollacks, Italians and Swedes from Buffalo and Lockport do the work on piecework wages, and it is stated that many of the girls return with $200 to their homes as their season's savings. The conditions of housing and living of these workers is severely criticized. Overcrowding is reported. In one case sixteen females slept in a room ten by sixteen. It is recommended that a person should be solely employed in making up beds, and keeping them clean, in airing the rooms and such work. As it is, the beds are never made, the rooms are shut up tight all day, and the workers return at 8 at night to the rooms unchanged since they left at 6 in the morning. Filthy habits and want of sanitation are alluded to, and evidently there is room for improvement.

Some factories are in the habit of locking their doors during working hours. This is against the law, and must be stopped. The danger in case of fire and panic is obvious.

Under the act one hour must be given for the noon meal. Some prefer to take half an hour and get away half an hour earlier in the evening, but the inspectors take the position of enforcing the act.

Practical Suggestions.

Warning is given against storing coal, especially bituminous coal, near boilers. Other sources of spontaneous combustion are also indicated.

The bursting of emery and corundum wheels is mentioned, and frequent inspection urged, as well as the adoption of hoods as safeguards.

It is suggested that the plan adopted by Ottawa, of going systematically through the city, one street at a time, and compelling the erection of fire escapes where necessary should be applied to Toronto.

Insufficient staying of boilers is a point to dwell upon. People do not realize the danger, usually, as they would if they saw the weight actually suspended.

It is noted that manufacturers' generally do not consider it profitable to work long hours, and only in cases of necessity are overtime permits asked for.

In the construction of factory buildings from cement it is necessary from its non-porous quality to pay special attention to ventilation. This, with other features, is pointed out in the report.

A cure for burns is recommended as useful in factories and households generally. It is the discovery of Dr. Thierry of the Paris Charity Hospital. It is very simple, consisting of a saturated solution of picric acid. After bathing the burn, blisters do not form, and all pain is suppressed. The only inconvenience is the yellow stain, which may be removed with boric acid. A pound of acid in a barrel of water is the proportion used in the French foundries.

Relic Hunting Vandals.

The officials of the Education Department who went to visit the famous serpent mound in Otonabee Township, Peterboro' County, say they found the mound in a fairly well preserved condition, but that unless immediate steps are taken to preserve it, this interesting relic of bygone days will be entirely lost to posterity.

The mound is not being destroyed by the farmer who owns the land, but curiosity seekers from all over the country have commenced digging and tearing it up in hopes of finding Indian relics.

"If something is not done at once to protect it from these relic hunters, and from the plough of the farmer, which may desecrate it at any time, the mound will certainly be destroyed," said Mr. David Boyle.

Mr. Boyle points out that this serpent mound is the only one of its type in Canada. He does not accept the theory that the mounds of North America were the work of an extinct race of mound builders. "All evidence," he says, "goes to show that these mounds were built by the ancestors of our Indians, and mounds have been constructed by the Indians within historic times."

More money is lost by feeding hogs too long than by selling too early.

THE MICROSCOPE
Proves That Parasites Cause Hair Loss.

Nine-tenths of the diseases of the scalp and hair are caused by parasitic germs. The importance of this discovery by Prof. Unna, of the Charity Hospital, Hamburg, Germany, can not be over-estimated. It explains why ordinary hair preparations, even of the most expensive character fail to cure dandruff; because they do not, and they can not kill the dandruff germ. The only hair preparation in the world that positively destroys the dandruff parasites that burrow up the scalp into scales called scurf or dandruff, is Newbro's Herpicide. In addition to its destroying the dandruff germ Herpicide is also a delightful hair dressing.

HAS EARL GREY BLUNDERED?

Said to Have Recommended Royal Honors Without Consulting Cabinet.

Ottawa, July 7.—(Globe Special.)—Some of the honors recently conferred upon members of the Canadian civil service are said to have been bestowed, not as a result of recommendation from the Government, but because of the personal suggestion of Earl Grey himself.

If the rumor can be credited this action on the part of the Governor-General is resented by his advisers, who feel that in any matter affecting the Canadian civil service they are the parties solely entitled to make recommendations.

That the question has been considered by the Cabinet and that a strong remonstrance to the imperial authorities is contemplated, and, in fact, may have been already drawn up and forwarded, are also alleged.

'FRISCO FIRE LOSSES.

Over $100,000,000 in Cash Will Be Paid to Insured.

San Francisco, July 7.—One hundred and sixty-six settlements that have been effected by fire insurance companies indicate that in the business section of San Francisco more than $100,000,000 will be paid in claim to fire losers. The estimate is based on the adjustments made on losses that have already come before committees.

The average adjusted loss in the 166 instances mentioned is $84,325, the total payments being $14,000,000. The sound value of 166 properties is given at $19,000,000 by the adjusters. Consequently the reduction for earthquake damage and for all other causes in the adjustments is $5,000,000.

NAME ERASED FROM ROLLS.

Dr. Crichton Declared to Have Acted Unprofessionally.

Toronto, July 7.—The name of Dr. Alex. Crichton was yesterday erased from the register of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario. He will appeal to the law courts for redress through his solicitor, W. C. Kerr.

He was accused of "disgraceful conduct," in a professional sense, in issuing a circular purporting to have discovered a sure and immediate cure for grippe.

The case of Dr. L. E. Sheppard of this city, whose name was struck off the list several years ago, came up for reinstatement. The report went back for reconsideration.

Every day is a new life, every sunrise but a new birth.—Jordon.

HAMLIN GARLAND

COPYRIGHT, 1903, BY HAMLIN GARLAND

CHAPTER I.

NEARLY the entire boat load of passengers was jammed along the forward gates, ready to spring out upon the Jersey wharf, restive to reach the waiting trains, but quite apart from all these whose faces were set westward three people—a girl, a man nearing forty and a slim lad—lingered on the after deck as though loath to take their leave of the imperial city.

The resemblance of the monstrous hive of humankind to a height of land was so marked, so singular, that the girl remarked upon it, and the boy, a pale lad of seventeen, cried out in shrill staccato:

"Yes; but think of the real mountains we're going to climb!"

The girl did not speak for a moment, and when she did her voice was distinctly sorrowful. "I feel as though I were saying goodby to everything worth while."

"Including me?" asked her escort.

She did not smile, but her accent was kindly as she answered, "Yes, Wayne, including you."

"Oh, sis, you make me tired!" cried the boy. "Just as if going west were bidding goodby to everything!" He beat his thin chest. "I'm just beginning to live now. I'm glad to get away from the stuffy old town. I want to see something besides Fifth avenue and Central park."

Wayne Peabody laughed good naturedly down at the boy. "You wouldn't care if civilization did stop at the west bank of the Hudson river, would you?"

"I should say not. I'm tired of it all—the noise and the pavements and the heat and the wetness. I want to get out where the wolves and the cranes and the cowboys are; I want to hit the trail and find where father's camps were."

The girl spoke musingly. "It's singular, but I have a premonition of some dark fate—some vague sorrow. I never felt so before—not even on my trip to Egypt. If I don't come back I want you to note that I was forewarned. Let's go forward."

Peabody remarked in a low voice: "Louis is transformed already. It will do him all kinds of good to go west."

"I hope so," she replied rather drearily, "but he seems unwholesomely excited at the present moment."

"He'll get over that."

"I fear he will be disappointed. Father's trip was made nearly twenty-five years ago, when it was a really wonderful land."

"He is young. He will reimagine it."

The boy stood like some beautiful animal poised for a spring as the ferry shouldered its clumsy way into the Jersey dock. He was of less bulk than his strong, composed, medish sister, and his face was as dark, as mobile and as eager as hers was fair and impassive. Peabody experienced once again a twinge of keen regret that Ann had not some of her brother's radiant enthusiasm.

Surrounded by porters and wearing an air of command, Louis led the way to the sleeping car, impatient of his sister's deliberation. On one hip he carried a pair of large field glasses and over the other a costly camera, while half concealed cases of pencils and pads of drawing paper bulging from his pockets announced his artistic intention.

As the time for the train to start drew near Peabody strove to win some softer word from Ann, but she was not of those who manifest emotion. Her training and her temperament were alike opposed to easy expression. When he tried to take her hand a second time with eyes that entreated she recoiled.

"No, no! You have no right to expect that!"

He was no longer a boy, and he was bred to self control; therefore, though his voice trembled a little, he spoke quietly: "Goodby, Ann. Write every day, won't you?"

In a voice which chilled him she replied: "Every day is pretty often, but you will hear from me. Go and see mother, please. She will not say so, but she will be glad to have you come."

"Depend upon me," he said, lifting his hat. His bearded face betrayed no emotion, but his eyes were hot with pain and grief.

The girl on her part felt a sudden twinge of remorse as she left him there, a fine, strong, manly suitor, who uttered no complaint, though she wounded him. The twitching of his lips troubled her, but she did not relent. In her heart she said: "I can't help it. It isn't in me. He shouldn't ask it."

Louis threw himself flat on the couch in their stateroom and said boyishly: "Gee! We're off at last. Now let her whiz. This old train can't go fast enough for me."

Looking down at him at that moment, Ann's bosom swelled with an emotion almost maternal. "How thin he is," she thought, as her eyes took in his slight body. "I'll go. I'll do anything for him, if only he can grow strong and well."

She loved that slender lad and assumed for him a greater weight of care and hope and fear than for any other human being. He was so like his father—the soul restless as flame, the slender body racked, worn with endless enthusiasms, the burning, mesmeric eyes and the delicate mouth. All these she had known and valued in her father, and when the doctor seriously advised the Rocky mountains she readily gave up her own plans, and here and now she sat, rushing toward the west to a town repulsive to her, a place of emptiness and weariness, a social desert, where no one lived but her cousins, the Barnetts, to whose hospitable door they were bound as voyagers on a wide sea to a snug harbor. Without that home as a point of arrival Ann Rupert would have been in such uncertainty of mind as besets a sailor on a chartless sea.

She was making this abhorrent trip in order that her brother might thrive in his physical well being as well as in his art. He had recently determined on being an illustrator of wild animal books. "I'm going to study them at first hand," he repeated often, "the way Melborn Foster has done. And, besides, I want to illustrate father's journal." This journal, the record of a trip into the west made by Philip Rupert before his marriage, had come to be the most powerful influence in the lad's life. It was a worn little red book in which the father had written the daily happenings and impressions of his trip, and its discovery by Louis in a box of old papers had quite transformed his life. It had made him an American, filling him with a longing for the "Hesperian mountains," as the father called the romantic land he had seen but once, but whose splendor lived with him throughout the remainder of his short life.

As they sat at the table in the dining car Ann again listened indulgently to her brother's plans, and permitted him to order the dinner and assume all the manners of a grown man, honestly trying to conceal her own weariness of spirit, sincerely regretful of her bitter words on the ferry.

Louis was not weary. He eyed every man who came in, avid to discover some western trait, some outward sign of inward difference between himself and his companions, but could not. They were all quite commonplace business men, well dressed, close clipped and urbane of manner. Some of them were evidently salesmen going over to Philadelphia or out to Chicago, and they all ate long and with every evidence of enjoyment. Some of the women were young and pretty—students returning to the west for their summer vacations.

Once more in the privacy of her stateroom and looking out at the landscape reeling past, Ann sank back in her seat wholly dismayed. "What in the world can I do out there?" she asked herself most poignantly. "Of course they don't play golf or tennis, and I can't ride, and, besides, whom could I play with? Jeannette is not a bit athletic." And again the small round of her interests—she had no gayeties—was borne in upon her. "I shall die of inactivity."

Louis excused himself quite formally and went back into the smoking compartment to sit with the men, while Ann, left alone, gave herself up to a close, half ironic study of the absurdity of her position. With a dozen most desirable invitations to distinguished London homes, with everything before her that a girl of her age and tastes could desire, she had turned away to face the crude conditions of a western state in a warm glow of sisterly affection.

"Hello, Don!" shouted Louis.

She took up the little red book, in which she had taken only a languid interest before, and, turning the leaves at random, fell upon bits of description that stirred her unaccountably. Now that she was about to enter this land of her father's delight, the words took on passion and power.

They arrived in Chicago behind their schedule time and had but a few minutes in which to make their transfer, and so they saw little of the great central metropolis. To them it was only a gloomy, clangorous shed fitted with long strings of railway coaches all marked with strange names—names which meant little to her, but which excited Louis almost to tears. "See," he cried, "there is a car from Oregon and one from Wyoming!" The people who filled the coaches were not markedly different at first glance from those she had been traveling with, but Louis, more keenly discerning, began to distinguish types at once, and when one or two big men came in wearing wide hats and chin beards he trembled with joy. "There are some cattlemen—I'm sure of it," he whispered hoarsely.

Louis did not return to the Pullman till after the train had left the city, and she was just beginning to wonder thereat when he came in with eyes ablaze. "I've struck 'em at last!" he fairly shouted in her ear. "They're all up in the reclining chairs, chin bearders, spitters and all. I'm just crazy to sketch two or three of them. It doesn't pay to ride in a stateroom if you want to see types," he added in conclusive discontent.

As that day and the next wore on the boy began to burn with a new phase of his fever. He commenced to count the hours till he might be able to discern Mogalyon, the great peak of the Rampart range, whose fame is worldwide. Ann experienced her first decided flush of interest as the swinging, reeling rush of the train brought the great peak into view, a dim, blue dome against the western sky.

At last, just as the red was paling out of the sky, the train swung to the left on its southerly course, and the whole Rampart range began to stretch and wind away to northward and southward, while between the plain and the foothills rolled a tawny sea of sod, deeply marked with ravines and dotted with pine clad buttes. The range grew dimmer as they gazed, and at last even Louis was content to sink back in his seat and wait.

"It isn't a bit as I expected it to be," he said, "but it is glorious. That purple green was wonderful. I'm going to try to get that some time. It isn't as precipitous as the Alps, but it's superb just the same, and just think how much wilder it was when father came here!"

"I'm glad you were not disappointed, boy," she replied, laying her hand on his shoulder and caressing his cheek, "but you need rest. You're seeing too much."

The train was now winding down toward Valley Springs, and only the splendid sky line of the range could be distinguished as the lights of the town began to sparkle out of the obscure murk.

The porter, with brush in hand, came down the aisle. "This is Valley Springs, miss."

They were met at the car door by a big, smiling man in modish summer dress, while behind him stood a pale, sweet faced woman in blue.

"Hello, Don!" shouted Louis.

"Hello, laddie! How do you do, Ann?" replied Barnett, and as Ann and her cousin embraced the big man caught Louis by the hand. "How's your muscle, my boy? Got all your traps? Here, Tom!" he called to a colored footman, "look out for these things."

CHAPTER II.

ANN'S entrance into the Barnett home cut her off from all contact with life distinctly western. She found herself still amid the velvet and silver of the parlor car and saw only remotely those who slept all night in the cramped corners of the ordinary coaches. Her cousins were not native; they were, indeed, only translated Philadelphians who had gone west in search of health—at least Mrs. Barnett was there for that reason. Her husband made the change for love of his wife.

A certain percentage of the towns people and the members of the special circle in which the Barnetts moved were health seekers, and Ann was deeply relieved to find that all the comforts of an eastern home were to be enjoyed in the big graystone houses on Rampart avenue. Indeed, the Barnetts lived quite as they would have done in Seabright or Lenox. They had a dozen horses, a suitable assortment of vehicles, saddles and bridles and were enthusiasts concerning polo and golf. Their neighbors and friends were unfailingly ecstatic in praise of the climate and the views and seemed illogically anxious to placate the prejudices of this haughty, pale faced, scarlet lipped young girl, who looked with calm eyes upon the great peak glooming to the westward. They formed, in fact, a colony of alien health seekers, busied with pleasures, set distinctly apart from the toilers and the traders of the place.

To be continued.

Corner Stone Was Well and Truly Laid.

IMPRESSIVE AND INTERESTING CEREMONY AT THE BAPTIST CHURCH SITE, VICTORIA AVENUE, YESTERDAY AFTERNOON—MR. HODGSON, OF MONTREAL, LAID THE STONE.

The foundation of the Baptist Church, which is being erected at the corner of Victoria Avenue and Pinnacle street, has so far advanced as to permit of the corner stone being laid. This ceremony was performed at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon in the presence of a large number of citizens

Mr H. A. Hodgson, of Montreal, a former well known citizen of Belleville, and one who always took an active interest in the local Baptist church was selected to lay the stone, which was placed in position at the southeast corner of the structure. The inscription upon the stone was brief and simple, namely the words, "Erected, A. D., 1906." At the hour above named the proceedings were opened by the singing of the well-known hymn "The Church's One Foundation," and an appropriate prayer by the Pastor, Rev. C. H. Emerson. The latter then spoke a few words, referring in an eulogistic manner to Mr. Hodgson whom he said was intimately associated with the Baptist Church of this city. The Rev. gentleman also referred generally to the church's history since its establishment in the city. He then presented to Mr. Hodgson a beautiful silver trowel, which bore the following inscription;

Presented to
H. A. Hodgson
By the Victoria Avenue Baptist Church,
Belleville, July 6th, 1906.

Mr Hodgson, in accepting the trowel, referred to the pleasure it gave him to perform the task which had been assigned to him.

Mr A. Richardson, clerk of the church, then read a paper outlining the church's history in this city, following being the gist of it;

In the year 1873 the Baptist Home Mission sent Rev. W. J. Paterson as a missionary to this city. A hall was then used to worship in. On the following November the church was organized with a membership of 23. In March, 1874, it was decided to build a chapel, and on May, 1875, the chapel was dedicated. In July, 1896, the church property where the new edifice is being erected was procured for the sum of $4,500. The membership was then 230. On January 19 of this year it was decided to build a new church and sufficient was secured in subscriptions to warrant the work being carried on.

This document, with copies of the Daily Globe, Mail and Empire, Canadian Baptist, Intelligencer and Ontario and some silver coins were deposited in a jar which, after being sealed, was placed in the cavity of the corner stone. The stone was then lowered into position and Mr. Hodgson tapped the stone with the trowel, repeating the words, "I declare this stone truly laid in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost."

Mr. Hodgson was then called upon for an address and spoke at some length. He referred to his coming to Belleville in the year 1877, and uniting with the Baptist Church. He saw about him but few of those who were in the church then. Such men as Deacons Casswell and Davis had gone to their reward. The past was gone, but the present was ours. To-day it was a pleasure for him to perform the ceremony of laying the corner stone of the new edifice, and he hoped that even a greater edifice would have to be erected in the future. He hoped that the church which was being erected would prove of great benefit to the city and that many would be brought to the saving knowledge of the truth in Christ Jesus. He had implicit trust in God. We should hourly and daily go to God in prayer, so that we might have a higher idea of Christ. He hoped the edifice would be erected free of debt, and he implored the members to rally around the pastor and building committee, and demonstrate that nothing was impossible with God.

Rev. R. Wallace spoke briefly on behalf of the church, and deeply appreciated the fact that so many citizens were present at the ceremony of laying the corner stone. For 24 years he had been associated with the church and during this time the membership had increased threefold. The building was being erected to the glory of God and he hoped it would be the means of accomplishing good to the community at large. The cost of the structure would be about $13,000.

Congratulatory and pleasing addresses were also made by Rev. Geo. Brown, of the Tabernacle, Rev. R. S. Laidlaw, of St. Andrew's, Rev. A. M. Hubly, of Emmanuel R. E. Church, and Rev. R. H. Leitch, of Holloway Street.

Rev. C. H. Emerson, in concluding the proceedings, said he was pleased to have his ministerial brethren present upon such an occasion. He was also pleased at the Christian sympathy and help extended to him and the congregation in the erection of the house of God.

After prayer by the Rev. R. Wallace and the singing of the Doxology, the proceedings were brought to a close.

Garden Party Was A Great Success.

The garden party given at the Home for the Friendless, on Moira St last night, was a great success, both in point of numbers and enjoyment. There was a large attendance, and the Oddfellows' Band furnished tuneful music, which was augmented by graphophone selections. Refreshments were on sale in plenty, and were freely partaken of. The proceeds should be large enough to gladden the hearts of those benevolent ladies, the members of the W. C. A., under whose auspices the garden party was held.

A Painful Accident.

While loading cheese at Victoria factory last Thursday morning, says the Tweed News, Mr. John Stokes, license inspector for East Hastings, met with an unfortunate accident. In some manner he lost his balance and fell backwards from the load with a box of cheese in his arms. The full weight of the cheese came upon him and he was quite seriously injured, being badly bruised about the face and one of his legs. He was immediately brought to Tweed where his injuries were attended to. He is getting along as well as can be expected.

The Man Who "Looks Into the Eye."

IS COMING TO BELLEVILLE.

Beginning Tuesday, July 17, and continuing for seventeen days, a great campaign of optical education and demonstration will take place at the jewelry store of Allan McFee. Dr. Wm. E. Montgomery, the Toronto expert "Shadow test" specialist, has been engaged; a new optical dark room has been built, new appliances installed, and a new day will dawn for those who suffer with defects of vision. Dr. Montgomery, the originator of this new system of sight-testing, is doing a wonderful work throughout Canada. He is teaching one jeweler in each town his new and perfect way, a way that does no guess work, a way that makes no mistakes. Everywhere that his work is known it is pronounced a revelation in optical science and a great achievement in ophthalmic practice. Each day at the store Dr. Montgomery will conduct free examinations for all, charging for material only. Appointments are now being made. Do not miss this grand opportunity.

Bad News In Bunches.

Mr. Jas. Boldrick, of Stirling, recently received the sad news of the death of his oldest sister, who was living near Londonderry, Ireland. Soon afterwards he also received word of the death of his youngest sister's husband who was living in Londonderry, and later of the accidental death by drowning of her second son, a young man of 20 years of age.

A Minister's Mishap.

The Rev. Mr. Wright, of Murray, last Friday met with an accident, while boarding the R. & O. boat, which might have resulted more seriously. As the boat turned into the landing, Mr. Wright sprang aboard but struck his head violently against a beam rendering himself perfectly unconscious, and inflicting an ugly scalp wound. On arrival at Trenton Dr. Farley found it necessary to insert several stitches to close the wound, after which the Rev. gentleman pluckily continued his journey eastward.

PRICE OF CHEESE.

WHERE WILL IT ADVANCE? — MONTREAL STAR SAYS BUYERS HAVE GIVEN UP GUESSING.

Montreal Star; The market for cheese has possibly already advanced, instead of waiting for the end of the week, as many thought it would do. As will be seen from the Peterboro despatch, as high as 11 3-4 cents was paid on that market today, the bulk of the goods being taken, however, at 11 9-16c. This practically means that local prices will have to be advanced to 12 cents, should Peterboro prices be paid on other Boards. Local merchants seem to have given up guessing at what will next happen. The situation seems to be ruled by one or two combinations, and all is uncertainty. There seems little doubt that some of the other firms, thinking that the price of cheese could not possibly be held at the high figures which ruled at the opening of the season, sold short, and it is these which some say are helping to put prices up.

Exports of cheese from the port of Montreal last week were 95,070 boxes, as against 100,551 the corresponding week of last year. Total exports since the first of the season were 540,934 boxes, as against 491,885 for the corresponding period last year.

'TIS FAR FROM PERFECT

But Mr. Aylesworth Advises Passage of Lord's Day Bill.

More Compromises Added to Already Long Series of Compromises by Amendments on Third Reading—Can Play Golf on Sunday, Thanks to Mr. Aylesworth—Amendment to Prohibit Sport Carried, But Was Later Struck Out on His Motion.

Ottawa, July 7.—The Union Jack did not fly from the pole of the main tower of the Parliament Buildings on Monday, Dominion Day. Mr. Peter Elson of East Middlesex made an impassioned loyal speech on the omission.

Mr. Hyman, while agreeing in the main with Mr. Elson, said that Monday was not the First of July, and that the flag had been flying on Sunday. The housekeeper had certain instructions to fly the flag on certain days, which apparently did not cover occasions such as that when the celebration of a holiday was delayed.

Appealed to Sir Wilfrid.

On motion for a third reading of the bill relating to the Supreme Court of Judicature of New Brunswick, Dr. Stockton renewed his objections previously expressed, and appealed to the Premier.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier denied in the strongest terms that the Government was cognizant of or party to any plot to take away any man's office. As the appointment of Chief Justices was primarily his duty, he said he would endeavor to do his duty in other instances.

The bill was given its third reading.

Sunday Observance.

The final stage in the passage of the bill respecting the Lord's Day was then entered upon, on motion for its third reading.

Mr. Duncan Ross again moved his amendment to permit: "Any unavoidable work on the Lord's Day to save property in cases of emergency, or in imminent danger of destruction or serious injury."

Mr. W. F. Maclean discussed the principle of the bill, and quoted extracts from Lewis' "Life of George Brown," of which his interpretation was that all those questions involving religion should be left to the provinces. He expressed the belief that the old Sunday law which was in force in Upper Canada was still in force in Ontario. He blamed the Government for not having kept the question out of the House and for not having conferred with the provinces in order to have the B. N. A. act amended, if necessary, to bring the question of Sunday observance under provincial jurisdiction. He urged that the measure be postponed until the November session, that a summary of the existing laws regarding Sabbath observance be prepared as a state document, and that a conference be held with the provincial authorities in the meantime.

Bill Not Perfect.

Mr. Aylesworth replied that his experience since undertaking to carry the bill through committee had convinced him of the difficulty attending the effort to carry legislation of this nature through Parliament. At the same time he did not regard the difficulties as insuperable. The only effective way of dealing with the question was by encroaching somewhat upon the domain of the criminal law, and it was in that aspect that the provincial legislators would find themselves hampered in any attempt to legislate upon the matter by reason of their inability to deal with it from the standpoint of the criminal law. The bill before the House, while not perfect, was practicable and the result of much thought and study, and he could not see in any of the arguments advanced any reason why the measure should not now be enacted. If in the future a necessity for changing any of its provisions should be demonstrated amendments might be made, but that was not a reason why the bill as it stood should not become law. He favored the recommittal of the bill to the committee in order to consider Mr. Ross' amendment, and also of a matter that had been overlooked, providing for telegraph and telephone operators who work on Sunday that they should have a day of rest on some other day.

Further Amendments.

In committee Mr. Ross' amendment was carried, and Mr. Ross then moved that clause 4 be amended by adding a subclause providing that the clause "shall not apply to any employe in the work of any industrial process in which the regular day's labor of such employe is not more than eight hours' duration or 56 hours per week." The clause as it stood provided that if any employe worked on Sunday he must have 24 hours' rest on some other day. Mr. Ross explained that the change was made in according with telegraphic protests from both employers and employes of smelters and other industries in British Columbia. He had also received a communication from Rev. Mr. Hastings, Greenwood, B. C., secretary of the Lord's Day Alliance of that district, endorsing the amendment as necessary to meet local conditions.

Mr. Thos. Martin (North Wellington), and Dr. Black (Hants, N. S.), protested against the amendment and insisted upon the necessity of every worker having one complete day's rest in every seven.

Bill Hacked and Changed.

At the afternoon session Dr. Stockton said that he had favored the measure brought down by the Government, but it had been so hacked and changed and mangled that he was unable to recognize it. The Government's vacillation had been most remarkable. Instead of a third reading, the bill was again in committee. As the bill now stood, it permitted on Sunday "everything but a prayer meeting." After some running debate the Ross amendment was adopted. The weekly holiday is extended to telegraph and telephone operators.

Forbids Golf on Sunday.

Mr. Martin (North Wellington) moved an amendment forbidding any games of ball, golf and cricket on the grounds of any club.

Mr. Bourassa startled the House by supporting the amendment. If poor people were shut out from parks and ball grounds, why should the swells be allowed to assemble at their clubs, drink highballs and play golf all day Sunday? he wanted to know.

W. F. Maclean (South York) quoted Mr. Aylesworth's statement that the bill left in full force the old provincial statutes. This meant that the same thing would be a crime in one province and not in another.

Mr. Guthrie (South Wellington) claimed that the act of Charles II. would protect the people of Ontario.

Mr. Maclean (South York) asked if it could be enforced.

Two Hours in the Stocks.

Mr. Guthrie hesitated and upon looking up the statute it was found that the penal for violating the act of Charles II. was by imprisonment for two hours in the stocks.

Mr. Bristol (Centre Toronto) asked for a statement from the Minister of Justice as to what Sunday laws were in force in Ontario.

Mr. Pringle (Cornwall) saw no point in the various exemptions of the bill. They were overridden by the act of Charles II. and old provincial legislation.

Mr. Aylesworth opined that all laws in force in Ontario July 1, 1867, were still in force and would not be affected.

Mr. Martin's anti-golf amendment carried—yeas 52, nays 42.

Operating Suburban Roads.

Mr. Monk (Jacques Cartier) offered an amendment permitting suburban railroads to operate on Sunday. This was withdrawn.

An amendment followed from Mr. Guthrie making all provincial street railway companies subject to provincial Sunday laws. It was voted down without division.

Mr. Galliher (Kootenay) offered an amendment making Sunday exemption for the smelting and mining industries more explicit. Lost; yeas 24, nays 68.

Mr. Bourassa moved a new section making it unlawful for any person to make use of an intoxicating liquor or a beverage on any train or boat or upon the streets on the Lord's Day. Lost; yeas 42, nays 64. The Conservatives supported the amendment.

To Strike It Out.

At 9.30 the committee of the whole House reported the various amendments to the House itself.

Mr. Aylesworth moved to refer the anti-golf amendment back to the committee, with instructions to strike it out.

Upon division the motion to refer back the amendment to the committee with instructions to strike it out, was carried, yeas 79, nays 42. Monk, Perley and Paquet (Conservatives) voted for, and Bourassa, Armand, Lavergne, Guthrie, Martin and Kennedy (Lib.) voted against.

Lively Debating.

The House, back in committee, was slow to obey the direction of the House. During a heated colloquy, Mr. Aylesworth accused R. L. Borden of intentional misrepresentation, and drew forth a scathing rebuke.

Mr. Taylor (Leeds) said to Mr. Aylesworth: "You are suffering from a bad case of swelled head."

The amendment was stricken out in committee, yeas 84 to nays 38. Verville and George Grant did not vote.

Mr. Porter (West Hastings) offered an amendment exempting toll bridges. Mr. Aylesworth opposed the amendment, and it was lost.

Upon a motion for third reading, Mr. Bourassa denounced the bill as arbitrary. It recalled the days of the inquisition. The crime attempted to be created could not be defined. What was a work of "necessity"? The Minister of Justice admitted that he could not say. This House could not say. The citizen would be at the mercy of every whimsical magistrate.

Equivalent to Veto.

Mr. Aylesworth replied. He must oppose the amendment. Every criminal case after all had to be decided by some person or persons, whether it involved murder or a violation of the Sunday law. The bill as drafted was a compromise bill. It probably would not be adopted by a single province in Canada. Therefore it would be equivalent to defeating the bill to give the provinces any powers of veto or confirmation.

Senate Bill Defeated.

During the hour for private bills last night the House in committee defeated the Senate bill to incorporate the Grand River and Western Power Co.

Danger Signals for Women.

We don't wish to unduly frighten any one, and yet any woman who has any of the symptoms which follow should remember that every day's neglect of them makes her condition a little worse—a little harder to cure.

Backache, bearing-down pains, cold feet, habitual constipation, and headaches, indigestion, nervousness, irritability, melancholy, a tired or run-down feeling, any menstruation trouble or female weakness.

If you have any of the above symptoms, Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women, taken now will do what no medicine may be able to do for you later, that is, prevent a serious illness or some chronic disorder.

These tablets are made expressly to meet and overcome the above symptoms. And they are doing it for women every day.

Before finishing one box you will wonder where that old backache has gone. There will be no more dread of the monthly periods. That tired feeling, nervousness and irritability which comes from a run-down condition will have disappeared and you will begin to feel like yourself again.

Now don't say "Don't believe it" and not take the tablets. The risk is small, only 50c. If you have any of these symptoms, you need the tablets more than the money.

Ingersoll, July 7.—David Barker, 19 years old, who has made his home in this vicinity for the past three years, was this afternoon sentenced to six months in the Central for theft of eleven dollars.

It does do good baking

This is the range that bakes better because the diffusive oven flue draws in cold air from the kitchen-floor, carries it around the oven, and pours it HOT down into the oven FROM THE TOP in a current that moves all round the whole oven and up and out the flue. When that clean, hot air leaves the oven it takes with it all the moisture, all the odors, which in OTHER ovens stay in and saturate the baking food. Perfect draft control, perfect oven, draw-out oven rack for easy basting,—all points singular to

Imperial Oxford Range

Owning one costs little because there's such great economy of food and fuel and bother with this range.

It saves its cost in the juices it doesn't bake out of roasts alone.

RIGHT OF PARLIAMENT

Revision of Budget Claimed by Prof. Hertzenstein.

Russian Financial Condition Is Said to Be Desperate — Government Estimates Savagely Attacked—Peasant-Workmen Instructed to Await Signal From St. Petersburg For Armed Uprising.

St. Petersburg, July 7.—During the debate in the Lower House of Parliament yesterday, on the Bialystok report, an orthodox priest, Father Aranasieff, member from the Don Province, fiercely denounced the policy of the Government.

The debate on the Bialystok report was adjourned until Monday to permit the consideration of the Ministry's bill appropriating $25,000,000 for famine relief, which developed the sensation of the day.

Parliament's Right.

Prof. Hertzenstein, chairman of the committee which reported the bill, revealed the important fact that M. Kovovsoff, the Finance Minister who had appeared before the committee, made no effort to conceal the desperate financial straits of the Government. The Finance Minister said it was necessary to make a fresh loan to cover the famine relief.

Prof. Hertzenstein said this was exactly where the committee took issue with the Ministry. Parliament, he added, was in favor of a famine relief measure, and would give more money if necessary, but it would never agree to a new loan, for which in reality there was no necessity. The budget was filled with extravagant items and money could be found by revising the budget. This method, the committee proposed, should be coupled with the provision that the right to make such revision belonged to Parliament and not to the Ministry.

The Lower House of Parliament finally appropriated $7,500,000 to be dispensed by the administration for famine relief. This was epochal as the first recognition of the Cabinet by Parliament, and the first step in joint work.

Prepared For Armed Uprising.

In accordance with the decision of the peasant-workmen's congress at Helsingfors, emissaries have been despatched throughout Russia to instruct the peasant and proletariat organizations to continue their preparations for an armed uprising, but to await the signal from St. Petersburg.

Rioting occurred yesterday among the employes of the Government printing offices, where the plates for the paper currency are engraved and printed. The men left their work and went into the court-yard of the building, singing the "Marseillaise." Gendarmes and Cossacks were summoned and drove back the demonstrators into the building, where, after some parleying, they returned to work.

Interior Minister Stolypin has removed Gen. Kourloff, the Governor of Minsk.

Cossacks Killed.

Berlin, July 7.—A despatch to The Lokal Anzieger, from Kattowitz, Prussian Silesia, says that at 2.15 p. m. yesterday twenty-five Cossacks surrounded a lime kiln at Mischow, in the province of Kielce, Russian Poland, on information that it was being used for the manufacture of bombs. As the Cossacks were forcing their way in a terrific explosion blew the kiln to pieces. Eight Cossacks were killed and five were wounded.

Police in Dread Resign.

Warsaw, July 7.—The reign of crime and terrorism is so great here that the police have decided to resign. The Governor-General, when apprised of the decision of the police to resign, threatened to arrest and punish those who failed to appear for duty.

Mutiny Ended.

Batum, July 7.—The mutiny of troops here has ended. The ringleaders escaped, whereupon their followers yielded, and are confined in the fortress.

THE WORLD IS SMALL.

Tab On Anarchist Who Meant to Take Kaiser's Life.

Altona, Prussia, July 7.—An alleged Anarchist, named Rosenberg, who is reported to have left Seattle, Wash., for Germany recently, was arrested here yesterday.

London, July 7.—The alleged Anarchist arrested at Altoona, Prussia, is named August Rosenberg, and he is credited with having designs on the life of Emperor William.

New York, July 7.—A despatch from Seattle on July 3 reported that the police of that city had found a plant for making bombs and infernal machines in Rosenberg's house. Rosenberg left Seattle for Hamburg, Germany, on May 1.

Great Empire Convention.

London, July 7.—(C. A. P.)—With a couple of receptions the program of the Chambers of Commerce of the empire begins to-day. Altogether 250 representatives of the colonies are now here, Canada sending the largest quota. Business proceedings open on Tuesday morning. On Friday thirty delegates will be presented to the King, four to be chosen by Canadians. The program of business entertainment will occupy three weeks, including the provincial tour.

Taught the Jap Army.

Berlin, July 7.—Major-General Meckel, formerly professor of military tactics in Japan, died yesterday. He went to Japan in 1885, stayed there three years, reorganized the Japanese army and wrote a book on tactics. Field Marshal Oyama, after the battle of Mukden, telegraphed to Gen. Meckel, ascribing his success to Meckel's instructions.

The Buchanan Centenary.

St. Andrew's, Scotland, July 7.—Yesterday at the University of St. Andrew's the quarter centenary of George Buchanan, Scottish scholar, historian and poet, is being celebrated. To-day there will be a garden party, at which further tributes will be offered to the memory of the great apostle of liberty and typical Scotsman.

Hot Weather HEADACHES

Tablets, powders, drugs, of any kind will NOT cure headaches. Simply because they never reach the CAUSE of the headache.

—What causes headaches? Poisoned blood, always.

If the bowels are constipated—
If the kidneys are weak—
If the millions of pores of the skin are not active—
There are bound to be headaches.

Fruit-a-tives

OR "FRUIT LIVER TABLETS"

cure headaches because they cure the cause of headaches. They do not drug the nerves. They go to the root of the trouble, invigorate and strengthen the liver and increase the flow of bile into the bowels, which cure constipation. Act directly on the kidneys, heal all kidney irritation. Act on the skin, stimulate and open the pores.

With bowels, kidneys and skin all healthy and working in harmony, the blood is kept pure and rich and there can be no headaches.

FRUIT-A-TIVES are pure fruit juices—combined by a secret process with tonics and intestinal antiseptics.

STROUDS

THE SCRAP HEAP.

Declared by Liberals to Be Place For House of Lords.

London, July 9.—David Lloyd-George, president of the Board of Trade, speaking at Shotley Spa, Durham, Saturday night, and referring to what he called "worn-out Parliament machinery," declared that the House of Lords ought to be placed on the scrap heap.

He said further that the greatest beneficent measure ever conceived will have been passed by the time Parliament is prorogued, and that probably this would occur in December.

Winston Churchill, Under Secretary for the Colonies, speaking at Altrincham, Chester, Saturday night, said the Government had determined to carry out its pledges regarding the reduction of land armaments, and that he believed the announcement made by War Secretary Haldane in June on this subject would satisfy completely all sections of the Liberal party.

The speaker urged the necessity of the Liberals continuing their confidence in the Government in view of the possibility of a collision with "an unsound and irresponsible assembly that had ceased to fulfill its normal functions in the state, and had become the partisan weapon of particular faction."

LIGHTNING STRIKES CHURCH.

Knox Church Spire at Beaverton Damaged to Extent of $1,000.

Beaverton, July 9.—About 2.30 yesterday afternoon a severe thunderstorm passed over this section. Knox Church steeple was struck by lightning and badly shattered. There was no fire. The current passed down the outside of the church to the ground. The damage is estimated at about $1,000.

Barns Struck.

Listowel, July 9.—A severe storm of lightning and rain passed over this town yesterday afternoon, and it was reported that considerable damage had been done by lightning. Several houses were struck, but only slightly damaged. The barn on W. H. Hays' farm on the outskirts of the town was burned.

CANADA HAS ASBESTOS.

But Gives Up Two-Thirds of It to Supply United States.

Washington, July 9.—The importation of asbestos into the United States increased in 1905. It amounted in value to $846,479, as compared with $751,862 in 1904, says the United States geological survey, in a report for 1905.

Most of the asbestos imported into this country is produced in Canada. The United States market takes approximately two-thirds of the Canadian product. In the past decade the production in Canada has shown an almost constant increase from a tonnage of 12,250 in 1896, to 50,670 in 1905, with values of $429,850 and $1,486,359.

The output of asbestos in the United States for 1905 was 3,109 short tons, valued at $42,975.

Sunday Bill Is Passed.

It Was 3.25 Saturday Morning When Final Vote Was Taken.

Amendments by Messrs. Bourassa, Monk and Borden are Successfully Voted Down—No Recorded Vote on Third Reading But Vote on Borden Amendment Reversed Indicates the Way Members Would Have Gone.

Ottawa, July 7.—In the cool gray dawn of "a morning after," the Sunday bill, at 3.25 this morning, received its third reading.

The vote was 77 to 39 and was a party one, save that Bourassa and Lavergne voted with the Opposition. The climax came after a series of votes on amendments.

Bourassa's amendment "that a clause be inserted providing that the act should not go into force in any province of Canada until the Legislature of the province has enacted that said act shall apply to such province," was lost—years, 15; nays, 104.

Monk's amendment "that the House, while recognizing the sanctity of the Lord's Day and the necessity of securing to all classes proper legislation for the proper observance of that day according to each one's conscientious convictions, is of the opinion that the matter of Sunday legislation should be left at present with the various provinces of the Dominion," was lost by 15 yeas to 102 nays.

R. L. Borden's amendment "to prohibit, except where authorized by provincial legislature, any games on Sunday, even when not played for reward or gain, and to permit the charging of an admission fee to places where divine worship was conducted," was defeated by 39 to 77, as follows:

Vote on Borden Amendment.

Yeas (39)—Alcorn, Avery, Barker, Barr, Bergeron, Blain, Borden (Carleton), Bourassa, Boyce, Bristol, Chisholm (Huron), Christie, Clements, Cochrane, Crocket, Elson, Foster, Fowler, Henderson, Herron, Hughes (Victoria), Lake, Lalor, Lancaster, Lavergne (Montmagny), Lefurgey, Leonard, Monk, Morin, Paquet, Porter, Pringle, Seagram, Staples, Taylor, Walsh, Wilson (Lennox and Addington), Wright (Muskoka).

Nays (77)—Archambault, Aylesworth, Beauparlant, Beland, Black, Bole, Borden (Sir Frederick), Boyer, Brodeur, Bureau, Calvert, Campbell, Carrier, Chisholm (Antigonish), Clarke, Conmee, Costigan, Delisle, Demers, Desjardins, Devlin, Dubeau, Emmerson, Forget, Galliher, Gauvreau, Geoffrion, Gervais, Girard, Gladu, Grant, Guthrie, Harty, Hunt, Jackson (Selkirk), Johnston, Kennedy, Lachance, Lanctot, Lapointe, Laurier (Sir Wilfrid), Lavergne (Drummond and Arth.), Leblanc, Lemieux, Macdonald, Maclean (Lunenburg), Macpherson, MacIntyre (Perth), McIntyre (Strathcona), McLennan, Marcile (Bagot), Marcil (Bonaventure), Martin (Wellington), Mayrand, Oliver, Pardee, Parmelee, Parent, Piche, Pickup, Ratz, Reid (Restigouche), Ross (Cape Breton), Savoie, Sinclair, Smith (Oxford), Telford, Templeman, Tobin, Turgeon, Wilson (Russell), Zimmerman.

The bill was given its third reading, but there was no recorded vote.

It was broad daylight when many members of the House and gallery left the building.

Saturday's Regular Session.

Although the House did not adjourn till half-past three this morning, there was a fair attendance at the session which opened at 11 o'clock.

Mr. Aylesworth rose to a question of privilege. Two days ago he had been misjudged in The Toronto World. He was reported as saying that he believed and hoped that there was no likelihood of public ownership in Canada. He had not used the expression "hoped."

When he had finished, Hon. Geo. E. Foster rose and with mock solemnity extended his assurance of profound sympathy.

"Is nobody to be brought to the bar?" asked Mr. Fielding, jocosely, and the incident closed amid a general chorus of merriment.

More Money For Archivist.

The estimates of the Department of Agriculture were taken up. On a vote of $20,000 for the archives branch, Mr. Fisher urged the importance of the work of collecting historical art here and in Europe.

Dr. Stockton invited the Minister to ask for a sufficient amount to have the cataloguing work brought up to date. The House should not be niggardly.

Hon. Geo. E. Foster urged that Dr. Doughty, who is in charge of the branch, be given enough to enable him to do the work effectively.

R. L. Borden paid a very high tribute to Dr. Doughty.

"Dr. Doughty," said the Postmaster-General, following Mr. Borden, "has a world-wide reputation as an archivist. He had corrected many errors in foreign histories with regard to Canada."

Mr. Fisher, after some more discussion, promised a salary increase of from $2,050 to $2,400 for Dr. Doughty. This will keep the archivist in the service. He has been on the point of getting out.

Cattle Combine.

At the evening session of the House Mr. Herron (Alberta) directed the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to a state of affairs existing in the western cattle trade, which indicated a combine among the buyers for the purpose of keeping down prices. The farmers were getting at least 25 per cent. less than a fair price. Was the Government prepared to take any steps in the matter?

Mr. Fisher had heard of the combine, but he said that while the law forbade a combine to put prices up, there was nothing, so far as he knew, to prevent any person from forming a combine to keep prices down.

There was the usual discussion respecting the British embargo on Canadian cattle. Mr. Fisher promised to do what he could.

There was complaint from the Opposition respecting the employment of H. J. Moberley as an enumerator in the census work of the Northwest. Mr. Fisher promised to discharge him.

The new Postmaster-General presented his first estimates. In reply to a question from Mr. Blain (Peel), Mr. Lemieux stated that he hoped to raise the compensation of rural postmasters. He hoped to treat all postmasters justly and fairly.

J. M. Courtney Retires.

Hon. Mr. Fielding announced the retirement of J. M. Courtney, Deputy Finance Minister, who has been 30 years in the public service.

Mr. Courtney's salary was $5,000 per annum. His successor will receive but $4,000, but an assistant deputy minister is to be appointed.

Moberley Recalled.

Ottawa, July 9.—It was announced yesterday that a telegram has been sent, recalling H. J. Moberley, who had been employed in connection with the census in the Northwest.

Moberley is the man who perpetrated the spurious election at Prince Albert during the provincial campaign. It is stated that he was not appointed as an enumerator, but was employed as a guide for the enumerator.

Benefit of Shade Trees.

A recent article in Chambers' Journal, Edinburgh, tells us something of the value of shade trees in cities, aside from the protection which they afford against the hot sun. Here is an extract from the article;

> "Every green leaf performs every day a chemical process which the human chemist cannot attempt to imitate. The living cells of the green leaf are outlined with the remarkable green substance known as chlorophyl, which has the wonderful power of making use of the radiant energy of the sun and causing it to effect a dissolution of the small amount of carbonic acid gas present in the atmosphere. This very stable chemical compound is silently and easily separated by the sunlight into its constituents of carbon and oxygen, and the latter is returned to the air, while the former gas builds up the body of the plant, which ultimately becomes human food. For, when all is said and done, the meat and the eggs and the milk upon which we feed consist only of the materials originally produced by the plant, and as the human being is really a vegetarian after all, and without the green leaf he certainly could not exist. So the carbon which has been sucked for us from the atmosphere by the green leaf is recombined in our bodies with the oxygen we breathe, and liberated again into the air, where, but for green fields and forests, it would ultimately accumulate to poison us. Man can never spread his cities over the entire earth, therefore, for his lungs, no less than his stoves and fires, are always throwing carbonic acid into the air, and the green leaves alone can entice it back again and transform it into food, at the same time leaving the oxygen pure and fit for breathing."

It is said that many youngsters who wrote at the recent entrance exams. in this city are doomed to be disappointed. Out of the nearly 200 who tried, only one-third got through—a slaughter of the innocents, truly.

The boys, it is said, were more successful than the girls this time, the sweet little maidens being "turned down" by the examiners with rude and disheartening frequency. It was not, 'tis said, the difficulty of the various papers so much as the "trickiness." Many pitfalls were prepared for youthful feet, and the lads and lassies fell into them.

The gay and festive automobile is very numerous in this city just now. People who should know say that, for its size, Belleville has as many as any place in Canada. Quite a difference from the time when Jim McCurdy had a monopoly of the business.

The fact that the Stars and Stripes was flown over the City Hall at Winnipeg on the 4th of July is enough to make one sit up and think. There are many United Statesers in Winnipeg, no doubt, and it was all right to honor the day in their behalf, but to fly a foreign flag on the City Hall flagpole was going a little too far. There are some things about the erratic west which we people in the east will not copy, and the flying of foreign flags on our City Hall flagstaffs is one of them.

Taking the above fact into consideration, is there not good and sufficient reason for the writing of the following, which we clip from "Kit's" page, in the Mail and Empire;

> "We now scoff at annexation. The time may come when it will be a live and active issue. It might be asked; Will any one of those settlers from Iowa, Montana, South Dakota, and other of the States whose population is pouring into our West vote against annexation if the question ever came to a vote? Which flag would such immigrants honor—the Jack or Old Glory—if ever war sprang up between the two nations? At present all is peace and amity between Uncle Sam and ourselves—and may it ever be thus!—but it is not an insignificant fact that the Grain Exchange at Winnipeg closed a week ago in honor of the Day of Independence; it is not an insignificant fact that a Fourth of July procession paraded the streets of more than one Western Canadian city, and it is not an insignificant fact that a Canadian girl in Lincoln, Neb., who had hoisted the British flag over her cottage on the Fourth to show where she belonged, was ordered to haul it down or have it hauled for her. Where is Canadian sentiment? Canadian love of country? Canadian patriotic spirit? Are all these buried in the grave of Alexander Muir? It looks like it."

Since the Boer war 1,300 persons have been settled in the new South African colonies, and this has been done at a cost of £2,400,000, or £1,800 per settler. The colonization of the Orange State and the Transvaal with Britishers will be a rather costly operation at this rate. And the question still remains, will the settlers make a success of it?

The Moncton Daily Times, in the course of a graphic article on a scene in the "Scandal" committee in the House of Commons, while the Arctic and other shady matters were being investigated, pays the following graceful and timely tribute to a local man;

> "Such a scene might be conceived as the happening of a tap room. As a judicial committee of Parliament it was a screaming farce The one redeeming feature was the dignified and good-natured attitude of Mr. Northrup, who headed the Opposition members. He never forgot his position as a gentleman and member of Parliament under the most trying circumstances He has made a reputation this session which stamps him as one of the ablest men and untiring workers in the House of Commons."

A newspaper man is in some instances like other people, truthfully remarks an exchange, He respects his friends, appreciates a kindness, and is always willing to return a favor. In another respect he resembles his fellowmen. He will not continue to pat a man on the back, tell what a good man he is, and how much he has done for the people, and give a free puff every week, when the man will not reciprocate in a business way. In other words he stands by the man who stands by him. That's about the way of the world, and newspaper men cannot be expected to be so very much different from other human beings.

The 41st Band, of Brockville, went to Quebec recently and gave a concert, and this is how L'Evenement, of Quebec, warmed 'em up;

> "We were present last night at a concert which calls for some comment. The musicians are certainly clever performers and have merit. It was a kind thing of them to spend their evening for the public on the terrace, and for that they have our thanks.
> "But at one time they pretended to give—was it as a feature or as a joke? a compound of selections from Mendelssohn, Wagner, Mirlembert, Verdi, • • but so much distorted, deformed, that, excepting in the idea of showing ugliness or ridiculing the public, it is impossible to understand such composition.
> "Thus they played in three time the March de Pretres, in three time the famous melody of Maitre Chanteurs, one of the masterpieces of Wagner, the famous Toreador song, and other things,—I do not know what.
> "It is the first time that we have heard such horrors publicly."

As if the above were not bad enough, the Brockville bandmaster had a silver clarinet stolen in Quebec.

The Victoria League.

THE WOMEN'S ASSOCIATION TO BIND THE EMPIRE TOGETHER.

The Countess of Jersey, President of the Victoria League, occupied the chair on 20th June, 1906, at its 4th annual meeting, held in the Jehanghir Hall, Imperial Institute, South Kensington. Her Ladyship was supported by the Countess of Carrington, Vice-President; Mrs. Maurice Macmillan, Treasurer; Mrs. H. O. Arnold-Forster, Lady Edw. Cecil, Hon. Mrs. Evelyn Cecil, Mrs. H. Chamberlain, Mrs. Alfred Emmott, Miss G. Frere, Hon. Mrs. Alfred Lyttelton, the Earls of Carrington and Jersey, Sir Bartle Frere, Hon. Alf. Dobson, C.M.G. (Agent-General, Tasmania), Hon. J. W. Tavener (Agent-General Victoria), Mr. C. W. Boyd, C.M.G. (Sec. of The Rhodes Trustees), Prof. Dunstan (Sec. of Imperial Institute), and Miss Talbot Sec. of the League. There was a large and enthusiastic attendance of members and delegates from all the colonies, the Hall being packed. Among those present were Duchess of Buckingham and Chandos, Earl Egerton, Marchioness of Donegal, Dow-Marchioness of Headfort, Sir J. Cowasjee and Lady Jehanghir, Lady Goodenough, Lady Houldsworth, Lady Ommanney, Lady Stewart, of Grantully, Lady Wm. Seymour, Hon. H. J. and Mrs. Bovell, Mrs. Parker-Smith, &c.

The Countess of Jersey, in welcoming those who had come from all parts of the Empire, said that the League prided itself on the fact that it was a tree which had struck its roots below the surface of party politics and had gone down to that fertile soil of brotherhood, peace and patriotism which they believed to be the true foundation of the British Empire.

The Right Hon. Sydney Buxton, M. P., Postmaster-General, moved, "That this meeting considers the Victoria League to be deserving of continued and widespread support from all British subjects throughout the Empire." The League, he said, was a material link in the Empire. The colonial question appealed to him in his official capacity as Postmaster-General. He had already discovered that postal matters were among the most important things in the Empire, and he considered that the Imperial penny post was a step in the right direction. All colonies, including Egypt, came in long ago, and now Bechuanaland and Rhodesia had joined. The only parts of the British Empire now outside the scope of Imperial penny postage were some Pacific islands, inhabited chiefly by cannibals, whose appetites were more inclined for cheap missionaries than cheap postage. The Government did not see its way yet to universal penny postage, but shortly the postage to the colonies would be 1d per oz. instead of 1-2 oz. He was considering the question of cheaper postage of periodicals and papers to Canada. It was difficult to compete with American literature, which could be sent into the Dominion at 1-2d the pound, whereas it cost 4d a pound from this country. It was a matter of supreme importance to the trade of this country, as American advertisements, through the media of their periodicals, were always before the Canadian people, whilst English goods could not be so satisfactorily advertised and it certainly diminished the possibilities of Canadians making purchases here. At the present moment he was in communication with Canada with regard to this momentous question. The Canadian Government had considered it in a friendly spirit, and he hoped the negotiations would have favorable results.

Hon. Sir Lewis Mitchell, in the absence of Lord Robert Cecil, K.C., M.P., seconded the resolution, and said that as a former member of the Cape Ministry and the Rhodesia Trust, he knew the value of a good understanding between England and her oversea possessions. These were fostered by the League strictly in a non-political spirit. Sir John A. Cockburn, K.C.M.G., M.D., Agent-General for South Australia, supported the resolution, which was carried unanimously. Sir Kinloch Cooke moved a vote of thanks to the Speakers, and Mr. Turner, of British Columbia, in moving a hearty vote of thanks to Lady Jersey, said that as a business man, he could not understand how it was that it cost the Government 4d per pound for the carriage of newspapers and periodicals to Canada—which required no special care—whereas it only cost two cents a pound to send apples and potatoes from the other side of Canada to England.

Those interested in the Victoria League should send subscriptions and for fullest particulars of its work to Miss Talbot, Dacre House, London, S.W.

SPORTING NOTES.

The one-time invincible Shamrocks of Montreal, went down to defeat on Saturday at the hands of their old rivals, the Montrealers. The score was 10 to 6, and the winners won on their merits. It looks as though the finish of a once-great team had come.

Tecumseh beat Torontos on Saturday by 7 to 5, simply, the Toronto papers say, because the losers could not stand the pace set by the Indians and tried to play on the defensive. Lacrosse is full of surprises.

The Toronto Eastern League team lost two more. The present aggregation seems to be about the punkest Toronto ever had, and that's saying something, too.

The fastest mile by a trotter over a half-mile track this season was made by Nut Boy, in the 2.16 class at Rochester, the first heat of which he won in 2.11 1-4. Considering the early date and the fact that the record is 2.11 1-4c, and the track a slow one, the performance is almost sensational. Nut Boy is not a young horse, and had a reputation for bad manners until last year, when he acquired a record of 2.15 1-4. He is by Nutpine, dam by Smuggler.

Canadian pacers were quite strongly in evidence at Rochester. Major Brino won the 2.16 pace, best time, 2.16 1-4. Sam Rysdyk was third in the 2.08 pace, and Hal Patron was third in the 2.14 pace.

FAKE HAIR PREPARATIONS.

Do Hair No Good, But Often Cause it to Fall Out.

Many hair preparations are "fake" because they are merely scalp irritants. They often cause a dryness, making the hair brittle, and, finally, lifeless. Dandruff is the cause of all trouble with hair. It is a germ disease. The germ makes cuticle scales as it digs to the root of the hair, where it destroys the hair's vitality causing it to fall out. To cure dandruff, the germ must be killed. "Destroy the cause, you remove the effect." Newbro's Herpicide is the only hair preparation that kills the dandruff germ, thereby leaving the hair to grow luxuriantly.

Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

Sweet Marie won the match trot at Readville, Mass., on Saturday in two straight heats. The time was 2.07 3-4 in each heat. Wentworth was the only other starter. Tiverton having gone lame on Friday.

The veteran Westmount, 2.13 3-4, who is 31 years old, is still as lively as a colt, and paced an eighth a few days ago at Libertyville, Ill., in 18 seconds. It is twenty-two years since he made a world's record of 2.01 3-4 with running mate.

Mr Dyment's ill-fortune in the loss of Kinleydale was paralleled by that of Miss Wilks, of Galt, who lost the $15,500 trotter Sadie Mac the next season after her purchase. These were the two highest-priced horses ever brought to Canada.

Hot Weather Wisdom.

These are the days of heat prostrations, and even in this favored land sun-stroke is not unknown. The man whose circulation is active, whose skin is in a healthy condition, and who is temperate in drink, diet and exercise, is not likely to be the victim of sunstroke. But there are those who are not always in that happy condition. When the head and back are long exposed to the sun, when the skin becomes dry and hot, and dizziness threatens, the warnings should not be disregarded. If the elimination process be allowed to cease, congestion soon follows. The early dizziness and failure of vision may be quickly followed by convulsions, or collapse may be followed by coma.

Much may depend on prompt measures of aid. The body of the sufferer must be cooled. Place him in a shady spot, and while medical aid is sent for use the best means at hand to lower the bodily temperature. Ice, cold sponging, plenty of air, the clothing being loosened, are in order. Avoid giving stimulants unless ordered by a physician. Give sips of iced water freely · fan him constantly, and even if the physician is tardy, the patient is likely to be greatly benefited by your efforts.

In this hot weather it is well to avoid over exposure to the direct rays of the sun, and to be moderate in the used of iced drinks. When drunk at all iced water should be sipped slowly. Swallowed in huge draughts it may do serious mischief to the internal economy. The man who best endures the heat is the temperate man, who knows when he has enough, and who respects his physical constitution in work, in play, and what he ingests.

The Cheese Board.

Cheese went up again at the local board on Saturday, and showed an advance of a clear two cents over the same date last year. The boardings were 4170 boxes, as against 3917 at the same date in 1905. Saturday's sales were; Thos. Watkin, 390 at 11 3-4c; J. C. Warrington, 810 at 11 3-4c; Lovell & Christmas, 515 at 11 3-4c. The representative of Jas. Alexander & Co. bid 11 11-16c for the balance, but only secured 1645 boxes, the remainder, about 650 boxes, being afterwards disposed of on the curb.

Books, magazines or periodicals bound or rebound in any style at very reasonable prices. Blank books, such as journals, ledgers, day books with any kind of ruling, made to order.

"THE MAPLE LEAF."

The song Canadians love to sing,
The song of country, home and King,
The song that swells ten thousand throats,
That stirs the heart like trumpet notes,
That cheers the soul when far away
From home, in life's divided way,
Its author now is thro' death's portal,
He and his song are both immortal.

USE COAL AT PIT MOUTH.

New Method of Utilizing Mine Products as Power Producer.

Of special interest to the electrical fraternity, power users and manufacturing industries is the proposed installation at Senator Mitchell's Chignecto coal mines in Nova Scotia, says The Canadian Electrical News.

This electric plant, designed to transmit power to Amherst, Moncton, and intermediate towns, has the commendation of Mr. Thomas Alva Edison. Mr. Edison in an interview recently with Mr. James Creelman said: "It would not surprise me to learn that some one had seized the secret of the production of electricity by direct process. This will abolish the carrying of coal for the production of electricty. Instead of transporting such gross material as coal to get power we shall set up plants at the mouth of the mines and generate the power there, and transmit it wherever it is needed by copper wires.

Saving of Energy.

"It is preposterous to keep on putting the coal mines on wheels; it is too clumsy, too costly, and there is no necessity for it. It is easier to convey molecular vibration — millions of waves a second — than freight cars full of crude matter. We can ship one hundred thousand horse power over a wire more quickly and more economically than we can send the equivalent in coal over a railroad track.

"We must eliminate the railroad altogether from the problem; what we want is the resultant, the utmost energy that can be produced. Everything points to the fact that in the near future electricity will be produced for general consumption in great power houses at the mouths of coal pits. This is the logical and common sense outcome of present events.

Carried by Wires.

"Now, the truth is that it will cost one-third less to transport electrical power by wire than to convey it in the form of coal in railroad cars. We can turn that coal into electricity at the mine and convey it by wire at less than half the cost of freighting coal."

Where water powers are not available, the great power plants will be set in the coal fields, and do away with individual steam plants and electric light will become cheaper than gas.

Waste Utilized.

A similar plan in Lancashire, England, has been commercially successful, and it is a debatable question, everything carefully considered, if coal power under these conditions is not as cheap in the long run or cheaper than that produced from water.

At the mouth of the Chignecto mines, where there is an inexhaustible supply of coal, the product of the mine run embraces about 20 per cent. of a grade of coal so cheap that it does not pay to transport it by rail. This coal, however, must be removed from the mine with that of better grade. The power development, with up-to-date mechanical stokers, will for some time to come be supplied economically with what is now practically refuse.

There is every reason to believe that this enterprise will in time rival in size, by the attraction of new enterprises to its vicinity, such gigantic water power developments as Niagara Falls and Shawinigan.

B. C.'s Farewell to Sir Henri Joly.

Never has British Columbia regretted the departure of a Lieutenant-Governor so keenly as in the case of Sir Henri Joly de Lotbiniere, the Chevalier Bayard of Quebec. The courtly old gentleman, who has given three sons to the Imperial service, was thus bidden farewell by Capt. Clive Phillips-Wolley, the Victoria poet:

Good-bye, that word rings hollow when we part,
The prayer has vanished from the threadbare phrase,
Clipped by the hurry of discourteous
days,
Born of the lips, unfathered by the heart.

Our "God be with you" is a people's prayer,
A people loth to let a loved one go,
A people conscious of the debt they owe,
A people losing one they would not spare.

You taught us all the lesson of your race,
That strength may dwell in utter gentleness,
That courtesy is born of kindliness,
And perfect courage sheathed in perfect grace.

Two nations warring till the time grew ripe,
Alternately the whetstone and the blade,
A nation in our Canada have made
Of which, Hope whispers, you may be the type.

God grant it, and for work in His name done,
A mellow autumn and a people's thanks,
Till dreaming on your mighty river's banks,
Long hence you pass to rest that you have won.

Two Cents For an Ounce.

Beginning on New Year's Day, 1907, letters weighing an ounce will be carried throughout the British Empire for two cents, which will be double the weight now allowed, half an ounce. This increase in weight also applies to all foreign countries, the rate for which is three cents. At the instance of the British delegates to the Postal Union convention at Rome, just closed, this regulation was adopted. Another postal reform which was adopted on motion of the British delegates is the introduction of a reply coupon, a little postal order to bearer, exchangeable in any country for a union postage stamp.

OPEN THE WINDOW.

Open the window, mother,
And let in the morning air;
The birds are singing blithely,
The sunshine is everywhere.
The freshness of early morning
On flower and tree still lies,
(Give me a folded paper,
I must lambast those flies.)

Open the window, mother,
The heat of the noonday glare
Is tempered by waving branches
Which play in the moving air,
The beauty and warmth of the sunlight
Clears mist from the heart and mind,
(For mercy's sake, kill that spider,
It just dropped down from the blinds)

Open the window, mother,
The dewy eve is come,
Sweet with the drowsy chirping
Of birds in their leafy home;
Brilliant with sunset's flowers,
Whose hints gleam in the room,
(Those moths will eat your carpets,
Just drive them out with the broom.)

Open the window, mother,
For night has come at last,
The toil and heat of the long day,
Its haste and worry are past;
The night brings a benediction
With its air so cool and clear,
(I wonder how many more 'skeeters
I'll kill before morning is here.)

So open the windows, mother,
Morning and noon and night,
Never mind flies nor spiders,
Nor moths nor mosquitoes that bite;
Let in the air and sunshine,
Let in the breeze and song,
For life is more than the carpets,
And you will thus it prolong.

The last head of the great Scottish house of Lindsay and de jure Earl of Crawford died in 1744 in the capacity of ostler in an inn at Kinkwall in the Orkneys, and in four generations the descendants of Sir Richard Knightley of Fawsley (the head of one of the oldest and most distinguished families in England) and his wife, daughter of the great Protector Somerset, ended as obscure London tradesmen—drapers and oil men outside the city gates.

It is a fact well known to all students of family history, said a genealogical expert to a writer for London Tit-Bits, that, if you want to find the "bluest blood" and the longest descents, you must go, not to the peerage, but to the great middle classes, and even lower, and that many a proud wearer of a duke's or an earl's coronet to-day has a pedigree which will not compare for distinction with that of some of his tradesmen or tenants. Yes, I know this is a surprising statement, but it is a sober statement of the truth. There are very few of our present peers who can trace their descent from the great nobles of the days of chivalry or earlier. The founder of one line of marquesses was an innkeeper; of a line of earls a grazier, and so on, and many of the greatest aristocrats of our time owe their rank and wealth to the enterprise and luck of city apprentices.

Here is something for Belleville people to ponder over; In a paper read before the American Association for the Advancement of Science, in convention assembled at Ithaca, N. Y., Mr. Hale, Superintendent of the public bath system of Brooklyn, said in part;

"Whatever may be thought of other matters, it seems to me that any system of free public baths is a most important and beneficial exercise of municipal ownership, conducing at it does to public health and utility and public morals. The five public baths in Brooklyn were used by 1,500,000 persons last summer."

In Mr. Hale's opinion it was doubtful if public funds could be better expended than in providing public baths. His experience told him that it was beneficial to a community both physically and morally.

The First Man.

About the middle of the seventeenth century Isaac de la Peyrere, in an odd little volume entitled "The Pre-Adamites," attempted to prove that there were two creations of men—the first on the sixth day of the week of creation, when "God created man male and female." The rabbis interpret the above passage of holy writ as meaning that the first race of human beings were creatures in which both sexes were united in the same individual. According to De la Peyrere, Adam was the result of the second creation, the "male and female" being having been the progenitor of the gentiles, Adam the father of the Jews. A great many people fell in with the views of De la Peyrere, and he was the lion of the hour. His followers were called "Pre-Adamites," and they increased in numbers rapidly until finally the movement became so strong that the founder of the sect was compelled to go to Rome and abjure his doctrine at the feet of Pope Alexander VII.

Savages and Snuff.

The habit of snuff taking has been confirmed among savage tribes for ages past. In South Africa it is used among Swazis, Basutos and Matabeles. Every Zulu today, even in towns, carries a little square box suspended around his neck by a piece of string or gut, and the snuff spoon (for they do not indulge in the homely "pinch"), carved out of sheep's bone, often ornamented with intricate geometrical designs and for convenience carried hanging downward through a slit in the lobe of the ear. The Zulu regards the lobe of his ear as a useful receptable for various small articles he meets with. The umfaan, or house boy, universally met with in Natal, has a penchant for safety pins, which have to be carefully hidden from his sharp eyes. Even then he is usually to be seen, after going through the rooms, with a string of these pins suspended from each ear until they reach his shoulders.

Neckties as Railway Signals.

"Red neckties are always worn by foreign brakemen and conductors. Ever notice it?" said a railroader.

"No. Why is it?"

"As a safety device," was the reply. "These red neckties that flash upon your gaze on the railroads of Italy, France, Germany and England are not a sign that the people have a gay taste, but that they are cautious and prudent.

"The neckties are supplied free by the railroad companies for use as danger signals in emergency. Thus, no matter when or where an accident may happen, there is no need to search or scramble for a red flag, but the brakeman whips off his red necktie and waves it frantically aloft."

LAKE SHORE SPIRIT.

Throughout the entire length and breadth of the great Lake Shore Railway System there is a spirit of co-operation and personal responsibility on the part of employees from the highest to the lowest that is reflected in every detail of the road's operation. The traveller feels that the great army of trained workers have his welfare and comfort at heart as much as though he were the only patron of the road. This spirit—the Lake Shore spirit—is one of the features that have made this line so popular among experienced travellers. Comfort, speed, safety and punctuality here have reached their highest development. Write for full information to J. W. Daly, Chief A.G.P.A., Buffalo, N. Y.; A. J. Smith, G.P.A., Cleveland, O.; or W. J. Lynch, Pass'gr Traffic Mgr., Chicago, and tell the agent to have your ticket read "via Buffalo and The Lake Shore Railway."

It doesn't seem half so hard to pay your debts when you haven't any.

"WHOSE SON ART THOU"

HEREDITY AND ITS POTENT INFLUENCE IN MOLDING LIFE.

ANCESTORS AND CHARACTER

Rev. Dr. Talmage Points Out Only Way In Which an Evil Inheritance From One's Ancestors May Be Overcome—Advises That Young People Find Their Limitations Physically, Mentally, Morally and Spiritually.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1906, by Frederick Diver, Toronto, at the Dept. of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., July 8.—Heredity and its potent influence in molding life and character is discussed by the preacher, who points out the only way in which an evil inheritance from one's ancestors may be overcome. The text is I Samuel xvii, 58, "Whose son art thou, thou young man?"

If you were to ask the average American, "Would you like to live in Europe?" in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred he would answer, "No"—emphatically no. Europe is not the place for a poor man or for the son of a poor man, but only for the aristocrat. If a man has not had a father and a grandfather and a great-grandfather belonging to the nobility he has but little chance of social recognition. There the question which man asks man is not "Who are you?" or "What have you done?" or "What do you know?" but "Who was your father?" "Who was your mother?" People across the seas seem to think more about the cradle in which you were rocked as a baby than about the schools in which you have studied and the business house in which you have worked.

You say this absurdity of reverence for blood is never more demonstrated than in the unhappiness of some of our international marriages. Many of the poverty stricken titled families of Europe want the American ducats. Their palms are itching after the American gold. But when the dukes and the earls and the marquises woo America's fairest daughters and take them to their dingy ancestral halls the titled mothers-in-law and sisters-in-law and cousins-in-law patronize and slight the foreign interloper. Though their wedding robes may be made out of pearls and their dowries be as big as the open chest of a Monte Cristo, yet because their blood is not "blue" the old families will have as little as possible to do with the American brides.

Yes, it is absurd to worship at the graves of ancestors as do some of the titled families of Europe. When in January, 1750, the ancestral bones of the Hohenzollerns were being moved into the new crypts of the great cathedral where they now sleep, Frederick the Great, who had a deep reverence for his grandfather, Frederick William, the great elector, had his ancestor's coffin opened. Then he looked with adoration upon the face of the dead. He patted the hands moldering into dust as he turned to his courtiers and said, "Ah, gentlemen, these are the hands which did the great works! These are the sacred hands!" So some people reverence their dead ancestors and never cease to hold high their heads in pride of what their great-grandfathers did, though their own hands have never done anything remarkable and though they have been all their lives mere parasites, depending on others for their support and advancement.

But though Europe may err in too much reverence for the dead, I believe Americans err just as much on the other side when they pretend to despise the sources from which their family blood is derived. The sins of the fathers are visited upon the children, even unto the third and fourth generations. By the same law of heritage the virtues of the parents are also transmitted through the blood. I want you this morning to analyze your blood in the gospel laboratories. I would put your eye to the gospel microscope and invite you to examine your ancestral corpuscles. I want you to find your limitations physically, mentally, morally and spiritually. And as some of us learn how narrow our horizons may be on account of our family blood I would also have some of us learn how great our opportunities of life are on account of father and mother and grandparents and great-grandparents whose qualities we inherit.

I would take you, in the first place, and examine you in reference to your ancestors in a physical sense. I would ask you such questions as the life insurance doctor does when you are about to take out a new policy. Are your two parents alive? At what age did they die? Of what disease? Are your uncles and aunts alive? At what age and of what disease did they die? How long did your grandparents on your mother's side live? How long did your grandparents on your father's side live? What were the diseases of which they died? Are your brothers and sisters all living? What did your brother and two sisters die of? You look up sharply and say to the life insurance physician: "Doctor, I am not here to get my family or my dead ancestors insured. I want to get my own life insured. Why are you asking me all these questions?" The physician will answer: "It is very important for me to ask these questions. I want to find the family weaknesses. If I find that your blood is tainted with the consumption microbe or that your parents died very young on account of some nervous complaint or if I find too many cancers among your ancestors, I shall not recommend your proposal. You must not only submit to a rigid physical examination of your own lungs, but you must also testify concerning the lungs of your father and grandfathers." Why will we not be as rigid in dealing with our own physical health and in recognizing our own physical limitations as are the life insurance companies when we come to them for insurance?

When we examine the records of your family we find that several relatives have died of consumption. The mother had it before you were born. For years you have had a weak throat and have been kept in the house every winter for months on account of a cough. Now, what is the use of trying to live in New England or in Chicago or Minneapolis? What is the use of your taking a clerkship in a dark store, out of the sunlight, where you have to be housed day in and day out? Why not go to Texas or Florida or Colorado or California, where you can work and live out of doors all the time? Or perhaps your ancestral weakness is found in the digestion. You inherited a weak stomach from your father. What are you doing for it? Are you dieting yourself? Do you take care that you have the proper kind of food to eat and that you masticate it very slowly? Or perhaps your ancestral weakness is a weak nervous system. Do you see that you cease to work at the right time and go off regularly and systematically to rest? We can poohpooh all we like at our ancestors, but some of their bodies, with all their physical strength and weaknesses, are reproduced in our own. "Whose son art thou, thou young man?" Were you well born physically? If you were not well born are you guarding against the physical weaknesses you inherited from your father and grandfather and great-great-grandfather?

But I take a step further in my subject and assert that we inherit our ancestors' mental acumen as well as their strength of lungs and stomach and heart and liver. We inherit the gray matter in our brain as well as our depth of chest and clearness of vision. We inherit the ability of our minds to think and to reason as well as the conformation of our craniums, within the dome of which that brain is protected and thinks and plans and studies the problems of life. We recognize the inheritable qualities of the mind in which the lower orders of animals are produced. Why should we not be willing to grant that man inherits his mental acumen also?

You can take one of the most ordinary animals, if you will, away from his parents when he is very young and never let him associate with his kind, and yet that animal will develop the mental characteristics of his family, not one member of which, perhaps, he has ever seen since he was a few weeks old. Some years ago a friend was talking to a professor of one of the New England colleges. He said, "I do not believe all this stuff told about beavers being able to build dams." The professor said nothing at the time. A few weeks later he sent his skeptical friend a little baby beaver, which he had bought from a hunter. This beaver became a tame pet in the family. The beaver, if rightly domesticated, becomes as lovable as a little dog. All went quietly for a time. The little baby beaver did not seem to have any desire to build a dam. But one day a leaky pail was put in the back kitchen. No sooner did the little animal see it than he ran out in the yard and brought back a chip in his mouth and began to build a dam. The skeptical friend of the professor came in and saw the creature at work. He ordered the pail to be left just where it was and kept full of water. As the water continued to leak out of the pail the little beaver continued to work at his dam. And, says The Lewiston Journal, from which the account was taken, within four weeks that little beaver, who had never seen another beaver building, constructed a solid dam all around that leaking pail.

So it is with the inherited abilities of the human mind. A child may be taken from his parents when young, yet that child's mind will to a certain extent be a reproduction of some ancestor's mind, whom he may never have seen or heard of. This fact can be demonstrated in many ways.

We inherit our physical and mental tendencies, then, but we do more than that. We also inherit our capacities. As some people are born with a musical gift or an artist's gift or with weak legs or with weak eyes, so some people are born impulsive or lethargic or gruff or gentle or lazy or energetic or brave or cowardly. Our way of dealing with the brain or the body is just as much an ancestral heritage as the body and the mind themselves. Let me illustrate my thought by a very common incident of everyday life:

Here, for instance, is a child born with the quality of cautiousness well developed. This child's father and mother and grandfathers and grandmothers were all cautious. The male ancestors were not men of adventure. They were not fishermen, defying the storms off the banks of Newfoundland. But these ancestors were quiet merchants of the city. What is the result? The country boy who roams over the fields barefooted laughs at the city boy as a coward. By birth and education he is in direct contrast to him and is afraid of nothing. The horses' hoofs and the barking dogs and the squirming snakes and the deadly tarantulas mean no more to him than so many harmless doves or fleeing cottontail rabbits. In the one case the child both by birth and by education is a cautious child, while in the other, the country boy, by birth and education, knows not what physical fear means.

The sins of the fathers and mothers, as well as their virtues, are visited upon the children even to the third and the fourth generations. I believe history and statistics prove it. Now, what are to be the great practical deductions? In the first place, I would charge you to have sympathy with those who prenatally as well as by environment in childhood had a bad start in life. Do not be too harsh upon the wayward ones unless you find out who was their father and who their mother. If even with all the good physical and moral ancestral blood flowing in your veins you have had such a hard time to do right, how much harder must it be for that man to do right who was born wrong and whose early parental training has not been what it ought to have been? By the law of birth you have no right to judge all men alike. It is not fair or just or right. Why are we not ready to confess the difference of man from man in a moral and a spiritual and a physical sense?

In almost every family there are certain moral or spiritual delinquencies to be found in the ancestral records. We do not speak much about their shortcomings in public. The family skeletons are nearly always put in the farthest corners of the darkest closets. We not only shut the doors of these closets, but doubly lock them with two different locks. Then we plug up the keyholes lest some one might be able to peep through and see the gray skulls. But the skeletons are there just the same. Perhaps your father was a drunkard or perhaps his weakness was in reference to money matters. If I should ask you, "How much of an estate did he leave?" you would answer, "Nothing." Aye, perhaps he left worse than nothing. Perhaps he did not pay his honest debts or perhaps he was harsh to his family. If you were to tell the truth you would not say, "My mother died of pneumonia," but you would say, "My mother died of a broken heart." The family trouble never got out, but your mother knew, and you knew, and all the children knew.

Now, my friends, I do not want you to publish your past family difficulties. But what I do want is for you never to forget the moral weaknesses of that ancestor. Just as you should guard your body against the tendency to consumption which you may have inherited from your mother you should guard against the special moral or the spiritual weakness which you may have inherited from your father or one of your grandparents. Brother, you cannot afford to trifle with that intoxicating glass. You cannot afford to do it any more than could Henry Wilson, who was once vice-president of the United States. For years he was one of the very few prominent officials in the city of Washington who would turn down his glass at the public banquets. One day some one asked him why he was so pronounced upon the temperance question, and he replied: "I was brought up in the home of a drunkard. In order to be free of the sight of a drunken father, as a little boy I ran away from home and changed my name. The blood of a drunken parent is in my veins, and I cannot afford to trifle with this evil." Henry Wilson was not the real name if the vice-president of the United States in 1873. My friend, if the intoxicating fires are in your blood, beware how you trifle with the curse which destroyed the manhood of that noble parent.

You, on the other hand, cannot afford to enter any speculative business. Your father may have lost a fortune in Wall street. He may not have been a gambler with cards, but he was with stocks. You cannot afford to take any business position away from home. You have a noble Christian wife and three children. As long as you are in their surroundings you are all right. But beware of that moral delinquency of your ancestor. Better give up that membership at the club. You may have greater opportunity there to yield to that evil tendency. You know it. Beware. You are all right if by the help of God you turn and flee that danger as you would run from a mad dog. But do not stand and hesitate. Do not let that evil temptation which overthrew one of your ancestors puts its fatal hand upon you, else you are gone. Run from that temptation. In God's name, run, run, run!

Nor do I wish to discourage you. These evil propensities in your nature may be turned to useful purposes. The philosophers tell us that dirt is only matter in the wrong place. The qualities which cause you so much anxiety may be used for your own good and the good of your country and the good of Christ's cause. The ingenuity and skill in the use of tools which the burglar employs in breaking into houses and picking the locks of safes is not an evil, but only a valuable power prostituted to evil purposes. With his powers he might be one of the most useful mechanics. So your evil propensities may be turned to your advantage and to that of society.

But shall I stop here? No. The Bible tells us that the sins of the fathers are visited upon the children. But are not the virtues of the parents also transmitted. Then on account of the glorious Christian triumphs of your parents and grandparents and great-grandparents are these not mighty possibilities of Christian usefulness also within your own lives? By the very words of praise which you are continually using in speaking of your ancestors I know they are possible to you also. What kind of a woman was your mother? "Ah," you answer, "my mother was one of the noblest Christian women who ever lived. I cannot think of her ever doing anything of which I could say, 'I wish mother had not done that.' We never had much money, but she always had enough to help the needy. Then she was the best nurse in our town. She was always hunting up some poor sick people and staying with them overnight. She never spoke in public except to pray. But, my, she could pray! Then my father. What a fine man he was. Why, he was so honest and fair and true that whenever the neighbors had a dispute they would come to him and let him settle it for them. Ah, yes," you say, "that was a beautiful Christian home in which I was brought up! And as far as I can make out my grandparents on both my father's and mother's side were just the same kind of Christian people as were their children." Is that so, my brother? Is that so, my sister? Then I know the possibilities of mighty Christian usefulness are within you. You have inherited these possibilities. Will you not here and now surrender your heart to Jesus Christ's service and beg him to make you like those Christian parents who gave you birth?

And as I am now pleading with you not to longer resist those good ancestral tendencies I want to ask you a question. Tell me, do you not at times have a strange, intense longing come into your heart in the quiet of your own room? This yearning and longing seems to say: "Oh, why do I not give up this selfish life of sin? Why do I not become a gentle, pure, noble Christian character, as was my mother or my father or my grandmothers and my grandfathers?" Do you know what that longing was? It was the Christian blood of your ancestors pleading with you to lead the Christian life. Will you not obey that call and come and surrender your lives to the Master's service? There are great possibilities of Christian usefulness in you. By your family record I know it. When I ask you the words of my text, "Whose son art thou?" will you hear and now answer, "I am the son of a Christian, and by the help and pardon and mercy of my father's and mother's God I will be a Christian too." Whose son art thou, young man? Whose daughter art thou, young woman? Whose? Whose? Art thou a child of God?

CHAPTER I.

NEARLY the entire boat load of passengers was jammed along the forward gates, ready to spring out upon the Jersey wharf, restive to reach the waiting trains, but quite apart from all these whose faces were set westward three people—a girl, a man nearing forty and a slim lad—lingered on the after deck as though loath to take their leave of the imperial city.

The resemblance of the monstrous hive of humankind to a height of land was so marked, so singular, that the girl remarked upon it, and the boy, a pale lad of seventeen, cried out in shrill staccato:

"Yes; but think of the real mountains we're going to climb!"

The girl did not speak for a moment, and when she did her voice was distinctly sorrowful. "I feel as though I were saying goodby to everything worth while."

"Including me?" asked her escort.

She did not smile, but her accent was kindly as she answered, "Yes, Wayne, including you."

"Oh, sis, you make me tired!" cried the boy. "Just as if going west were bidding goodby to everything!" He beat his thin chest. "I'm just beginning to live now. I'm glad to get away from the stuffy old town. I want to see something besides Fifth avenue and Central park."

Wayne Peabody laughed good naturedly down at the boy. "You wouldn't care if civilization did stop at the west bank of the Hudson river, would you?"

"I should say not. I'm tired of it all—the noise and the pavements and the heat and the wetness. I want to get out where the wolves and the cranes and the cowboys are; I want to hit the trail and find where father's camps were."

The girl spoke musingly. "It's singular, but I have a premonition of some dark fate—some vague sorrow. I never felt so before—not even on my trip to Egypt. If I don't come back I want you to note that I was forewarned. Let's go forward."

Peabody remarked in a low voice: "Louis is transformed already. It will do him all kinds of good to go west."

"I hope so," she replied rather drearily, "but he seems unwholesomely excited at the present moment."

"He'll get over that."

"I fear he will be disappointed. Father's trip was made nearly twenty-five years ago, when it was a really wonderful land."

"He is young. He will reimagine it."

The boy stood like some beautiful animal poised for a spring as the ferry shouldered its clumsy way into the Jersey dock. He was of less bulk than his strong, composed, modish sister, and his face was as dark, as mobile and as eager as hers was fair and impassive. Peabody experienced once again a twinge of keen regret that Ann had not some of her brother's radiant enthusiasm.

Surrounded by porters and wearing an air of command, Louis led the way to the sleeping car, impatient of his sister's deliberation. On one hip he carried a pair of large field glasses and over the other a costly camera, while half concealed cases of pencils and pads of drawing paper bulging from his pockets announced his artistic intention.

As the time for the train to start drew near Peabody strove to win some softer word from Ann, but she was not of those who manifest emotion. Her training and her temperament were alike opposed to easy expression. When he tried to take her hand a second time with eyes that entreated she recoiled.

"No, no! You have no right to expect that!"

He was no longer a boy, and he was bred to self control; therefore, though his voice trembled a little, he spoke quietly: "Goodby, Ann. Write every day, won't you?"

In a voice which chilled him she replied: "Every day is pretty often, but you will hear from me. Go and see mother, please. She will not say so, but she will be glad to have you come."

"Depend upon me," he said, lifting his hat. His bearded face betrayed no emotion, but his eyes were hot with pain and grief.

The girl on her part felt a sudden twinge of remorse as she left him there, a fine, strong, manly suitor, who uttered no complaint, though she wounded him. The twitching of his lips troubled her, but she did not relent. In her heart she said: "I can't help it. It isn't in me. He shouldn't ask it."

Louis threw himself flat on the couch in their stateroom and said boyishly: "Gee! We're off at last. Now let her whiz. This old train can't go fast enough for me."

Looking down at him at that moment, Ann's bosom swelled with an emotion almost maternal. "How thin he is," she thought, as her eyes took in his slight body. "I'll go. I'll do anything for him, if only he can grow strong and well."

She loved that slender lad and assumed for him a greater weight of care and hope and fear than for any other human being. He was so like his father—the soul restless as flame, the slender body racked, worn with endless enthusiasms, the burning, mesmeric eyes and the delicate mouth. All these she had known and valued in her father, and when the doctor seriously advised the Rocky mountains she readily gave up her own plans, and here and now she sat, rushing toward the west to a town repulsive to her, a place of emptiness and weariness, a social desert, where no one lived but her cousins, the Barnetts, to whose hospitable door they were bound as voyagers on a wide sea to a snug harbor. Without that home as a point of arrival Ann Rupert would have been in such uncertainty of mind as besets a sailor on a chartless sea.

She was making this abhorrent trip in order that her brother might thrive in his physical well being as well as in his art. He had recently determined on being an illustrator of wild animal books. "I'm going to study them at first hand," he repeated often, "the way Melborn Foster has done. And, besides, I want to illustrate father's journal." This journal, the record of a trip into the west made by Philip Rupert before his marriage, had come to be the most powerful influence in the lad's life. It was a worn little red book in which the father had written the daily happenings and impressions of his trip, and its discovery by Louis in a box of old papers had quite transformed his life. It had made him an American, filling him with a longing for the "Hesperian mountains," as the father called the romantic land he had seen but once, but whose splendor lived with him throughout the remainder of his short life.

As they sat at the table in the dining car Ann again listened indulgently to her brother's plans, and permitted him to order the dinner and assume all the manners of a grown man, honestly trying to conceal her own weariness of spirit, sincerely regretful of her bitter words on the ferry.

Louis was not weary. He eyed every man who came in, avid to discover some western trait, some outward sign of inward difference between himself and his companions, but could not. They were all quite commonplace business men, well dressed, close clipped and urbane of manner. Some of them were evidently salesmen going over to Philadelphia or out to Chicago, and they all ate long and with every evidence of enjoyment. Some of the women were young and pretty—students returning to the west for their summer vacations.

Once more in the privacy of her stateroom and looking out at the landscape reeling past, Ann sank back in her seat wholly dismayed. "What in the world can I do out there?" she asked herself most poignantly. "Of course they don't play golf or tennis, and I can't ride, and, besides, whom could I play with? Jeannette is not a bit athletic." And again the small round of her interests —she had no gayeties—was borne in upon her. "I shall die of inactivity."

Louis excused himself quite formally and went back into the smoking compartment to sit with the men, while Ann, left alone, gave herself up to a close, half ironic study of the absurdity of her position. With a dozen most desirable invitations to distinguished London homes, with everything before her that a girl of her age and tastes could desire, she had turned away to face the crude conditions of a western state in a warm glow of sisterly affection.

"Hello, Don!" shouted Louis.

She took up the little red book, in which she had taken only a languid interest before, and, turning the leaves at random, fell upon bits of description that stirred her unaccountably. Now that she was about to enter this land of her father's delight, the words took on passion and power.

They arrived in Chicago behind their schedule time and had but a few minutes in which to make their transfer, and so they saw little of the great central metropolis. To them it was only a gloomy, clangorous shed fitted with long strings of railway coaches all marked with strange names—names which meant little to her, but which excited Louis almost to tears. "See," he cried, "there is a car from Oregon and one from Wyoming!" The people who filled the coaches were not markedly different at first glance from those she had been traveling with, but Louis, more keenly discerning, began to distinguish types at once, and when one or two big men came in wearing wide hats and chin beards he trembled with joy. "There are some cattlemen—I'm sure of it," he whispered hoarsely.

Louis did not return to the Pullman till after the train had left the city, and she was just beginning to wonder thereat when he came in with eyes ablaze. "I've struck 'em at last!" he fairly shouted in her ear. "They're all up in the reclining chairs, chin bearders, spitters and all. I'm just crazy to sketch two or three of them. It doesn't pay to ride in a stateroom if you want to see types," he added in conclusive discontent.

As that day and the next wore on the boy began to burn with a new phase of his fever. He commenced to count the hours till he might be able to discern Mogalyon, the great peak of the Rampart range, whose fame is worldwide. Ann experienced her first decided flush of interest as the swinging, reeling rush of the train brought the great peak into view, a dim, blue dome against the western sky.

At last, just as the red was paling out of the sky, the train swung to the left on its southerly course, and the whole Rampart range began to stretch and wind away to northward and southward, while between the plain and the foothills rolled a tawny sea of sod, deeply marked with ravines and dotted with pine clad buttes. The range grew dimmer as they gazed, and at last even Louis was content to sink back in his seat and wait.

"It isn't a bit as I expected it to be," he said, "but it is glorious. That purple green was wonderful. I'm going to try to get that some time. It isn't as precipitous as the Alps, but it's superb just the same, and just think how much wilder it was when father came here!"

"I'm glad you were not disappointed, boy," she replied, laying her hand on his shoulder and caressing his cheek, "but you need rest. You're seeing too much."

The train was now winding down toward Valley Springs, and only the splendid sky line of the range could be distinguished as the lights of the town began to sparkle out of the obscure murk.

The porter, with brush in hand, came down the aisle. "This is Valley Springs, miss."

They were met at the car door by a big, smiling man in modish summer dress, while behind him stood a pale, sweet faced woman in blue.

"Hello, Don!" shouted Louis.

"Hello, laddie! How do you do, Ann?" replied Barnett, and as Ann and her cousin embraced the big man caught Louis by the hand. "How's your muscle, my boy? Got all your traps? Here, Tom!" he called to a colored footman, "look out for these things."

CHAPTER II.

ANN'S entrance into the Barnett home cut her off from all contact with life distinctly western. She found herself still amid the velvet and silver of the parlor car and saw only remotely those who slept all night in the cramped corners of the ordinary coaches. Her cousins were not native; they were, indeed, only translated Philadelphians who had gone west in search of health—at least Mrs. Barnett was there for that reason. Her husband made the change for love of his wife.

A certain percentage of the townspeople and the members of the special circle in which the Barnetts moved were health seekers, and Ann was deeply relieved to find that all the comforts of an eastern home were to be enjoyed in the big graystone houses on Rampart avenue. Indeed, the Barnetts lived quite as they would have done in Seabright or Lenox. They had a dozen horses, a suitable assortment of vehicles, saddles and bridles and were enthusiasts concerning polo and golf. Their neighbors and friends were unfailingly ecstatic in praise of the climate and the views and seemed illogically anxious to placate the prejudices of this haughty, pale faced, scarlet lipped young girl, who looked with calm eyes upon the great peak glooming to the westward. They formed, in fact, a colony of alien health seekers, busied with pleasures, set distinctly apart from the toilers and the traders of the place.

Ann was puzzled and a bit bored by their insistence on winning her admiration of the mountains and, being naturally perverse, withheld the expressions of pleasure she might otherwise have uttered, for she was profoundly moved by what she saw.

"I never did understand that girl," said Donnelly Barnett to his wife one night after a drive into the great Bear canyon. "She has everything to make her happy, and yet she goes about torpid as an oyster. What's the matter with her?"

Jeannette sighed. "That's her mother's blood. She's like her mother in a hundred ways. Louis is exactly like his father. I remember when he came back from his first and only trip to the west. I was only a child, but I recall his enthusiasm. He was a lovable fellow, but I never could stand Alicia. She was positively stony. I have hopes of Ann. Her hand is strong and warm —human, in fact. Don't you think her indifference a pose?"

"I wish it were. No, it's genuine."

"She needs to be shaken up by a good, hot love affair. Some man will come"—

"That's what I've been saying, but the man don't come. She's twenty-six."

"How awful!"

"That's the part I don't understand about Ann. She has money, is handsome, and yet here she is quite disengaged, if we except her affair with Peabody, which Adney writes is quite as tepid as any of Ann's other affairs."

"Well, now, I'll tell you. She's come to the right place to have men ride up and demand attention. If she doesn't have at least an offer a week it will not be my fault. I'm going to invite all the young fellows home to dinner while she's here. New watch things 'bile.'"

Barnett, nominally a mining broker, was, in fact, president of the polo club, secretary of the Sage Grass Golf association—in short, financial nurse to every collection of amiable sports in the town. He knew all "the best fellows" in the state and now became more popular than ever. The young men accepted his dinner invitations with gratitude, and each and all paid prompt and undisguised court to "the proud eastern beauty," as one young fellow called her. But they soon acknowledged failure. Her reserve led to a sense of injury and was reported to be arrogance. They were seldom flattered by the slightest unbending on her part.

However, several of these young fellows turned out on acquaintance to be socially related to some of her friends in Boston and New York and in that way won a certain acceptance which no mere civil engineer from Omaha or professor from St. Louis could hope to attain. They were met on the conventional plane, and they got no further at any time.

Meanwhile Ann was really troubled about Louis. He was eating less and less each day, and his sleep was broken, and at the end of the first week he fell in a state of collapse. The excitement, the late hours, the contact with new types and, above all, the attempt to understand the country and his relationship with it had worn him out. Then Ann said in her decisive way: "I don't believe this altitude is good for Louis. I think I will take him home again."

"Oh, don't do that. It isn't the altitude; it's the social whirl. Send him down to my ranch. It's a hole of a place, but it's just what he needs—nothing to see but coyotes and cowboys. We'll put him under Rob Raymond's wing. Rob's my foreman and a good chap. He'll take to the boy like anything. I'm sure of it."

The plan as worked out by Barnett involved a trip on his automobile for the four of them; but he delayed too long. Mrs. Barnett entered upon one of her "poor spells," and Donnelly, faithful as a big dog, promptly told Louis to go ahead and not wait for the party. "I must stay and nurse Jeannette."

Ann was afraid to let Louis go alone, but Barnett poohpoohed her. "He'll get on all right. In fact, he'll rejoice to be free of us for a day or two. I'll wire the mail carrier to meet him and take him down, and I'll send a letter to Raymond to look out for him. He'll be more than safe. He'll be happy, and he won't miss us in the least."

Ann insisted on going down herself. "I want to see him properly settled," she said.

Barnett slyly winked at his wife. He really wanted to see Ann "jarred." "It'll do her good to rough it a little," he said privately. Thereupon Louis, trembling with eagerness, began to "rustle his outfit." He bought a pistol, a rifle, a broad rimmed hat, some blankets and the most highly ornamental cattleman's saddle in the Springs.

"What a child you are!" Ann exclaimed as she watched him, her eyes warming with love and pride. "You're a dear boy!" she added as he came to her side.

He looked up at her tenderly. "You're good to me, Hesper," he said fervently.

"Sh! Don't ever call me by that absurd name."

"It isn't absurd. I like it," he said.

Barnett, seated at his telephone, made every arrangement for them. "You'll be met by old Jones, and when you get there Mrs. Jones will look after you. She's a very good cook, so don't get nervous when you see her. She's not pretty. Raymond will do his best to entertain you, and when you come back you'd better ask Raymond to put his own horses in the cart and drive you out. He'll be better company than Jones."

CHAPTER III.

BARNETT'S ranch, one of his chief amusements, lay at the head of a valley surrounding a spring which was the source of Wildcat creek. The buildings stood just where the ravine opened out upon a grassy meadow. It was a comfortable place, shielded from the desert winds by the low hills to the north, while a small artificial pond, graveled and rimmed with cottonwoods and willows, gave it enviable distinction among the bleak and barren farmsteads. It was known as the "Goldfish ranch," for the reason that at one time Barnett had filled the pond with ornamental fish.

At about 5 o'clock of a hot and windless July day a horseman galloped swiftly up the valley into the yard and was met at the door of the house by a tall, composed young fellow in broad hat and spurs.

"Hello, Perry!" he said quietly. "You made good time."

Perry, a young Mexican, showed a score of his white teeth in a grin. "Here is letter. Some people coming to rancho tonight."

The young man tore the end from the long envelope and read the letter in silence. His face darkened. "Well, that's a nice case o' beans. So they're on the road, are they?"

"Yes; 'bout fo' miles back."

The young foreman turned toward the house, from which the faint strains of "Annie Laurie" came. A plump, light haired young fellow of about thirty sat tilted back in his chair, with one leg thrown across the corner of the table, playing a mouth organ.

"Hello, Rob!" he called.

Raymond was in bad humor. "Put up your plaything, you monkey, and listen to me a moment."

"What's up?"

Raymond pointed at the letter. "Read that. Nice thing the old man works on us." His indignation and disgust deepened into a growl. "This settles it. I'm going to pull out."

The other man composedly took up the letter. "What's he done now?"

"Going to quarter a crazy kid on us, a New York degenerate, who'll be a confounded nuisance every hour of the day. And that isn't all—the kid's sister is coming down to stay a few days"—here his dismay was fairly comical—"'to get the lad settled.'"

Baker's eyes widened, and his fat face lengthened. "Not comin' today?"

"That's what!"

"And us without no woman round."

Raymond broke forth again: "That's it, now. You'd suppose Barnett would at least read my letters. I told him last week that old Jonesy and his wife were going up to Skytown."

"Well, we're in for it. We can't turn a woman out on the plain. Jack, you slovenly whelp, set to work and clean up the mess you've made. Perry, go rope some snags for a fire. Hustle, now!"

Baker began to read the letter aloud in a monotonous, painful way, while Raymond moved about the room, picking up the litter.

My Dear Rob—I'm sending you a new hand and a visitor. They are cousins and nice people. The lad is not very strong, and I'm sending him down to you to get an upward turn. He's crazy on the subject of wild animals and cowboys and is a very clever artist. He'll want to have you pose for him.

Raymond came over and seized the stove lid lifter as if to break Baker's head. "We're to cook and purvey like boarding house keepers and doctor like a nurse at a health resort, and in addition we're to pose for a delicate youth who thinks we're 'material.' That settles me. I'm going up to Sky and take a shy at mining."

Baker broke forth into a slow drawl. "Hadn't you better strike a few attitudes so's to be in practice when the boy comes?"

Raymond throttled him half in earnest. "I've a mind to wring your neck," he said through his teeth. Then, suddenly releasing him, he again commanded him to clear away his dishes.

Baker was not yet finished with the letter. "Hold on. Don't be in a rush. I hain't got to the girl yet. That's what interests me. 'Miss Rupert will only stay a few days to get the lad settled.'"

"She can't stay too quick to suit me."

Baker's voice took on a little more expression as he read Barnett's appeal. "'Now, don't be cranky, old man. The Ruperts are good stuff, and on Mrs. Barnett's account'"—

"Ends up by laying me under obligation to his wife, knowing mighty well I'd do anything for her. Well, I'll do it, but I reckon the atmosphere won't bake a cake while she's here. I'll leave you and Dutch to do the talking. That'll chill her cold."

Baker began to show alarm. "Not by a hatful. Right here is where I take a sneak."

Raymond's brow darkened and his eyes threatened. "No you don't, my Christian friend and neighbor. You remain right here and do the honors. You will pass for the boss. I've got to cook."

"Great Peter, you mustn't do that! I can't carry it through. I'm no spieler."

"Play the mouth organ for her."

"Oh, see here, you're joshin'."

"You won't find it any 'josh.' You've been getting gay with me lately and need discipline. You pass for the foreman. Understand? You amuse the girl and pose for the boy, while I knock pots. That is settled. Now take the pail and rustle some water, and don't you peep."

Perry, entering at the door with an armful of brush, called out, with quiet joy, "The senora has come!"

Raymond seized him by the arm. "Listen here, Perry. The old man has written down to say that he has made Jack the boss. I'm going to cook a few days, and then I leave. You tell the other boys that Jack Baker is made foreman, and they've got to obey him. You sabbe?"

Perry grew solemn of face. "I sabbe. If you go, I go."

"Never mind that. Get out there and help take care of the team, and, Jack, you go too." He laid a hand on his back and pushed him through the doorway just as the two seated hack rounded the corral and drew up to the door.

"Oh, isn't this fine!" called a clear, boyish voice, and a moment later the cool, deliberate voice of a girl replied:

"Oh, what a blessed relief after the hot sun of the plain!"

Then Baker was heard to say, with elaborate courtesy: "Shall I help you out, miss? I reckon you are the friends of the old man—I mean Barnett." And a moment later the young girl stood in the doorway looking out at the plain. Raymond gave her but one glance from the corner of his eyes, but her firm, well balanced body and calm, high bred face touched him with admiration. His resolution to be disagreeable weakened, though he kept about his work.

"I never knew how grateful the shade of a tree could be," Ann said partly to Louis and partly to Baker. Is it always so fiercely bright here?"

"Oh, no; this is an unusual spell. I mean it is rather"—

She was now aware of Raymond moving sullenly about in the gloom wherein the stove sat. He was dressed in a light tan, loosely fitting shirt and brown trousers without braces. His spurs rattled at his heels as he walked to and fro, lithe and powerful. He did not look up—did not appear to notice what was going on, but came and went at his work, deft and absorbed.

Louis was instantly delighted with the room. "Isn't this ripping!" he exclaimed as he studied its furnishings. "Won't this make a strong background for an illustration? Only that stove—isn't it too bad?—that's all out of key. Why don't you have a fireplace, Mr. Raymond?" he asked, turning to Baker.

Raymond gave Baker a glance, and the plump one waded in: "Too little wood in this country. Cook, draw up a chair for the lady."

Raymond's eyes flashed with a silent menace, but he did as he was told, and as he put the chair down for Ann he dusted it with his hat.

Louis was husky voiced with joy. "Did you see that, Ann? I'll have to work that in somewhere."

Baker continued, in the same tone, "Can't you rustle a little grub for the company, Jack?"

Raymond curtly replied, "I'll try hard."

Baker, who was gaining self control, turned to Ann. "We have to humor our cooks out here. They're scarce and mighty uncertain in their minds—stop and shy at nothin', like a locoed steer."

Louis clapped his hands. "Oh, isn't the talk good, Ann? And these chairs —aren't they fine?"

"Cook made 'em," said Baker. "He's handy as a bootjack with tools."

Ann ignored the chairs, but studied the cook, whose curiously absorbed, sullen yet deft movements interested her. He appeared to be about thirty years of age, and his lean, powerful figure dignified the rough and dust stained clothes he wore. His profile was stern and manly, but his chin was youthful. His eyes she had not yet seen.

Raymond, on his part, was fairly abashed by the grace and youthful charm of his visitor. She reminded him, as she stood there calmly looking about the grimy walls, of the stories he had read of princesses visiting the huts of their peasantry. She was of good height, but the proud lift of her head made her seem taller than she was, and the cut of her gown, the color of her gloves and hat, told of good taste and the service of the best tailors and milliners. "Great Scott!" he said to himself. "She's an up to date beauty. What will I do to feed her?" And, imperturbable as he looked, his heart sank within him, and if he could have fled honorably he would have done so instantly.

"It sure makes a filling combination."

Raymond took no pains to be noiseless or dainty in his work, but every moment told. He sloshed out the coffeepot and sliced the bacon and stirred up the fire, all with a grace and quiet dignity which opened Ann's eyes in an effort to understand him. His hands were noticeably fine, and the poise of his head expressed strength and pride. He was very brown, almost as brown as the leather cuffs he wore on his arms.

Once, when he passed out of hearing, she turned to Baker suddenly and asked: "Why does your cook wear spurs? An affectation, I suppose."

Baker flushed and stammered. "Well, no; he has to help with the cattle once in awhile."

Raymond called to Perry, who was seated on the doorstep. "Perry, jump your horse and round up a dry cottonwood snag. This brush is of no sort of use. I want a hot fire."

Louis beamed on Ann. "He's talking just like Walter Owen's heroes."

Ann silenced him. "Hush! He'll hear you."

Baker, quite ready to take a fall out of Raymond, interposed: "He's a little hard at first, but reel sociable when you git him started. He's shy as a rabbit when they's any company round."

Raymond uttered a cough which made Baker start. "I guess I'll go out and see what that driver has done with his horses."

Louis sprang up. "I'll go, too, if you don't mind, sis."

As Ann looked round the low celled room in which the flies buzzed her eyes fell upon a little case of books in the corner. For lack of something better to do, she rose to inspect them. She was surprised to find them mainly essays, and wondered who of these men read Emerson and Burroughs. One of them was a book of verse. Raymond's name was on the fly leaf.

Old people are especially liable to Kidney and Bladder Irritation. The organs are weakened by age. This starts up inflammation—blood is not properly purified as it goes to the kidneys—and the bladder is unable to retain the urine properly. CHUMMED WITH CREES

FATE OF AN ENGLISHMAN WHO TOOK UP WITH INDIANS.

Married a Squaw and Went to the Bad With Liquor and Indifference—Delay in the Mails Lured Him Into the Miscegenate Marriage—Planned to Go North — A Story of the Early Days of Prince Albert.

If it had not been for the delay in the mails from the outer world, away back in the eighties, when Prince Albert was beyond the rim of the world, De Arcey would not have been lured into a miscegenate marriage, writes a correspondent of The Toronto Star from Regina. If he had escaped the snare of the "daughters of the stranger" he might to-day be living in honor in the halls of his fathers. Now he sleeps under the prairie sod, a victim of the blood lust of an Indian.

Oxford Culture Useless.

It is a story as old as the world, this tragedy of miscegenation, but De Arcey had not learned from his Oxford culture and his prized adventures in the four corners of the world. There was nothing in his lore of books or his experiences to protect him against the sorcery of a pair of dark eyes in a Cree girl's face, hooded by a gaudy Hudson's Bay blanket. There never is, when love stirs a young man's blood.

The Man from Prince Albert told me the story one Sunday as we loafed in the smoking-room of a western hotel. There was a reminiscent light in his eyes as he puffed slowly at his cigar, and so I kept silence for a time, and was rewarded by his tale of the poor fool who came to the western wilds in search of adventure, to meet his fate through an Indian maid's smirk.

Came as a Wanderer.

De Arcey came to Prince Albert away back about the beginning of the eighties, accompanied by an English servant and a band of Breed guides. He had crossed the then Great Lone Land, from Winnipeg, drawn by the wander lust, and was delighted with his experiences in the way of big game among the buffalo and the moose. Prince Albert was to have been merely a halting and outfitting place, for the had a scheme to penetrate to the far north to the Coppermine River country in the footsteps of explorers. He pitched his tent here, and was entertained at the Hudson's Bay fort and the Police Barracks, in fact was welcomed by such society as the place afforded.

"I was running a blacksmith shop then," said the Man from Prince Albert, "and through doing some work for him got to know him pretty well. He seemed to take a shine to me, and was soon dropping into the forge every day for a chat."

The Man from Prince Albert was always a shrewd fellow, with an ability to obtain information by suggestion rather than direct question, so I did not wonder that he was soon conversant with De Arcey's plans, and revelling in stories of his wanderings in the Himalayas and other outlandish parts of the earth.

Planned to Go North.

"He told me that he proposed to travel across country into the Coppermine country by dog sled. He wanted to go up to the place where Franklin died, or in search of his remains, or something, but it is so long since, I am hazy about the fine points of his plan. Anyway it was the talk about northern exploration that had put the idea into his head. He bought dog teams, and a big outfit, and, through the factor at the fort, engaged a number of guides, Breeds and Indians.

"I never knew," said the Man from Prince Albert, "such a man to ask questions about the Indians. He seemed to have read all that was ever written about them, but wanted to find out for himself. I could talk Cree and Sioux pretty good, but it was not long until I could tell him nothing, for he could beat me easy. Of course he was interested in the grammar of their talks, too, but I never could learn English grammar. I wished later on he had never been able to learn a word of the gibberish, which was like the voices of birds, he said once."

Unfortunate Delay.

"He expected to be able to start for the far north about the 1st of January, but one day he came into the shop, and I could see he was feeling blue. Them swell English chaps like him is very close about their troubles, and will get mad if you ask them questions like you would an ordinary Canadian. So I did not ask him what was the matter, but I was sympathetic like, and he told me he was all broken up, because letters from his bankers in England sent to New York to follow him up had not come in with the mail. This meant a serious delay, and he had sent his servant back to Winnipeg to trace them up by telegraph and bring them on. I guess he was waiting for money, though he always seemed to have plenty. A trip to Winnipeg was no joke at that time of the year, and it was on towards spring before they came.

"He was mopy for a few days, but soon brightened up. Whenever he was not up at the barracks you could find him wherever there was an Indian.

"Me and him got pretty thick, and as his camp was near my log-house we arranged he should move in there. Say, he fixed it up fine with robes and blankets, and as he had a half-breed to cook for us I had no kick coming.

Into Temptation.

"It seemed when his servant got back with the letters it was too late to start out on his long trip so he went down to a Hudson's Bay fort somewhere near the mouth of the Saskatchewan. When he came back he was more than ever with the Indians, many of whom had returned to the fort.

"I was reading a story by that chap Kipling about a fellow out in India who was stuck on a girl with no white half-moon on her finger nails. I have been down south and know what that means. These here officer chaps who were his friends just seized him bodily, though he was a scrapper and gave them a few black-eyes to remember him by, and shipped him up to the mountains, where they kept him till he got over his fool craze for the girl. I wish there had been a few men of his own caste—is not that what they call it?—to deal this way with De Arcey. You see, we were friends, but I knew I was not in his class and could do nothing.

Would Take No Rebuke.

"One day a Cree girl named Silver Cloud passed. I had often seen him with her, and when he asked me if I did not think she was pretty, I lit into him.

"'Look here,' says I, 'are you not getting crazy about Indians You will leave a white man any day to talk to an Indian. The officers up at the barracks are on to it, and they will drop you. Now, look here,' I says, 'I have seen it happen before, and I am going to warn you. The first thing you know you will be marrying a squaw. You'd look nice going home to your people in England with a squaw wife. She'd be an ornament up at the Hall, all right. Take my advice and leave Indians alone.'

"He looked at me in a way only swells like him can, and walked away."

"Things were not comfortable after that, and he moved back to his tent; but we soon made up. He felt ashamed when I saw him with Silver Cloud after that, but neither of us ever spoke of it again. She was a good enough looking squaw, but how a gentleman like him, and a fine looking one, too, could go so crazy over an in-toed Indian girl I do not know.

The Marriage.

"That fall he went out on the chase with her tribe, and when they came back he acknowledged her as his wife. He had sent his servant home, and sold up his outfit. He bought some property up near the Reserve, and settled down there. Of course the society people had nothing more to do with him. He used to come in to see me at times, but it was not the same, and we both knew it. All his wife's relatives came and lived off him, which is the way of Indians, and he got more and more like an Indian every day. When he came to town he was careless about his dress, and used to get drunk with bums he would not speak to before.

"His people in the Old Country heard about it somehow, and his sister came out to see him. She drove out to see the Indian agent. He knew how things were, and wanted to keep her all night and drive her out next day. She would not hear of that. She said she would be her brother's guest. The agent knew she would not, but said no more.

A Sorry Spectacle.

"It was evening when she got to his hut. His squaw, who could talk English, answered her sourly in Cree, and the dirty little children just stared at her. Then she saw her brother coming up from the woods driving an Indian pony loaded with charred logs for firewood. He was a sight to behold. Poor lady! She came back to the agent's house after all. She arranged to have him paid so much money every month, and went back home, and De Arcey did not improve any. What would she do? He would not leave his squaw, and he seemed to have grown to like living like an Indian.

"When the rebellion broke out all the white people flocked into Prince Albert, and a white man warned De Arcey to flee also. He laughed at the idea, saying he was safe among his friends. His squaw's brother was among the braves who rose, and on day De Arcey saw him come out of the woods near his house in full war paint. De Arcey advanced to meet him, and the young blood in mere bravado shot and scalped him."

There was silence in our little group for a moment, and then the Man from Prince Albert blew his nose ostentatiously and wiped his eyes with the corners of his handkerchief, complaining of having caught a cold. De Arcey's body was found later, and given Christian burial, while the young brave perished in one of the battles of the Rebellion.

A Clever Student.

Dr. A. L. Mai Wong, the first Chinese girl to graduate from a Canadian college, has just gone to her home in th Celestial Empire. On the Saturday afternoon prior to her departure she held a reception at the home of Rev. Dr. Stephenson, Czar street, to say farewell to her many friends, says The Toronto World. Miss Wong is a native of Shanghai, where her father was the first native preacher of the American Church mission. Through Dr. Heasley a lady medical missionary, Miss Wong became interested in medical work. She came to Canada in 1902, and entered college here. Not having a certificate of matriculation, however, she found she would be unable to take out a diploma in medicine, so on the conclusion of her first year's examination she began to study for matriculation. Though knowing nothing of algebra, Euclid or Latin, she, nevertheless, completed her task and obtained her certificate in September, thus performing the remarkable feat of taking what is usually considered a four year course in only four months. She then commenced her second year in medicine and was successful in every examination, until she graduated with honors this session.

He Kept His Word.

"Such a change," said Senator Sullivan, apropos of a certain bill, "would be about as satisfactory as the change that a landlord once made.

"A woman came to see this landlord. She wanted to look at a house that was to let. The man sent a clerk to show her over the house, and on her return she said:

"'I like the house very well. There is only one thing that I object to.'

"'Well, madam, any reasonable alteration,' the landlord murmured suavely, 'would, provided you took a three years' lease—'

"'I'd take a three years' lease,' said the woman, 'if only the house had more closets.'

"'The number of closets shall be doubled,' said the landlord.'

"'Very well,' said the woman, in a pleased voice, and she signed the lease then and there.

"After she was gone the landlord called in his clerk again.

"'John,' he said, 'take a carpenter over to No. 37, and have him divide each of the closets in two.'"—Ottawa correspondence.

TEKAHIONWAKE IN LONDON.

Canada's Indian Poetess, Miss Johnson, in the World's Capital.

Tekahionwake, the only Redskin poetess in the world, has just come to London, says The Leader. Tall and dark, olive-skinned, but with the grey eyes that show she has white blood in her veins, she is best described in one of her own verses:

> Copper-tinted face and smouldering fire
> Of wilder life, were left me by my sire
> To be my proudest claim.

"How do you come to be in London?" was the first obvious question.

"Because London is the place to climb up in," was the characteristic answer.

Miss Johnson has been in London before, when her first book of poems was published by Mr. John Lane.

"I was born," she said, "on an Indian reservation, in the Province of Ontario. I came of the famous Iroquois. My father was a pure-blooded Indian, chief of the Mohawks, of the Six Nations Indians. My mother was an Englishwoman, although she became, according to law, an Indian by her marriage. We have long since offered the white man our white wampum. In the wampum of beadwork — I must show you my own wampum belt—is written the dead language of a nation, for it represents the literature, traditions, the currency of the Redmen."

"My name Tekahionwake," continued Miss Johnson, "belongs to my family. Johnson is only a baptismal name, that was first used by my great-grandfather. The Indian word signifies, literally, 'double life,' meaning it is hard to kill a Tekahionwake. You have not killed him once till you have killed him twice!"

Miss Johnson's Indian dress is wonderful. The skirt, like the moccasins, is made of buckskin from far Athabasca, a scarlet blanket falls from shoulder to heel, one sleeve is of ermine, the other a fringe of buckskin, embroidered with moosehair. Her necklace is made of bears' claws, threaded on a strip of fine leather, and graduated in size.

"This scalp is one of my great treasures," said Tekahionwake. "I wouldn't give a dollar for a white man's scalp!" she laughingly said, "but this one was sent to me from the West, and belonged to an old warrior of the Blood tribe."

MAMMOTH IS A MYTH.

Perforated Indian Skull — Interesting Word Paintings on Temagami Rocks.

Mr. David Boyle, superintendent of the Provincial Museum, has just returned to Toronto from Moore township in Lambton County. He found the report about the mammoth remains said to have been discovered there, to be incorrect. He could find no traces of such an animal.

Mr. Boyle made some excavations in the Indian Reserve, however, and picked up some relics of value. The most interesting was a human skull perforated on the apex with a clean cut hole, which must have been bored with some instrument. There are a few other specimens of a similar description in the museum.

"These holes may have been bored in the skulls before death," said Mr. Boyle. "in which case they were no doubt made to allow some evil spirit to escape, as in the case of one stricken with apoplexy. But it is quite possible the holes were made after death, and would then be made for the purpose of hanging the skulls up.

"The natives of Peru," he continued, "had made considerable progress in the art of surgery, and skulls have been found showing clear evidence of trepanning, the holes being made with sharp pieces of flint."

Interesting specimens of Indian word painting were copied and brought to the museum last week by Mr. W. H. C. Phillips, who made a trip to the Temagami district for the purpose. There are two sets of paintings, four specimens in each set. One was found painted on the rocks on the north shore of Diamond Lake, the other at the southern extremity of Lady Evelyn Lake.

They bear close resemblance to the paintings discovered on the rocks of Lake Massanog, Addington County, and published in Mr. Boyle's archaeological report for 1904-5. No one has yet succeeded in deciphering these inscriptions.

Doukhobors' Good Work.

Malcolm McMillan of Macdonald, McMillan & Co., G. T. P. contractors, has returned to Winnipeg from an inspection of the work along the line as far as Birdtail River. In this vicinity the Doukhobors have several grading contracts, and Mr. McMillan speaks in the highest terms of their work. The Doukhobors, he maintains, have put some of the finest pieces of grading that have been done on the whole line. They are great hustlers and are not at all affected by "pilgrimage propensities." Mr. McMillan states that the work is going along very satisfactorily, and that when the snow flies the company expect to have not only 275 miles from Portage to Touchwood Hills graded, but also the 55-mile span, Portage to Winnipeg.

No Soft Business Here.

A Postmaster-General or some one in his office in Ottawa once wrote to the postmaster of some little station on the Kettle River: "You will please inform this department how far the Kettle River runs up," to which the postmaster answered: "I have the honor to inform the department that the Kettle River don't run up at all; it runs down." In due course of mail came another communication: "On receipt of this letter your appointment as postmaster will cease. Mr. —— has been appointed your successor." To which went the following reply: "The receipts of this office during the last year have been $4.37, and the office rent more than double that sum; please to kindly instruct my successor to pay me the balance, and oblige."

1,300 Applicants For One Post.

Ancient Tricks.

The arts of juggling were, as has been proved by learned writers, of high antiquity. The Hirpini, who lived near Rome, jumped through burning coals; women in early times were accustomed to walk over burning coals in Cappadocia, and the exhibition of balls and cups is often mentioned in the works of the ancients. It was as far back as the third century that one Fermus, or Firmius, who endeavored to make himself emperor in Egypt, suffered a smith to forge iron on an anvil placed on his breast, and rope dancers with balancing poles are mentioned by Petronius and others, while the various feats of horsemanship exhibited in our circuses passed, in the thirteenth century, from Egypt to the Byzantine court and thence over all Europe.

A Proud Man.

"Did you see that proud man going out just now?" asked the cashier. "Proud as Lucifer. Know what he did? Found that I had made a mistake in his favor and handed me back the change. Now, I wonder why it is that people are so proud when they have discovered that they are honest. I could rake in a lot of extra coin if I availed myself of the mistakes that are made here every hour of the day, but I don't on general principles, because I am naturally honest. It's nothing to be proud of."

Where Taxes Are Unknown.

Orsa, in Sweden, has in the course of a generation sold $5,750,000 worth of trees and by means of judicious replanting has provided for a similar income every thirty or forty years. In consequence of the development of this commercial wealth there are no taxes. Railways and telephones are free and so are the schoolhouses, teaching and many other things.

"The Man Who Looks Into the Eye" is Here.

We have for years been looking into the eyes of people with obscure diseases, by means of different instruments and electric light, the two principal instruments used are the Retinoscope, and the Opthalmascope, the former for errors of Refraction,—which means defects that glasses will remedy, this method is called the "Shadow Test," and is based on entirely scientific principles, it was discovered about forty years ago by Sir Wm. Paget Bowman. The latter instrument is used also for errors of Refraction, but more particularly for detecting diseases of the Retina (the vital point of sight), by means of this instrument we can see its blood vessels and the Optic Nerve, etc. It was discovered in 1851 by Helmhaitz, an eminent scientist. It requires years of study and experience to become proficient with these instruments. We test the eye by these free of charge.

Orangemen At The Tabernacle.

REV. GEO. BROWN PREACHED AN ELOQUENT AND PRACTICAL SERMON TO PROTESTANT SOCIETIES YESTERDAY MORNING—OTHER CHURCH SERVICES.

Orangemen at the Tabernacle.

A large number of the members of the Orangemen, 'Prentice Boys and True Blues yesterday morning attended divine service at the Tabernacle Church. Shortly before 11 o'clock the various organizations left the Orange Hall, on Front street and, headed by the I.O.O.F. band, proceeded to the place of worship. The church was filled when the services commenced.

The pastor, Rev. G. Brown, officiated, and his discourse was appropriate to the occasion. On behalf of the church officials he extended a hearty welcome to the various Protestant societies which had gathered for worship. The Rev. gentleman's text was from Galatians, 6th chapter, 2nd and 5th verses;

"Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfil the law of Christ.

"For every man shall bear his own burden."

The words of the text was the law of Christ. When the Saviour was upon the earth he epitomized the truths contained herein. Our bounden duty was to love our neighbor as ourselves and thus fulfil the divine law. There was a tendency to look out for oneself, which was right in some respects, but we should also assist others in their burden-bearing. It was also essential that we should, in taking care of the body, not neglect to take care of the soul. Humanity was a brotherhood. We are all supposed to be knit together by a cord which cannot be broken. It should be our aim to do good to others. We should, if necessary, even submit to sacrifices for others who are about us. This is but doing right, and every person who does it is a power for good. We are in society so constituted that we must bear one another's burdens. Christ, when upon earth, made sacrifices for others. He gave Himself a ransom for mankind. His life and His death was that the words of the text might be literally carried out. All benevolent institutions were the outcome of the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ. How many there are in the world that need our assistance! The strong must help to bear up the weak. This refers not only to societies, but even in the commercial world. We are also commanded to love all. Why should we not love all the inhabitants of the world? We are not to be narrow or selfish, but do the greatest good to the greatest number. Bear ye one another's burdens means to mutually assist each other. We should help each other in business methods, and not extort an exorbitant price for articles which may be sold. Bear one another's burdens in every walk of life. Seek to make life as pleasant as possible to all; to those in sickness and distress and more especially to those in poverty. We shall be called to account for the deeds done in the flesh. We all have a work to do. William, Prince of Orange, had a duty to perform and he did it. He stood nobly for truth and Christianity. God gave him a great work to do and he did it fearlessly. The Rev. gentleman referred to the Orphanage at Picton, maintained by the True Blues, which was accomplishing a grand work in caring for the orphans. In concluding his discourse the speaker exhorted all to seek God with all their heart, and they will find Him, as His word so teaches and that cannot fail. Remember the great day when all will have to appear before God. We should all ally ourselves to Jesus Christ. Get the grip, the countersign and the password to eternal life. If we do not know Christ as a personal friend, we should. Apply to Him at once to be admitted into membership with Him, and if we do we will not be blackballed, for He hath said that all who come unto Him He would in no wise cast out. May all realize the mighty help which comes from serving Christ. During the service Miss M. Stork sang a solo entitled, "Hold Thou My Hand," very sweetly.

After leaving the church the procession was reformed and marched back to the hall by way of Victoria avenue, George street, Bridge street and Front street.

St. Thomas'.

At last evening's service, the Rector, Rev. Rural Dean Beamish, preached a trenchant and scholarly sermon on personal responsibility in connection with religion. In this practical age, he said, everything was judged by results, and naturally, perhaps, a man's religion was judged to be good or bad according to the way he lived. The primary and most important feature in connection with religion was the worship of Almighty God. The other feature in connection with religion was the opportunity it afforded for the salvation of mankind. Some people said, with Pope, that a man who lived a good life would probably be all right when he died, whether he were a professing Christian or not. The idea was a fallacious one. Only through the Great Physician could a man be made whole, for every man carried disease in his frame, though he might not know it till there was a sudden breakdown. Religion was a panacea for all things, and, as every man sinned, so every man needed the help which only is to be found in the bosom of Mother Church. Let us search out our own weaknesses, said the preacher, and see what need we have for religion. Have we secret vices such as pride, avarice, gluttony, envy? Religion will help us to overcome them. Nothing else can. According as a man accepts the help and consolation of religion, so will he be judged. Some might plead that they were more prone to sin than others on account of heredity, temperament or environment. There was considerable force in such a plea, but it was not conclusive. The religion of Jesus Christ was strong enough to overcome heredity, temperament or environment, if men accepted it in the right way. Almighty God never allowed any man or woman to be tempted beyond their strength. In conclusion the eloquent preacher urged his hearers to accept religion and so bring about the peace which passeth understanding.

During the offertory, Miss Jessie Phillips sang "Consider the Lilies," in a most beautiful way. She showed admirable method, a liquid and pure voice, great sympathy of interpretation and considerable of that indefinable quality known as magnetism. It was a vocal treat.

At the conclusion of the service, Prof Spooner gave a short but highly enjoyable organ recital, and Mr. Walter Hutchison sang, with fine effect, "De Profundis," by Horspool. The impressive selection was most excellently sung.

Emmanuel R. E. Church.

At the above church yesterday morning, the Rector, Rev. A. M. Hubly, preached on "The Rejected Stone," giving a helpful discourse on a well-known topic. At the evening service Misses L. Hubly and E. Hampton sang a sweet and tuneful duet, "Blessed Saviour," which greatly pleased those who heard it.

St. Andrew's.

"The Devotional in Religion" was the subject discussed last evening by the pastor, Rev. R. S. Laidlaw. His text was from St. Luke, 10th chapter and 39th verse;

"And she had a sister called Mary, which also sat at Jesus' feet and heard His word."

During the service Miss N. Lazier sang the Lord's Prayer.

The Last Rites.

A large number of citizens were present at the obsequies of the late Mr. W. J. McCamon, which were held this afternoon. Services were held at the residence, on Moira street, conducted by the Rev. R. H. Leitch, of Holloway Street Church. The floral tributes were numerous and beautiful, being contributed by various societies and friends. The remains were taken to Tweed village for interment. The bearers were all members of the legal profession, namely; Messrs. S. S. Lazier, P. J. M. Anderson, S. Masson, M. Wright, J. J. B. Flint and E. J. Butler.

Police Notes.

On Saturday evening the police answered two calls, namely to the wharf and Foster avenue. No arrests were made.

A chain from off a bicycle is at the station awaiting an owner. It was picked up upon the streets.

Last evening there was some trouble at the Salvation Army barracks between a member of the Army and an outsider. The affair may possibly be ventilated at the police court.

Horses Swim a Lake.

The Madoc Review says: Word comes from the Craig mine of a team of horses swimming three-quarters of a mile across Quinlan's lake. It appears Mr. Mahoney, the owner of the team, had been driving across the lake to and from work at the mines, during the winter, and this spring, had left the horses in charge of an employee at the mines. The animals had been turned out to pasture, and made for home by way of the winter route, crossing the above mentioned lake.

Deseronto Has a Big Sensation.

BELT CUTTER AND FIREBUG AT WORK IN THE RATHBUN COMPANY'S CEDAR MILL—A DEED WHICH, IF NOT DISCOVERED, MIGHT HAVE CAUSED THE LOSS OF MANY LIVES.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Deseronto, July 9. — This town is at present very much excited over a dastardly act which, but for its early discovery, might have caused the loss of several lives.

On Wednesday last the big driving belt of the cedar mills, owned and operated by the Rathbun Company, was cut, and the driver of the engine just happened to notice it stretch. If the driver had not seen the belt at the time it might have done a great deal of damage and killed several people, as the belt is of immense size and drives a great deal of machinery.

On the same evening someone tried to burn the mills down, but the attempt was discovered and the fire extinguished.

These attempts, it may be surmised, caused considerable talk and excitement, which was redoubled when, on Saturday night, the big driving belt was again badly cut. Some of the watchmen found it either on Saturday night or Sunday morning.

The cost of repairing the first cut was very expensive, and the second attempt will be much more.

Workmen say that if the belt were to break while the machinery was all in operation it would probably cause a lot of destruction, besides loss of life.

Rumor says that a detective is here working on the case.

No one was allowed in the yards yesterday.

Some enemy of the Rathbun Company is credited with committing the deeds.

H. W. BRICK IS MISSING.

Was Manager of the Canadian Branch of Wampole & Co. of Perth.

Perth, July 9.—Mr. H. W. Brick, who has for some time been associated with Henry K. Wampole & Co. in connection with their Canadian business, and who resided in this town, left here Saturday morning, June 30, for Toronto to spend the Dominion Day holiday. He appears to have left Toronto Saturday afternoon and has not since been heard of.

Mr. Brick's disappearance naturally caused a sensation in the town as he was prominent in local affairs, and has taken an active interest in public matters since his removal to Perth about the first of this year.

Enquiries were made Saturday at the company's laboratories, and the information given was that Mr. Brick was no longer in the employ of Henry K. Wampole & Co. in any capacity, and no longer in any way authorized to act for or represent them.

The business is in no way affected by Mr. Brick's absence, and everything was in full swing Saturday.

TALC MILLS BURN.

$150,000 Blaze at Hillsboro—Will Seriously Affect Market.

Brockville, July 9.—The largest mill of the International Talc Co., said to be the biggest in the world, was totally destroyed by fire at Hillsboro, the cause of the blaze being unknown. The flames had gained such headway when discovered that it was found impossible to save it and everything went up in smoke, including several cars loaded with the finished article. Its capacity was 60 tons per day.

This makes the fourth mill of its kind destroyed within the past year, and the removal of the largest plant will, it is said, cripple the fibrous talc supply of the world. The loss is over $150,000, covered almost half by insurance. It is not known whether the mill will be rebuilt.

London, July 9.—The American embassy has received 1,000 tickets for the memorial services to the victims of the Salisbury accident, to be held in St. Paul's July 10.

AGRARIAN SITUATION

Russian Peasants Are in a Very Pitiable Condition.

Present Agrarian Disorders Which Can Be Expected to Steadily Grow Worse, Are Due Largely to the Necessity of Peasants Seizing Food and Forage to Save Themselves and Animals From Starvation.

St. Petersburg, July 9.—A correspondent of The Associated Press has just completed a tour of the provinces of Samara and Saratov. He reports that the drought is finally broken, but the rains have come too late to save the crop and help the peasants, who are in a pitiable condition. Their cattle either have been sold or starved in the fields.

The Government relief granaries were completely emptied during last year's famine.

The present Agrarian disorders, which can be expected steadily to grow worse, are due largely to the necessity of the peasants seizing food and forage to preserve their lives and save from starvation the remainder of their cattle. These disorders have reached the highest pitch in the Province of Voronesch, where the troops and cossacks, although in considerable force, are practically helpless and on the defensive.

Many peasants have been killed or wounded in desperate attacks on the military patrols and the rural guards.

The Agrarian Law.

The first paragraph of the proposed agrarian law, viz., the augmentation of the lands of the peasants by the expropriation of all State and Crown domains and church and monastery lands, has been accepted by the commission of the Lower House with practical unanimity. The commissioners have now locked horns over the mode of expropriation and the method of disposal of private estates, and the end is not yet in sight.

Czar and Kaiser to Meet.

London, July 9.—The correspondent in St. Petersburg of The Tribune telegraphs that a meeting between Emperor William and Emperor Nicholas is expected next month.

Is Alladin a Revolutionist.

St. Petersburg, July 9.—The inspiration for the disorders in the Guards and other troops is clearly traced to the Socialist organization. The secret police are investigating the movements of M. Alladin, the peasant leader in the Lower House, hoping to connect him with the mutiny of the first battalion of the Preobrajensky Regiment.

Dr. Nicholaieffsky Is.

Dr. Nicholaieffsky, who was elected a member of the Lower House from Krasnoyarask, Siberia, openly flaunts the revolutionary colors. Yesterday, he said that just before his departure, he presided at a revolutionary meeting at Krasnoyarask. Cavalry sent to disperse the meeting joined the revolutionists in parading through the town behind the red flag, in place of the national colors.

Went on the Rocks.

The bill of the Lower House of Parliament for the abolition of the death penalty, went on the rocks Saturday between the caucus, the Centrists and the Council of the Empire, a majority of which was opposed to its acceptance in its present form.

The demand for the retention of the death penalty came with the greatest insistence from the representatives of the border districts, where the death penalty is more in use — Poland, the Baltic Provinces and the Caucasus, who feel themselves in the grip of the revolutionists and terrorists without the summary processes of martial law.

Will Indict Police.

Bialystok, Russia, July 9.—The agent of the Minister of Justice has finished his investigation of the recent massacre here and in consequence of his recommendation two captains of police, several sergeants and 1 patrolmen will be indicted for inciting the people to participate in the rioting.

Warned of Coming Massacres.

Warsaw, July 9.—The Socialists have issued a manifesto warning the people to be prepared for massacres of Poles and Jews during the next few days, which are being arranged by the police and troops, out of revenge for recent attacks. The manifesto advises foreigners in Warsaw to seek the protection of their respective consuls.

Thos. Merritt Dies very Suddenly.

Toronto, July 9.—Thomas Merritt, manager of the Mutual Life Insurance Co. of Toronto branch, died suddenly yesterday afternoon. Mr. Merritt rose early, in the best of health. He attended church. After luncheon with his family he told his wife that he was going to lie down for an hour or so. When Mrs. Merritt went to wake him she found him dead. Dr. McCullough pronounced death due to apoplexy. Deceased was 52 years of age. Besides the widow he leaves one daughter and one son.

A Very Sudden Death.

Ottawa, July 9.—Mrs. John Belanger, aged 69, 75 College avenue, got up at 5 o'clock yesterday morning to awaken her daughters, who wanted to attend early mass. She returned to bed and an hour later was found dead in bed by her husband. Mr. Belanger is a superannuated civil servant, formerly being secretary of the Secretary of State's Department.

Five Coaches Help Up.

Wawona, Cal., July 9.—Five Yosemite Valley stage coaches were held up Saturday near the entrance to the National Park by a lone highwayman, who obtained a considerable amount of money and jewelry. The stages were traveling sufficiently far apart to avoid each others dust, and he held up each in turn. Then the bandit disappeared in the bush.

Saw Mill Burned.

Quebec, July 9.—Samson and Renaud's saw mill at Petite Riviere, St. Francois, near Baie St. Paul, has been completely destroyed by fire, together with a large stock of lumber and the output of the mills since last fall. The loss will reach about $20,000, and it is said no insurance was carried.

Great Tariff Reformer's Seventieth Birthday Celebrated.

Birmingham, Eng., July 9.—Saturday was "Chamberlain Day," and the whole city, irrespective of politics, enjoyed a holiday in honor of the distinguished tariff reformer, Joseph Chamberlain, who Saturday celebrated his 70th birthday. There were decorations everywhere, the city is filled with visitors, and all sorts of processions and entertainments went on. The lord mayor and lady mayoress gave a reception and luncheon to Mr. and Mrs. Chamberlain. Subsequently, the party made a tour of parks, where thousands of the city school children were being specially entertained.

Mr. Chamberlain took advantage of the occasion to give out a characteristic message to the nation as follows: "Treat foreigners as they treat us, and treat your kinsmen better than you treat foreigners."

SMASH-UP KILLED FOUR

Cars Run Away Down Grade on the Temiskaming Railway.

Accident Occurred on Portion of Line Operated by the Contractor — Two Cars Broke Away on Heavy Grade and Crashed Into Auxiliary Engine Hastening to Help Train Up the Grade—G. T. P. Agent a Victim.

Cobalt, July 9.—At 6 o'clock Friday afternoon three men were instantly killed north of Englehart, on the construction branch of the T. & N. O. Railway, one died Saturday and several others were injured.

Though only meagre particulars have as yet reached here, it would appear that a few miles north of Englehart and 30 miles north of New Liskeard, there is a stretch of road which runs up a considerable incline.

The A. R. MacDonnell construction trains carry passengers, and on Friday last, when the train was making this grade two rear coaches broke away and started to back down at a rapid pace.

An auxiliary was following the regular train, and the engineer, seeing the coaches coming tearing down backwards, got his train stopped, but could not get started to back down and get away.

The runaway coaches were well filled and it is wonderful that there were not more fatalities.

The men killed were standing on one of the platforms. None of those in the trains lost their lives, although many were injured.

Those instantly killed were:

L. C. Potter, a man of advanced years, who is said to have had a wife, but no children, in Yarmouth, N. S.

F. Mills, a prospector, a man of middle age, about whom practically nothing is known. In his pocket were found an envelope containing a letter addressed to F. Mills. It bore a Detroit postmark.

Percy Jordan, a cook, in whose pocket was a letter from his wife in Carleton Place.

George Stearns, the New Liskeard agent for the Grand Trunk Pacific, had his leg broken in two places and his arm crushed. He was brought home and died Saturday afternoon.

He was on the track on his way to church and was struck by a big Britannia car.

The motorman rang the bell, but it was apparently not heard by Mr. O'Leary. Where the accident happened is a steep grade making it difficult to stop a car. Mr. O'Leary died within an hour after being struck.

He was well known, and was a brother of Dan O'Leary, deputy warden of the Kingston Penitentiary.

Killed by Trolley Car.

Bowmanville, Ont., July 10.—Citizens were shocked yesterday by the news that Thomas Hoar was killed by a trolley car at Compton, Cal. Mr. Hoar carried on a blacksmith business here for many years. He has visited almost every part of Canada, the United States and Great Britain, and has written many interesting accounts of his travels for the local press. About ten days ago he left here intending to visit some American cities. He was 77 years of age, and leaves a wife, who at present is visiting their son, Mr. F. Arthur Hoar, Barrie, and two daughters, Mrs. A. Mitchell of this town and Mrs. H. Goodman, Toronto.

Killed at Work.

Toronto, July 10.—John Wilson, fireman at the Don Valley Brick Yards, did not die of heart disease Saturday morning, as was first stated, but was killed in the act of taking out the Scotch block from under the wheels of a brick car, previous to letting it run down the incline. As the block was pulled away, the car must have started suddenly and pinned Wilson's neck against the post.

Killed, Leaves Family of 10.

Ottawa, July 10.—James Jeffries, an employe of the Canadian Asphalt Co. was killed yesterday by being caught in the machinery at the company's plant on Catherine street. He was caught between revolving steel teeth and both legs were crushed. Death followed in a few minutes. He leaves a wife and nine children.

TORONTO CIVIC SCANDAL.

Judge Winchester Makes Long Report to the City Council.

Toronto, July 10.—Judge Winchester reports his findings on the evidence in the city's civic scandals in 136 pages of typewriting, and it has been referred to the board of control and city counsel to take such action, civil and criminal, as may be considered in the interests of the city.

The report finds that Elliott for Puddy Bros. paid Dr. Lynd a sum of money; that E. J. Lennox issued two false certificates to Mr. Hunter, from whom he received $100 on each occasion, that payments made by Mr. Dinnis and Mr. Rogers were made in consequence of his suggestions on behalf of Dr. Lynd, that presents were made by contractors to Mr. Lennox, that gifts were made to him by Bennett & Wright in return for favors; that the evidence shows that contractors charged the city much larger sums than were legitimate, that the two contracts for St. Lawrence market roof were obtained by fraud and that Architects Siddall and Jarvis received $200 and $300 each from Douglas Bros.; that the Metallic Roofing Co. obtained the contract by fraud and that the city paid $2,205 without receiving any consideration therefor; that $800 was added to the tender of Metal Shingle and Siding Co. on Manufacturers' Building for which city received no consideration.

The left side of the face is usually considered by artists to be more beautiful than the right.

Fraternal Insurance.

Commission Investigates Ancient Order of Foresters.

Record of the First Fraternal Organization to be Investigated Was Found to Be Clean—The Different Funds Maintained by the Order—A Loan to Cover Cost of High Court Meeting—The Policyholders' Association.

Toronto, July 10.—The Dominion Insurance Commission resumed its session in Toronto yesterday morning. The Ancient Order of Foresters, through Mr. William Williams, the permanent secretary, gave evidence. The evidence revealed no improper transactions such as were found in the history of some of the straight life companies.

Mr. Geary, legal representative of the Ontario Government, informed the commissioners at the opening of the session that the officers of the Policyholders' Association of Canada had expressed a desire to present certain views to the commission. Mr. Tilley said that the commission would be glad to obtain information from any source.

Mr. Geary had a memorandum which showed that 350 policyholders in 68 different cities and towns, representing over $2,500,000 insurance in twenty-nine different companies, had already joined or signified their intention of doing so. Local boards which have been formed all over the country will appoint representatives to the board of the parent associations.

The Ancient Foresters.

Mr. William Williams, permanent secretary of the Ancient Order of Foresters, said that prior to 1881 his society was under the control of the High Court of the British Foresters. In that year, however, a subsidiary High Court for Canada was established, and the Canadian business became self-sustaining and self-managed.

The witness described the different funds maintained in connection with the order, such as the special levy fund, for the relief of impoverished courts; the management fund, for the defraying of general expenses; the Ancient Forester fund, for the maintenance of the official journal; the guarantee fund, for protection against loss; the sick and general fund, and the straight insurance fund. In 1897 there was not enough in the management fund to cover the cost of the High Court meeting. To supply the deficiency $3,500 was taken from the insurance fund and handed over to the management fund. Mr. Williams admitted that the loan of insurance funds for the purpose of meeting the expense of conducting the order was in contravention of the act of incorporation. He maintained, however, that it was an act of necessity to keep the order alive. The conditions of the loan from one fund to the other were that 5 per cent. interest should be paid.

Amount Repaid.

The total amount had been repaid, with interest, to the insurance fund, by Dec. 31, 1901. This was after the Dominion act was passed, which, of course, expressly forbade any such use of insurance funds. This, however, was the only loan of the kind made from the insurance funds. Both insurance and management funds were still under the control of the Executive Council, but it was practically impossible for such a transaction to occur again.

A Raise in Rates.

Mr. Williams then told of the raise in rates made by the A. O. F., which change brought loud protests from the majority of the members. The officers of the company realized that unless the rates were raised the order would have to close up. There was never any deficit, and in fact there had been always a surplus in the insurance account, but the officers of the order were looking ahead.

Mr. Williams said that a new organization could operate on low rates for a time, but new blood had to be continually brought in to keep the business going. Sooner or later, however, the rates had to go up.

Gave Endowment Values.

The limit of insurance upon the life allowed the A. O. F. under its act was $3,000, but the largest policy issued up to the present was $2,000. The act of incorporation of the society also gave it power to issue only straight life policies. Mr. Tilley found, however, that the order was issuing a "beneficiary fund policy," which he declared was in effect an endowment policy. Mr. Williams said that he did not consider it an endowment policy. A beneficiary fund policy produced showed that under a certain rate the policy would produce in fifteen years $1,000 in cash, with profits, or a paid-up policy for $1,050.

The witness said he thought the insurance department of the A. O. F. came under the general insurance act and that the investment by the company in the bonds and debentures of the Huron & Erie Loan Co. was quite justified. As a matter of fact the investment had been made years ago and had always proved profitable. The order has made no loans to officers and held the stock of no other corporations of which members of the order were directors.

Capital Above Reserves.

The A. O. F. have $8,000 capital over and above reserves, of which $4,000 is set aside, on the suggestion of the permanent secretary, for the benefit of the old members, who might not be able to keep up the pace in the raise of rates.

Mr. Williams received a salary of $1,500 a year. Agents received a bonus of $4 for every $1,000 or over procured, thirty per cent. of the first quarter's premium, 5 per cent. on the next three months, and 2 per cent. renewals after the second year.

The cost of business was $10 per thousand, or about one-third of the first year's premium.

The committee on investments was composed of the high chief ranger and permanent secretary, and Mr. Button.

Lapse ratio in 1901 was 10 per cent.; 1902, 11 per cent.; 1903, 9 per cent.; 1904, 11 per cent.; 1905, 15 per cent. Witness could not tell exactly the reason for the low lapse ratio in 1903. The company had gone out after new business since 1903 pretty hard and hence some of the business might have been forced.

Struck It Pretty Good.

The rates of premium were fixed by Dr. Secord, who, although not an actuary, witness thought he struck it pretty good.

Dr. Secord, chief medical officer, said that the premiums were fixed on the mortality table of the Canada Life with a fifteen per cent. loading, plus $2. This loading was put lower than other companies, because, it was obvious, that business could be obtained in a fraternal way, much cheaper than any other way. Sentiment was a great factor.

Mr. Tilley then took up the first profit and loss statement that the witness had prepared since his connection with the company. The total profits shown was $8,595 and the total loss $1,456.

The virtue lies in the struggle, not in the prize.—Houghton.

How Laurier Rewards Wrong-doing.

The case of Philip Wagner, recently ventilated in the House of Commons, shows that the Laurier Government still adheres to its policy of rewarding criminals who have labored in its behalf. For defrauding one Galician and stealing $80 from another. Wagner was sentenced to two months' imprisonment with hard labor at Fort Saskatchewan on the first conviction, and three months in the same institution on the second offence After he had served his time Wagner was reinstated in the Government service at the instance of Mr. Oliver. In the House of Commons, on March 14, 1906, this question was asked: "Was Philip Wagner, previous to, or during his employment by the Government, convicted of crime, and did he serve any time in prison therefor?"

Mr. Oliver was acquainted with all the facts, and yet answered as follows, "There is nothing on record in the Department of the Interior to show that P. Wagner served any time in prison."

At that time the facts were not known to Parliament, and Mr. Oliver had suppressed them.

On June 19, 1906, George Fowler, M. P., in the House of Commons, set forth the above facts and established them by reading the records, and moved that Wagner be dismissed, or if he denied the charges, that the matter be investigated. At the call of the Premier and Mr. Oliver, the motion was voted down. Thus a criminal is shielded and kept in the Government employ because of services rendered the party.

Numerous charges were made against Wagner prior to his conviction. One was that he was given $7 by a Galician to pay charges on a case of clothing brought by the Allan steamship line, and kept the money, leaving the immigrant without his baggage.

It was also charged in June, 1900, that a Galician gave Wagner $729 of Austrian money to send home for exchange and that the owner did not get his money back. Wagner was arrested for stealing it.

Rev. Father Francois, Roman Catholic missionary to the Galicians, wrote the Department in 1900, stating that the official interpreter, Philip Wagner, "takes advantage of the poor Galicians." The missionary charged that Wagner kept $275 given him to put in the bank for a Galician immigrant, that he failed to remit money given him by many Galicians to pay into the land office, and asking that Wagner be punished and a worthy man put in his place.

Surely the request of the missionare was a reasonable one. Surely honest men can be found for public positions. But here is a man convicted of having perpetrated the meanest kind of fraud on ignorant people, kept in office and protected because of work—crooked work, presumably—done for Hon. Frank Oliver. And Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his followers have voted endorsing the retention of Wagner in the public service

Golden Wedding.

James H. Emsley and wife celebrated their golden wedding on July 9, 1906, at their home on Bleecker Ave. The dining-room was neatly decorated, and the tables bountifully spread with the temporal blessings of a kind Providence. The children and friends present enjoyed the occasion immensely, pleasant speeches were made, congratulating the aged couple on their hale and hearty appearance and wishing them many years of peace and prosperity. The groom and bride replied, thanking their guests for their words of cheer and kind consideration. The presents were useful and ornamental. Mr. Emsley has been a contractor for over fifty years in Belleville, and Mrs. Emsley has been a true helpmate, and faithful member of the Bleecker St. Methodist Church for many years.

So the Zwick's island filtering scheme is down and out at last. It was a bad day for it when the Mayor left the water wagon—beg pardon—committee. As will be seen by the Council proceedings, the debentures for the work were supposed to have been issued within a year of its passage. This was not done, and the by-law is now dead. It seems a pity that the city was put to the expense of voting on the measure in the first place, if it was to be pigeon-holed and forgotten.

This great family journal must confess to a fellow-feeling with Ald. Panter in regard to the matter of the city granting a salary to Mr. Mikel's stenographer. The correct way, it seems to us, would have been for the city to make the grant to Mr. Mikel. In reality, of course, this amounts to an increase in salary for the City Clerk. No one, we think, begrudges the money granted, but why not do things in a business-like way?

"When a gent bumps into a lady in the ballroom and knocks her down, or when he pulls her skirt off by planting his foot on it he should not say 'excuse me,' with the emphasis on the 'me,' but he should say: 'Oh, I beg your pardon.' The second expression, especially with the introductory Oh, distinguishes the gent from the mucker."

Justice in the Prince Albert ballot-box stuffing cases has commenced to assert itself. The returning officer has been found guilty of fraud, and the celebrated Judge Prendergast has let him off by informing him that he is under suspended sentence! It is almost a wonder the judge did not apologize to the accused before letting him go. It is a wonder that a bill has not been introduced in Parliament by some ardent Grit lover of electoral purity to pardon Lott and Shibley.

Here is a flagrant instance of political iniquity: Judge Prendergast who, not long since, gave queer rulings on the subject of the ballot-box stuffing, recently decided that there was no controverted election law in Saskatchewan! This judgment seated all those whose return had been protested Mr. Haultain proposed in the Legislature that the defect in the statute which the Judge had discovered be remedied, and that the trials proceed. But the local Attorney-General would not agree to this. He opposed the reopening of the election cases after his Lordship had ruled them out of Court. Why? The Attorney-General was one of the persons whose seat was protested for corruption. The veneration with which ballot-box stuffers and corruptionists regard the judgment of Mr. Prendergast is touching, though demoralizing.

Cripple Found Out Where Money Went.

A lad named Willie Donohue was spending money about the city rather freely, and Officer Snider, hearing of it, questioned the boy, who is but 10 years of age, as to where he obtained his wealth. Willie told different stories at first, but finally admitted that he had taken the money from a cripple whom he and another boy were pulling about the streets in a cart. The man, whose name is Walter Davidson, arrived here a few days ago and picked up some loose change by selling lead pencils, etc. Donohue in some way got hold of Davidson's hat and from the lining extracted nearly $12. He then decamped. The affair was reported to the police, but until this morning they were unable to learn who the lad was who took the money. Owing to his age he could not be locked up, but will be brought up before the Magistrate to-morrow.

The Ostrich.

Instead of being a stupid bird the ostrich is one of the wisest and most wary. About the dwellings of white settlers, who have neither the time nor the inclination to disturb him, he becomes so tame that he unconcernedly mingles with the poultry and milk cows as if he, too, were domesticated. He is always fearful of men on horseback, but is not at all disturbed by the approach of people on foot unless they are followed by dogs. These he greatly fears. On the plains he often associates with the deer or the guanaco, and an alarm of any kind will send them rushing away together.

The Snipe's Bill.

The bill of the snipe is provided with a nerve running down to the tip and then distributing itself over the end of the beak. This is the only instance of this kind among birds and is a singular case of the care of nature in providing for her creatures. The snipe seeks for his prey in mud and water, where he cannot see, and it is believed that the nerve advises him of the presence of food when his eyes give him no information.

Feminine Distinctions.

"I would rather marry a sugar magnate than be the wife of a coal president."

"Even if the coal president had more money?"

"Yes. You see sugar is more refined than coal."

Enjoyed It.

"Look at that Boston girl at the phonograph. She is actually smiling."

"Yes, she is listening to Professor Beacon's delightful dissertation on the 'Fungous Diseases That Attack the Larvae of the Brown Tail Moth.'"

Wisdom.

Wisdom never opens her doors to those who are not willing to pay the price of admission. There are no bargains at her counters, no short cuts to her goal. "Pay the price or leave the goods" is her motto.

Care of the Eyes.

On rising in the morning the eyes should be bathed gently in cold water. Twenty passes are said to be decidedly strengthening. While using them closely they should be rested at intervals of an hour or two, for the strain of constant reading, etc., is like that of extending the arms at a certain height immovably. Imagine, then, the taxing of the eyes, which cannot complain save after years of irreparable neglect. When dust settles in the eyes warm water will soothe them of any inflammation.—Exchange.

Honors Easy.

"This silver dollar," began the cashier of the restaurant as he scrutinized the coin—

"Is bad, eh?" interrupted the sour looking patron.

"Well, it doesn't look very good."

"That so? Just bite it, and if it's anything like the dinner I had it'll taste even worse than it looks."

A Small Boy's Tears.

"What are you crying for, my poor little boy?"

"Boohoo! Pa fell downstairs."

"Don't take on so, my pet. He'll get better soon."

"Sister saw him fall all the way. I never saw nuffen! Boohoo!"

A Matter of Taste.

"Can any little boy," asked the new teacher, "tell me the difference between a lake and an ocean?"

"I can," replied Edward, whose wisdom had been learned from experience. "Lakes are much pleasanter to swallow when you fall in."

SOME EVIL FORCES.

Vainglory of Life Distinguishes Vast Corporations—Rev. Principal Falconer's Sermon on Modern Trusts.

Rev. Principal R. A. Falconer of Halifax Presbyterian College recently preached in St. James' Square Church, Toronto, and those present congratulated themselves on the opportunity to hear this forceful young Canadian, says The Globe. His commanding voice, rich and strong, with accurate vocalization and cultured inflection, is not least among his gifts as a speaker, while the ease of his delivery and the entire absence of mannerism gives unusual pleasure to the hearer. His sermon was based on two texts, "For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit and the Spirit against the flesh, and these are contrary the one to the other; so that ye cannot do the things that ye would," Galatians v., 17. "For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof; but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever," I. John ii., 16-17.

The two forces, the world and the will of God, were recognized by both John and Paul as radical antagonisms of which it was impossible that they should come to terms. There was no superficial optimism about the apostles. There was no chance that the world should become so ameliorated that the struggle should die out. One was an energy working towards evil, a power almost demonic in our being. The other was a pervasive influence for good. The difficulty was to detect the evil spirit. The spirit of the world made its lair like a wild beast in the flesh, and smote down with its fierce paw the pure soul as it rose. There could be no doubt that the apostle in speaking of the lust of the eye was thinking of the great games of the amphitheatres scattered over the Roman Empire. The eye might be a means of moral control or exercise a roving inquisitiveness that would bring ruin. The vainglory or pride of life was all that sense of might and power, the sense which a man gets that he can do anything, which breeds insolence. The Greeks recognized it as the delusion that swept down upon men before the gods smote them.

"There is that insolence in the vast corporations," said the speaker, "that think they are bound to have their own way without any regard for right or wrong." The same insolence of power preceded the fall of Rome and Assyria and Carthage. It was hard to discover this spirit in daily life. The world laughed when good men went out tilting against windmills. But evil things stole the clothes of very good practices. This was common in politics.

"The world is bad enough, but to judge by the party spirit one would think the world is in an awful state. A good deal of the badness is due to our distorted vision. A certain man is said to have the cloven hoof till you come to know him, and you find out what a very harmless shoe he is wearing." It was very difficult for young men coming into the city to find the world spirit at the beginning and to know just what to do. He was not a perfectionist and was not going to say that we were told in every case what was absolutely right, but it was safe to remember that the struggle never ceased, and behind every action there were two forces struggling for mastery. Looking back over a good man's life, it would be seen at last how God had got rid of the blunders. He did the impossible and brought His own will to pass. What that will was we were in the world to discover. It was God's purpose of good for His creatures. By a wonderful transforming power from within it would work itself out in the lives of obedient.

Canadians in the British Commons.

In a recent letter to The Toronto Telegram, Mr. Henry J. Morgan, of Ottawa, says: In the list of colonials now holding seats in the British House of Commons, which you published, you include in it but seven gentlemen who are natives of Canada, whereas there are at least ten of our fellow-countrymen who enjoy that distinction. Herewith, I give you their names with their political stripe, and the constituency represented by each: Hon. Edward Blake (Nationalist), South Longford; Sir Gilbert Parker (Conservative), Gravesend; Charles Day Rose (Liberal), Newmarket; A. C. Forster Boulton (Liberal), Ramsey; Harry C. Brodie, a native of British Columbia (Liberal), Reigate; Hamar Greenwood (Liberal), York City; Chas. Ramsey Devlin (Nationalist), Galway City; J. A. Baker (Liberal), Finsbury; Dr. T. J. MacNamara (Liberal), Camberwell; and A. Bonar Law (Conservative), who previously represented Blackfriars, Glasgow, but was defeated at the general election and has since been returned by another constituency. It will thus be seen that Greater Britain must possess a larger representation at Westminster than that allotted to it by the writer of the article referred to when Canada alone monopolizes the full number given by him to all the colonies. With our representation in the House of Lords by two native Canadians (the Earl of Elgin and the Baron Haliburton), and by two Canadians by adoption (the Barons Mountstephen and Strathcona), the Dominion is at this moment represented in the Imperial Parliament by fourteen individuals, a number, I am inclined to think, equal to, if it does not exceed, that which we have had there at any time.

Full Up.

To borrow money is a selfish, mean practice. The chronic borrower reminds us of a certain little girl at an Easter feast, says The London Advertiser.

"This little girl ate at the feast a great quantity of chocolate eggs, and bananas, and cakes, and peanuts, and things of that sort, and finally the time came for her to go.

"'But you will have a little more cake before you go?' her hostess said, politely.

"'No, thank you, ma'am. I'm full,' said the little girl.

"'Then,' said the hostess, 'you'll put some nuts and candies in your pockets, won't you?'

"The little girl shook her head regretfully.

"'They're full, too,' she said."

Literary Notes.

The Designer for August presents two special articles; One is on "The Baby's First Short Clothes," and the other on "Becoming Styles for the Stout Woman." Hats for late summer wear are also pictured, and shoes and slippers of the latest cut are given an entire page. A new departure is the picturing of several full-page fashion plates in two colors in addition to the regular color plates. "Points on Dressmaking' this mouth tells how to fit and bone a close-fitting lining, and the Millinery Lesson instructs as to the making of a horsehair hat. In fancywork are supplied "Lace and Embroidery for Table Linen," and "Copenhagen Cut Work." "Hot Weather Breakfasts" are pictured and described in detail, so too is "Make-Believe Vacation," which gives suggestions to the stay-at-homes. "Men's Fashions" illustrates new materials for autumn suits, and the various departments edited by the readers are filled with most interesting and helpful suggestions.

THE AUTO AND THE IDIOT.

The Auto and the Idiot
  Came moting on the scene;
The air was full of violets
  And odors fresh and clean—
And that was odd, because you see,
  Their fuel was gasoline.

"O glory!" cried the Idiot,
  "We're forging right ahead,
If I had wheels upon my feet,
  I'd also run," he said,
The Auto moaned, "It is a shame
  Your wheels are in your head!"

The Auto and the Idiot
  Ran bang into a fence,
"To steering," said the Idiot,
  "I'm giving thought intense."
And that was odd, because, you know,
  He hadn't any sense.

Adown a pleasant country lane
  They journeyed fast and far,
Until they spied a gentleman
  A-smoking his cigar,
"I'll hit him hard," the Auto cried,
  "And minimize the jar."

Across the quiet gentleman
  Right merrily they sped,
"Pedestrians should look alive,"
  The busy Auto said—
And this remark was odd, because,
  The gentleman was dead.

One-seventh of the deaths in Ottawa city during the month of June are attributed to consumption, according to the mortuary returns. A few instances of large profits made out of small investments in Saskatoon, N.W.T., building lots may be of interest. A lot was sold three years ago for $30 which is to-day worth $15,000. Less than a year ago a business man of Saskatoon bought a corner lot for $750 which he sold in eight months for something over $7,000. A young lady stenographer bought a lot for $150 on the instalment plan of $10 down and $5 per month. In March of this year she sold her lot for $3,000. A St. John investor purchased last week two lots on the easy-term basis, and in five days had an offer of $50 advance on his holdings.

The new world language Esperanto seems to have already won more advocates than the older Volapuk. No manufactured language, however, says the New York Post, seems to have much chance in competition with English, which long ago displaced French as the most useful and widely spoken language, and which is gaining faster than ever in all parts of the world. Quite recently the German Government has ordered that all railway officials and employees must learn to speak English. In Antwerp, also, the authorities are urging all classes to study English, and are providing special facilities in the public schools; the city has become "almost an English-speaking port." In Japan all school children are now obliged to learn our language. A few years hence tourists from this country will be able to get along there as easily as on a trip at home. With Great Britain, India, Australia, Canada the United States, and large sections of Africa using English, what hope is there for any other language? The rest might as well give up the unequal contest and make it unanimous.

Ladies who use cosmetics will be interested in the following, from the British Medical Journal: Dr. Millan, at a recent congress, said the adulteration of cosmetics was a serious matter. Rouge, for example, was harmless if it was colored with carmine, but carmine was expensive, and cheap substitutes were commonly employed, often with disastrous results.

Lightning rods are said to have gone out of favor in Canada, possibly because of the fun that was made of the lightning rod agent. Opinions still vary as to their efficacy, but a "Lightning Research Committee' in England has recently pronounced emphatically in favor of the lightning rod. The committee included members of the Royal Society of British Architects, of the Surveyors' Institute, and a representative from the Royal Meteorological Society. They drew up a report recommending the use of lightning rods, but emphasizing the fact that there must be a sufficient number of them, and that great care needs to be taken in getting good connection with the earth. It is advised that all large masses of metal in a building, including metal or metal lined roofs, should be connected by good conductors with the ground. It is a long time since Franklin made his first famous experiments with lightning, but there is a good deal about it that is not known yet. Our own Agricultural College at Guelph is endeavoring to secure some exact information that may be of value in determining how lightning acts. Particulars are collected of as many lightning accidents as possible, to be collated in a report. The same kind of work is being carried on at many places on this continent and in Europe, and some day we may expect to know a good deal more about lightning than we do now.

So Far Off.

"My sympathies," says a writer in the Boston Transcript, "were always with an old lady who lived way down in the Maine woods. One day a sportsman came to the door of her little cabin to ask for a glass of milk. As he drank the refreshing beverage they exchanged confidences. When in response to her inquiry he told her that he came from New York city she commiserated with him, saying, 'Laws, sir, it must be hard for you living so fur off!'"

A Joyous Sight.

The master plumber had become rich and was going abroad for his health. On the voyage a school of whales was sighted, and the plumber was seen to rub his hands in ecstasies.

"Why is he so happy?' asked a curious passenger.

"He can't help it," whispered the captain. "He imagines each spout is a burst water pipe to be repaired by him at his old rates."—London Telegraph.

Squelched Again.

HAMLIN GARLAND

COPYRIGHT, 1905, BY HAMLIN GARLAND

"How handsome the cook is!" was her inward exclamation as she returned to her seat. She was not one of those who sit in silence when they wish information, and, lifting her voice a little, she said:

"I understood Mr. Barnett to say that you had a woman to cook for you?"

Raymond shifted a stove lid. "We did."

"Where is she?"

"Gone—a week ago."

"Isn't there any woman about the place?"

He peered into the coffeepot. "No one but you."

Ann sat in silence for a moment. "I didn't understand. Mr. Barnett said"—

Raymond straightened and looked at her somberly. "If Barnett paid a little more attention to his ranch and less to polo— I wrote him, more than a week ago, that Jonesy was pullin' his freight." He returned to his cooking.

Ann composedly went on, "Was Jones the name of the foreman?"

"No, he was assistant; but he was married, and his wife was our dough twister. He's gone to Skytown gold camp. The whole country is full o' the fever."

Ann, with a note of sympathy in her voice, said: "I don't like to see a big, strong man cook. Do you get extra pay for it?"

"Not a cent. We all take turns at it, to tell the honest truth."

"I hope you're the best cook?"

"That wouldn't be saying much, lady. I cook in self defense."

Ann opened her eyes at the significance of this phrase. "Then you don't do it as a—a business."

"Not by a whole row o' steers. Do you like prunes and rice?" he asked hastily.

Ann looked into the dish which he held out toward her and gravely replied: "I don't think I ever ate any. You don't mean they're cooked together?"

"That's what. It sure makes a filling combination," said he, dishing some out before her.

"I can well believe it," she replied with a humorous intonation. "Let me taste it. Perhaps I'll like it." As she nibbled a little of the mess from the spoon she glanced up at him with a queer little smile that made the room whirl before his eyes. "It seems a nutritious mixture."

He recovered himself. "Oh, it's a hearty mess, all right. My cooking isn't fancy"—

"I beg your pardon," Ann hastened to explain, "I didn't mean to criticise. I didn't intend to hurt your feelings. I'm sure it's a very tasty dish."

"Oh, I don't blame you; but, you see, we're not running a summer hotel exactly. Still, we'll make you as comfortable as we can while you stay."

"By which you mean to hint you hope I won't stay long." She was frankly amused.

He became very sincerely grave. "I didn't say that, lady."

"But you meant it. I'm not obtuse. I know when I am out of place. I shall flee tomorrow."

She was forcing his hand, as he well knew, but he remained gravely simple. "I'll be sorry if our grub or anything else should scare you out."

She changed the subject quickly. "I can see that Louis is to be perfectly happy down here. I am glad I came. I shall feel much more resigned to his being here now that I have met Mr. Raymond and you."

Raymond remained inexpressive. "Your brother is an enthusiast, I believe you said. He'll be more charitable than—than you, for instance."

Ann didn't like his emphasis. "I don't wonder at your resentment. Our coming is an imposition, but if I had known—please be kind enough to admit that I didn't know how you were situated."

Raymond resumed his cowboy manner. "Now, lady, you let that go. I don't blame you a hair. You're here, and I'll see—I mean, the boss will see—we'll all see—that the boy is treated right, and I'll guarantee that he gets a fair share of what's going. I'm not apologizing, but I hope you won't take us on the wrong slant. I hope you'll come often. You brighten up the place wonderfully."

Ann drew herself up. "I don't understand you, Mr."—

"Call me cook—Mr. Cook. Anything goes out here."

They were now squared before each other, he with a malicious smile lurking at the corner of his mouth, she with dark and puzzled brow.

"Of course, you cowboys are all strange to me—I mean your manners and customs—but my roommate at college told me a good deal about this life. She was from Colorado."

He betrayed new interest. "What was your college? Smith?"

Ann lifted her eyebrows in surprise. "No. What made you think it was?"

Raymond began to retreat. "Oh, I don't know. You seemed about that style. I mean to say, you carry yourself like a Smith college girl that came down here once with Mrs. Barnett." He caught up the water bucket. "Excuse me a minute. I'll run down to the spring and get some water." His going was equivalent to flight.

Ann smiled composedly as she sipped her coffee, which was very good indeed.

Louis burst in at the door. "Sis, you ought to see the corrals out here. They have ninety head of horses! Think of that! And I'm to ride all I want to."

Baker, who appeared just behind him, put in a drawling word: "'Peared like he wanted to ride four to once, like a circus man. Are you gettin' somethin' to eat, miss?"

"Oh, yes, indeed!"

Louis, throwing down his cap in imitation of Raymond, cried out, "I'm hungry!"

Ann turned to Baker. "Mr. Foreman, isn't there something mysterious about your cook? Part of the time he speaks like a man of the world and part of the time like a rancher. I think he's playing a part, and playing it badly."

"What makes you think so?" asked Louis. "They say he's a bully rider."

"They ain't none better, miss," replied Baker, who began to look a little uneasy.

Ann pursued her point. "I think he's one of those romantic cowboys who have seen better days—perhaps an English nobleman in disguise."

Baker was always ready when a chance to get even with Raymond offered itself. He puckered his plump face into a frown of deep concern. "I guess you're some right, miss, but he ain't no English lord, I don't think. We never inquire very close into a man's pedigree out here if he can ride a cayuse and tip a gun. But he's American, all right, and a good cook."

"Is Cook his real name?"

Baker became cautious. "Did he say his name was Cook? If he did, that goes. I'm not in the habit of disputing him."

"No, he didn't tell his name, but he intimated that I might call him Cook. Your name is Raymond, isn't it?"

Baker was again slow to answer. "Did he intimate that my name was Raymond?"

Ann after looking at him in silence remarked gravely, "Of course, you're both having fun with us because we're from the east, and I don't think it quite nice in you."

Baker began to look distressed. "Oh, see here, miss, you mustn't think—you're all wrong! Why, we're delighted—we—you see"—

Ann turned to Louis. "Louis, you are living out one of Owen's stories this very minute. I want you to stay here until you can meet these people on their own ground." She faced Baker again. "Tell me more about this cook. He's a college man, and there's some hidden mystery, as the story books say. What brought him to this pass? Is he a fugitive from justice?"

Baker took a seat and appeared to ponder. "Well, now, I don't like to say. You see, it ain't safe to tell tales on Cook. If you'll swear not to breathe a word"—

"Hold up your hands, Louis, and swear!" cried Ann. "Of course we won't tell."

Baker settled into his chair. "You mustn't blame him till you hear the hull story, but he killed a feller back east, somewhere in Illinois."

Ann started melodramatically. "Really?"

Baker, pleased with his success, added, "Two of 'em, in fact."

Louis, wide eyed with interest, "What did he do it for?"

Baker, glowing with pleasure in the work of his own imagination, cut loose from his moorings. "It was this way: He was courting a girl—the daughter of a rich farmer—and her family was hot because Rob was poor, and her dad put another fellow on to tell lies about Rob's drinkin' and all that, and Rob met up with this feller and just naturally piped him full of soft nose bullets. That led him to seek higher altitudes, as the newspapers say. Now, that's the plain truth of the whole business, as I heard it."

Louis pursued the inquiry. "Who was the other man he killed?"

"The deppity sherf. Had to do that to get away."

Ann looked about. "You say he reads these books?"

"When he has time. He dotes on 'em."

"Do you read them?"

"Great Scott, no! I'd go to sleep over such things. 'The Boy's Own' is about my size."

Ann's tone was reflective. "That's queer. Mr. Barnett said you were a great reader."

Baker paled, then got red. He had walked into a clever little trap. He wriggled in his chair. "Did he say that? Well—I—I used to, but lately"—

Ann looked at him keenly and said calmly: "You also are an impostor. Your name isn't Raymond—you're not the foreman. You are all bandits and have stolen my cousin's ranch and are running it to suit yourselves. I believe you killed poor old Mr. Jones and his wife."

Louis sprang to his feet. "Ann, what do you mean?"

Baker threw up both hands. "Hold on! Don't shoot! I'll come down. I knew I couldn't keep the game going." He rose, and his manner changed. "Now listen. I'll tell you the square toed truth. It was my turn to cook, and Raymond—that's our boss—when he heard you was comin', knowin' I couldn't cook sour bran mash, says: 'Baker, you'll have to play boss while the company's here. I've got to toss up the bacon and prunes. Now that's the fact, lady."

Ann, with conviction, turned to Louis: "Now I believe he's telling the truth. What is your name?"

"John Edwin Baker—Jack, the boys call me. I never had any other name, I'm sorry to say, and I came here from Kansas. I never killed anything bigger'n a coyote. I'm just a plain cow puncher at twenty-six per month."

Raymond, reappearing at the door, put them all into guilty confusion. His eyes were too keen to be withstood, and Ann's lashes fell for a moment as he offered the dipper. "Like a cool drink, lady?"

She recovered herself instantly. "Thank you, if you will be so kind."

Raymond threw a glance at Baker that propelled him through the doorway as palpably as a kick, then turned to Louis. "How does the grub go, youngster?"

"Bully!" replied the boy as he took up a spoonful of rice. His eyes followed the little figure of the rancher with joy.

Ann cut in with a grave face, belied by something in her voice. "I didn't suppose a foreman would stoop to cook."

The young fellow frowned. "What's that?"

Ann went on, "I think it's nice of you, Mr. Raymond, to abase yourself to the rim of a kettle."

"Excuse me, lady, but"— He looked about for Baker.

Ann interposed. "That's twice you've called me 'lady.' No real cowboy ever does that, I'm told, so you must be an impostor."

Raymond's face flushed with anger. "See here! What has that fat jackass been saying to you about me?"

Ann, calmly smiling, made her charges specific. "You're not the cook. You're called Robert Raymond. You're the foreman and a graduate of Harvard university, like all superior cowboys, and you have gallantly volunteered to cook in order that we might eat. Now, isn't this true?"

Raymond was stunned for a moment, but as she went on his head lifted, and into his eyes leaped a spark of red light. "Wait till I sight that scoundrel. You'll have a fine chance to study a cowboy in action. What else did he say?"

"He told us all about your fight with your rival. It was very thrilling. It's like being a character in a novel oneself. I'm quite exalted by the thought."

Raymond's eyes ceased to glow, a faint smile quivered at the corners of his lips as he bowed gracefully. "Miss Rupert, permit me to astonish you still more. My name, though alliterative, is my own. I have never killed a man"—he looked toward the door—"that incredible ass will be my first. I am not a graduate of Harvard, and I did not leave my native town between two days. Does this disappoint you?"

"Most deeply. Are there no mitigating circumstances?"

"None whatever. I am hopelessly commonplace. I'm not even a cowboy. I'm foreman of a hay ranch."

"You destroy our dreams. But these books are yours?"

Raymond's eyes wavered. "Well, yes—some of them, but I don't care to pose as the student rancher. The boys respect me now because I can ride a horse and pitch hay. I make it a point not to air my other accomplishments"—

He was interrupted by a series of faint yells, and as they all listened the swift trample of horses' hoofs could be heard. Louis sprang up, all excitement, his eyes glowing.

"What is that—Indians?"

Raymond smiled at Ann. "No, only a bunch of cowboys passing." He stepped to the door to study their approach. "It's a mob of Williams' men. I don't know what they're doing here." The rush and trample of hoofs swept nearer, and a group of five drab colored horsemen drew up at the hitching pole with loud outcries, each man setting his pony on end with a wrench at the reins.

"Hello, Bob!" shouted the leader.

"Howdy, boys—howdy?" he replied coldly. It was plain he was not well pleased by their inopportune call.

"Got anything to eat?" asked one of them as he swaggered up.

"Sure thing. Tidy up and come in." Raymond, turning to Ann, said gently: "Perhaps you and the boy had better step into the other room. This gang is coming in."

"They're not dangerous?"

"No, but some of them are not fit to eat in the presence of a lady."

"Louis will want to see your guests."

"Very well," replied Raymond and turned to meet his visitors, who appeared fresh from a hasty toilet. "Come right in, boys. What's the best word from over the ridge?"

The man who entered first was a big, rawboned, wide mouthed, freckle faced fellow, who gaped in amazement as he caught sight of Ann. "Hello! What's all this?" he asked, hunching the man next him.

The insolent vulgarity of his tone brought a flush of anger to Raymond's face. "Shut up!" he commanded in a low voice. Then added in explanation, "Some of Barnett's folks visiting the ranch." At the moment he hated them all with a sudden realization of their essential cheapness and their filthy manners.

As they took seats each man glanced at Ann with furtive, devouring eyes, and she thrilled under the scrutiny as she would have done beneath the glare of a wolf. She had a sudden sense of danger. "I am getting close to the elemental man," she thought, and by contrast Raymond assumed new interest. Though his clothing was almost as rough as theirs, his face and voice betrayed good blood and refinement. She wondered whether Wayne Peabody could stand between such a mob of ruffians and a woman. This man Raymond dominated them easily.

Louis sat as one entranced studying the groupings in the sunset light, which had begun to dim a little. To him these men were heroic. Their physical hardihood, their slouching grace, their rumpled hair, their tag ends of kerchiefs and greasy belts and cuffs were all "bang up material." The avid glare under which Ann shivered was hidden from the eyes of the boy, but Raymond took note of every nudge, every wink that passed, and once or twice he fixed his eyes on the man they called Speckle in a look which stayed a coarse jest upon his lawless lips.

They talked of the great, new mining camp on the side of Mogalyon, whereto they were all bound. "They're striking it rich in the grass roots, and we're going up to take a hand in it. Why, last week they made three strikes on Pine mountain within fifteen feet of the surface. They say the placer is turning out $10 a day. So we're riding up to turn a rock on our own account. The cattle business is done for. Gold chasing is the game now."

"Say, Raymond," called out a little man down by the stove, "you'd better hustle out your gang and meet that fire. It's coming right over the ridge this way and is getting worse every minute."

Raymond's face betrayed keen interest. "I've been trying to locate that fire all day. It's over about Round Top, isn't it?"

"Oh, no. It's away this side. Looks like it's sure to take Williams' hay if he don't watch out, and yours too."

"Why didn't you ride over and see just where it was?" asked Raymond.

"Too busy," Speckle replied loudly, and the others laughed. "I'm after gold now. I'm sick o' forkin' hay."

Raymond's voice grew sterner. "You didn't leave Williams short handed to fight that fire?"

"No matter whether we did or not; we've got done. Our time was up; we've got our pay. He can fight his own fire; we're not responsible." They all laughed as though this were a good joke.

Raymond's next words were as cold and calm as they were unexpected. "You get up and get out o' here, every man of you. I mean now." His anger broke out as they started. "I don't feed men who leave a rancher short handed with a fire rampin' down on him." He rose and stood beside the door.

He landed outside the door on all fours.

Speckle rose and stared in silence, coffee dripping from his jaws. "You want to go easy with me, Rob Raymond. You've done me dirt enough already."

Raymond's face was pallid with passion. "Get out!"

They perceived his deadly earnestness and tramped out, but Speckle blustered: "I see you again. I get you for this. You crawl for this."

Raymond's hand dropped upon his shoulder, and he landed outside the door on all fours. With his hand on his revolver, the young foreman stepped out and watched them mount.

Ann could hear their threats as they rode away, and Louis, breathless, absorbed, his mouth open, stood in the doorway.

CHAPTER IV.

ANN had been absorbed in a study of the cowboys. In her own walk of life even the basest of men approached her clad in linen and broadcloth—sleek beasts—with civility; but here were males whose lean jaws clamped upon food with the eager haste of wolves, men primitive as Picts, with less of law than Zulus. They were not outlaws from society, for they had never known society. They were desperadoes for diversion.

"SWISS FOOD"

Boils and Pimples

Red Rash, Eczema, in fact any skin disease, disfigures the complexion because the bowels are constipated—or because the kidneys do not rid the system of waste—or because the skin itself is unhealthy.

Ointments, salves and soaps are useless. Because the trouble is with the blood.

Owing to defective action of bowels, kidneys or skin, the blood becomes laden with impurities. It is these impurities — deposited by the blood — that make boils, pimples, and painful, disfiguring skin diseases. It is because the trouble is with the bowels, kidneys or skin, that FRUIT-A-TIVES cure these diseases

Fruit-a-tives
or "Fruit Liver Tablets"

act directly on the eliminating organs—correct their irregularities—strengthen them—and thus clear the skin and make the complexion clear and soft.

If you have any skin trouble—or any fault with constipation, liver trouble, biliousness, headaches, indigestion, rheumatism—cure yourself with Fruit-a-tives. They are made of fruit juices and tonics—and never fail to cure.

FARM AND FIRESIDE

Useful Hints Which Will be Appreciated by the Progressive Farmer and His Housekeeper

POULTRY DEPARTMENT.

Young Poultry Keepers.

Poultry raising naturally attracts the young people. If in the beginning they have any strange fancy for any special breed of fowls, by all means allow them to select that breed. If they have no special choice, advise them to select one of the general utility breeds, such as the Rocks, Wyandottes, or Reds. Insist on them beginning with a pure-bred flock, and urge them to keep it pure by culling out all birds from season to season that are not perfect in color, shape and type. This effort to maintain a standard of excellence will help train the young people in observation, and they will soon become expert in selecting the best.

In Choosing a Place to keep the fowls fix up a room in one of the outhouses or build a house specially for the poultry, which need not be expensive. Do not have the house too close and stuffy. Provide for sufficient ventilation. It is better for the health of the birds to have the house a little on the cold side in the winter, with proper ventilation, dry walls and flooring, than to have it warm, damp and close. To keep the floor dry, have a tile or storm drain around the outside of the walls with a good outlet, then put in a layer of small stone or gravel and cover with coal ashes and cement for a floor. The house will then keep warm, dry and healthful. The windows should face the south and be placed not over 18 inches from the floor. They should be wider than high. Place the dust bath and scratching place so that the sun will stream in on them from nine or ten o'clock in the morning until two or three in the afternoon. A good dust bath is made of equal parts of dry road dust, coarse sand, and sifted coal ashes, with some carbolic or insect powder mixed in it at first and when renewing.

An Incubator.

is profitable if two hundred or more chicks are to be raised. I prefer to allow a few hens that are brooding to sit on the nests for two or three days when the batch is coming off and put from 25 to 30 chicks with each hen, rather than depend on the brooders. If the chicks are placed under the hens three or four at a time just after dark, they will nearly always take kindly to them; in the morning early the balance should be placed with the hen. Do not take the chicks out of the incubator until after say 48 hours, or even 60 hours, out of the shell.

Do Not Feed Too Soon.

I find that granulated oatmeal fed dry is the healthiest and cheapest feed for the first ten days. Fix up a roomy, movable coop so that it can be moved at least once a week. Make a point of selling the poorest year-old birds and all the two-year-old hens about the first of July, when prices are high, and chicks are scarce Have early pullets and get the yearlings to moult early. Feed well, give plenty of room and exercise, and you will have lots of early eggs. In the winter make a point of feeding moist scraps, ground corn, and vegetables. See that your hens have access to sharp grit. Do not keep too many birds in a pen. A pen 12x12 will hold 25 birds.

DAIRY DEPARTMENT.

A Scotch Milking Machine.

A very clever young lady, Miss Kinross, who is the dairying teacher for one of the Scottish counties, says well that skilled milkers are now hardly to be met with. She is an ardent advocate of machine milking, and many in the North consider that the time has come for a great extension of this method. Practically my own inquiries on this occasion were limited to the Lawrence-Kennedy machine, which is placed on the market by a Glasgow firm.

Meantime—I quote a few points from the reports of practical men who have used the apparatus for a couple of years. A Scotch farmer writes.

"The cows take kindly to the machine, and seem to prefer it to hand milking, as the greater part of them chew their cud while being milked, and one or two cows that had to be held by the nose when being hand milked, at once submitted to the machine and stood perfectly quiet. It milks cows with small teats as readily as animals with full-sized teats, and does not injure them in any way. in fact, I have not a cow with a sore teat in my herd of 70, and I have only had one with a weeded quarter since the machine was started, which is the lowest percentage ever I had, and I don't in any way blame the use of the machine for it. It keeps the milk cleaner and freer from sediment than it can possibly be kept by hand milking, and the appliance is kept perfectly clean without trouble."

Then a Buckinghamshire dairy farmer, with a herd of over 40 cows, says:

"The cows become invariably, and almost from the first milking—after they have got over the first few minutes' restlessness caused by the sight of the, to them, strange object beside them, and the slight noise which the pulsator makes,—quiet under its action, and indeed heifers become much sooner reconciled to its action than they do to the ordinary hand process. The cows positively like it, and go on complacently feeding while being milked, as if they were being sucked by their own progeny."

The vice-president of the Paris Chamber of Commerce, M. Hugon —who is more than an amateur,—testifies:

"My fifty cows are milked every day with the Lawrence-Kennedy machine, and I never had the slightest inconvenience, and feel convinced that my production has been increased and bettered through this invention. The cows have taken to it at once, and seem to be pleased with it. My entire herd is milked within an hour with the assistance of two operators.'

From far-off Queensland, the principal of the well-known Hawkesbury Agricultural College says that the milk flow is simply regulated and maintained much more evenly and with greater preciseness with the machine than with the hand. The irritating and jerky motions adopted by some milkers with hard, horny, dirty hands are always avoided. He adds that some aged cows are not so tractable, and at first may require to be hand-stripped, but after continued use they also strip right out with the machine. No sore teats or other source of irritation have been detected.

The New Zealand Department of Agriculture asserts that the process is far more comfortable to the cow, and the animal almost ruminates while milking is proceeding. Kicking, restless cows remain more quiet when being milked with the machine than when the operation is being performed by hand. In Australia and New Zealand nearly 800 installations are at work: and as I have before shown, we are getting an increasing quantity of butter from these far-off colonies.

You ask, What is saved by adopting the milking machine? The economy of labor may be fairly estimated at 60 per cent. In the case of a dairy of 50 cows, at least six persons would be required to perform the milking in a reasonable time by the hand process. With three pulsators the work could be got through in about an hour by a dairymaid and a boy, and the saving thus effected in labor would be sufficient to pay the cost of the outfit in a couple of years. It certainly looks as though the cow-milking machine had come to stay.—T. Bowick, London, Eng., in The Country Gentleman.

NOTES.

Potatoes. — Undoubtedly the potato may be called our principal vegetable. It enjoys greater popularity than anything of its kind served on the table. It is not surprising therefore that we have arrived at fairly definite standards of what a good potato should be. These standards are most strictly maintained in the better markets. The best markets demand a smooth, even potato, weighing six to eight ounces, which will run just a trifle under three inches long. This must not have deep eyes under any circumstances. A slight yellowish color is popular, although fairly-white-skinned tubers are always in demand. The whole tendency in this country has been toward the production of a tuber with a very high proportion of starch, the starchy tubers being those which cook dry and mealy. This is especially important in baking. It is curious to note that in the old country, especially in France and Germany, potatoes are required of higher protein content and with comparatively less starch. What would be called the best kind of potato in Paris, to us would seem wet and soggy.

Care of Grafts.—Grafts which were set last spring should receive immediate attention. There are likely to be suckers starting from the old branches below the scions, and these should be removed, or they will rob the new growth. The scions also are likely to make a branchy or irregular growth, and this can be prevented to a very large extent by suitable pruning or pinching.

BREEDERS' NOTES.

Sysonby, the greatest thoroughbred race horse of the century, is dead. For more than two months Sysonby had been ailing from a disease of the skin, pronounced by the ablest veterinarians to be of virulent character. He had received the care and attention to which his worth entitled him. Surgeons were called on to save him, and were told if they succeeded they might name their own fees. But from the first his decline was perceptible and unchecked. James P. Keene, his owner, had refused an offer of $200,000 for the horse. Sysonby went into winter quarters last fall the winner of over $175,000.

According to an account from St. Petersburg, Captain Byieff of the Russian army has completed a wonderful equine feat. The captain left the front in Manchuria shortly after the peace treaty was signed and arrived in St. Petersburg on June 5. He rode the entire distance, about 8700 miles, in eight months and four days. His horse, which was of English breed, was in good condition when the journey was finished. The captain's orderly, who was his sole companion, had a Mongolian mount. The average distance covered per day was thirty-five miles.

A horseman of Lewiston, Me., found a note securely fastened in the mane of a Western horse which he bought a few weeks ago. The note was from the former owner who wished to be kept informed of the horse's new home and the treatment received. The new owner wrote back that the horse was well cared for and fed liberally and was just the kind of horse that he wanted—Horse Breeder.

DOMESTIC HINTS.

Red Kidney Beans.

Soak one pint of red kidney beans over night in two quarts of cold water; rinse and cover with fresh cold water. Add a small onion with one clove stuck in it and a rounding tablespoonful of butter. Cook slowly until tender, but not broken, and add water as it boils away. Season with salt and pepper. Take out the onion and turn the beans on to a platter to make a bed on which to serve broiled chops, sausages or roast pork.

Hermits.

Half a cup of butter, one egg, four level teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one level teaspoonful of cinnamon, half of a grated nutmeg, three-quarters of a cup of sugar, two cups of pastry flour, half a cup of raisins (stoned and chopped) Beat the butter to a cream, add gradually the sugar, then the egg well beaten, and then beat in the raisins. Sift the flour, baking powder and spice together, and add them to the first mixture. Dust the board with flour, roll the mixture out in a sheet a quarter of an inch in thickness. Cut with a round cutter and bake in a moderate oven about fifteen minutes. Keep the dough as soft as possible.

Nut Jumbles.

The following recipe makes delicious hickory nut jumbles: Two cups of brown sugar, one-half cup of butter, one egg, six tablespoonfuls of milk, two cups of flour, rounding; two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one cup of chopped nuts, one teaspoonful of vanilla, if desired. To bake, drop in very small pieces.

RHEUMATICS, READ THIS.

When rheumatism is torturing the body the sufferer wants relief quick. He does not want to be told that he is suffering from uric acid poison in his blood when perhaps he knows all the time that rheumatism has been in his family for generations, that he is predisposed to it, that he got wet through or chilled through the other day and that at once his old enemy began operations. He does not want to take a lot of medicine into his stomach to drive that awful pain out of his leg, but he feels as if he wanted something to go right to the spot. This is where Tuck's Bone Oil comes in. It is a powerful, penetrating oil that goes right to the spot, goes quick and safe and sure. It acts on the seat of pain, and if used according to directions will cure rheumatism. It has done it for hundreds of others; it will do it for you. For sale by all medicine dealers at 50c a bottle, or sent prepaid by The Tuck Bone Oil Company, Limited, Smith's Falls, Ontario.

HAIR WON'T FALL OUT.

If You Kill the Dandruff Germ With the New Treatment.

John N. Fuller, a well-known citizen of Colfax, Wash., says: "I had dandruff so badly that it caked on my scalp. Herpicide completely cured me." George H. McWhirk, of Walla Walla, Wash., says; "Herpicide completely cured me of a bad case of dandruff of 30 years standing." They took the only really sensible treatment, a remedy that destroys the dandruff germ — Newbro's Herpicide Stop dandruff, hair won't fall out, but will grow naturally, luxuriantly. Allays itching instantly and makes hair glossy and soft as silk. One bottle will convince any doubter of its merits Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

Rhubarb Jelly.

Put eight ounces of loaf sugar into a stewpan with half a pint of cold water, the thinly pared rind of a lemon, and a quarter of a pound of red currant jam; let the liquid boil rapidly for six minutes, then add one large, or two small, bundles of rhubarb, cut up, and let it cook until it is reduced to a pulp. Pass it through a sieve and measure it, then reheat and add dissolved gelatine, allowing three-quarters of an ounce to each pint of pulp. Color the rhubarb a bright red with carmine. Have ready an open mould, which has been rinsed with cold water, fill it with the prepared rhubarb, and leave it until sufficiently firm to turn out, when the middle should be filled with stiffly whipped cream.

HINTS TO HOUSEKEEPERS.

The first thing that ought to be prescribed for a headache sufferer is fresh air. Avoid sitting in closed rooms as much as possible. Walk the streets and lounge in the parks, if you can't do better, but keep out of doors. Headache sufferers should never sleep with closed windows, winter or summer. Opening the window in the next room won't do. You must have fresh air from first hand.

Kerosene is very useful and does wonders for many a housekeeper. A soft cloth moistened with it and used on the furniture in regular dustings will brighten the wood. Many laundresses put a little into the water in which soiled clothes are soaked, and a little added to the starch will keep the irons from sticking. Kerosene is also good for cleaning enameled bedsteads, bathtubs, sinks, etc.

In putting away knives and other steel instruments oil them slightly, and wrap them in tissue paper. This will prevent their rusting.

When preparing biscuits, shortcakes or pie-crust do not rub the batter through the flour too thoroughly. To make them flaky the shortening should run in streaks or flakes through the dough.

Stick a few cloves into the meat used for making stock. It will impart an agreeable flavor to it.

Soak ink stains in sour milk. If a dark stain remains, rinse in a weak solution of chloride of lime.

A solution of oxalic acid applied with a stiff brush and a fresh ribbon or a bunch of flowers will do wonders for the old white straw hat.

Water should never be put on gilt frames. They should be wiped with dry cloth or chamois. This applies to all metals and lacquered goods.

For those who do not care for colored ribbons to show through their thin white waists, they can substitute narrow linen tape. It launders well and is so durable. The tape can be bought in various widths and qualities. White ribbon always turns yellow from frequent washing.

THE VETERINARIAN.

Foot Enlarged.—Mule has a bad fore foot. The man I got him from says he thinks it was caused by pawing in stable on a heavy still. The foot seems enlarged to some extent, just over the front part of the hoof, which has worn away and the hind part has grown until the hoof is nearly straight with leg. (Is the mule lame? From your description it looks as though the animal has a ringbone. Have the foot cut down well, shoe with heel calks 3-4 of an inch high and no toe calk.)

Shoulder Swelling.—Five-year cow to calve in December, giving ten quarts milk per day, has swelling on front of left shoulder; six inches across; began forming last winter, does not discharge; appears to be tender. She keeps in good condition; gets two quarts grain morning and night—at pasture. (Rub once a day with some of the following liniment: Tincture iodine, 4 oz.; tincture aconite root, 2 oz.; alcohol, 2 oz.; mix. Other advice will probably be needed in two weeks.)

Horse Remedies.—How can I cure a puff in the hind leg of a horse, without blistering? (1) What is a good hoof ointment to use on a horse to keep hoofs healthy, soft and in good growing condition? (2) Please give me a good liniment for use generally on horses. (3) (1. We do not know. 2. Use tar and oakum with leathers when shoeing, and paint walls once a day with crude petroleum. 3. Various ailments require different liniments or lotions. A good one is spirits of camphor, tincture of aconite root, chloroform, of each four ounces; mix.)

Cough.—A six-year-old western mare, purchased last fall, began coughing in late winter. Did not discharge, and was apparently in good health otherwise. Hay was a bit dusty, but moistened it, and she is now on grass with light feeds of bran and cracked corn. Have given elecampane, and lately have given a heave and distemper cure, but she still coughs occasionally. Wind seems to be good, and flanks do not lift any more than is natural; still I am afraid of heaves. She is not a very hearty eater. (Take her off grass for four days. Give a ball as follows; Powdered nitrate potass., 2 dr.; powdered Barbadoes aloes, 4 dr.; powdered gentian, 2 dr., and a sufficient quantity of syrup; mix. Exercise, but do not drive her. Put on tongue 20 drops hom. tincture arsenic every two hours. After 48 hours, give same dose hom. tincture bryonia, and so alternate these every two days. Other treatment may be necessary later.)

Tender Feet, p. 620.—I had mare shod as directed, and she travels better. The blacksmith tells me her hind feet are hard and not growing as fast as they should, and they have very thin shell. She has windpuffs on ankles; can they be removed? (Have shoes on hind feet with heel calks 3-4 of an inch long and no toe calks; clip hair from legs from top of hoofs to hocks, then apply blister to the sides and back of legs from top of bunches to bottom of fetlocks, also all the way around the pasterns from fetlocks to hoofs. This latter will start a new growth of hoof that will be of good quality—not brittle or hard like the present hoofs. The front feet should be blistered in the same way two or three weeks later if still tender. Horse need not be idle more than five or six days at either blistering.)

Foul Hoof—Eyes.—Six-year-old cow has sore at least half an inch deep under the dew claw of her hind foot, about three inches long, like a deep crack at the top of her hoof. Flesh at the top of her hoof has rotted away. The sore opens when she lifts her foot. Will this sore have an effect on her milk? (1) Six-year mare, from the west last spring, has trouble with her eyes, one worse than the other. When in the sun she keeps it closed most of the time; at times it will run. (2) (1. The cow probably has foul hoof. Apply once a day some of the following powder: Powdered sulphate copper, 2 oz., powdered borax, 1 oz.; mix. Cows usually fail in milk and flesh rapidly while suffering from foul hoof, and some cases prove fatal. The foul ointment advertised is a specific for the disease. 2. Put some of the following lotion in eyes with a camel's hair pencil once a day: Hom. tincture calendula, 1 dr.; fluid extract belladonna, 1 dr.; sufficient quantity water to make 1 oz.; mix. This animal will lose one or both eyes eventually, we fear. Other advice may be needed in a few days: refer to this page when writing.)

WANTED — A FARMER'S WIFE.

Aint got no use for "modern" gals, whose heads are full of knowledge,
Who've studied Greek an' Latin, too, in some great female college;
I don't care nothin' 'bout their French an' nothin' 'bout their dancin'—
The fact on 't is, I don't believe in kickin' 'round an' prancin'—
An' while, of course, I'd like a wife that folks would call good-lookin',
One thing I will be sure on first—she must be good at cookin.'

Now don't you think that I'm agin good, honest education,
For that, I know, has made us beat out ev'ry nation:
An' I would like a wife who's got the finifies of learnin'
S'long's it doesn't spoil her for cookin' an' for churnin';
The trouble is, these high-toned things have set their heads half crazy,
An' when it comes to common work they're downright soft and lazy.

Excuse me, gals, I want a wife who's good an' kind an' tender,
An' one who aint ashamed a man should shield her an' defend her.
None of your "modern beauties" who sleep away the mornin'
An' then come down to help their ma, 'bout half awake an' yawnin'
A gal of the old-fashioned sort, strong, rosy-checked an' willin'—
I reckon if there's such a one I'm just about her shillin'.

"THE THISTLE," FIFTY YEARS AFTER.

Mr. C. T. Christie of Montreal, who was the secretary of the Toronto St. Andrew's Literary Association for several years after its formation in 1853, has recently found among the papers in his library several poems written for the association's magazine in that year by the late Rev. Prof. John Campbell of the Presbyterian College, Montreal, who was then a lad of about eighteen. The verses show that Prof. Campbell developed very early in life the talent for the muse. "The Thistle," one of the poems in the "Doric," follows, and may perhaps recall to the few old men now surviving who met almost fifty years ago in the Temperance Hall to listen to the reading of the verses some of the pleasures of the past:—

When oor patron saint, St. Andrew, descended frae the skyes,
He brocht a Thistle doon wi' him—'twas a plant o' muckle size
He set it on the Heelan hills, for a' the warld to see,
An' cried: Wow! but he'll nae be wise that meddle daur wi' thee.

Some fashious Roman bodies cam' frae England's southern plain,
An' thocht to batter doon the Thistle's head wi' chucky stanes,
But Thistles' leaves are sharp an' strong, an' sure the lads did flee,
An' cried: 'He gets nae muckle scran that meddle daur wi' thee."

Then frae the Scandinavian north, proud Denmark's fleet set sail;
But when they saw the Thistle's head, their courage 'gan to fail.
An' as they fell at Largs red field they cried, "Ochonie!
It's naught but death or wounds he gets that meddle daur wi' thee."

An' mony English kings hae tried to houk the Thistle up,
But found it nae sae easy wark, wi' Heelan hills to cope.
An' tho' their minds fu' aft they changed—yet did they a' agree,
That they were nane the richer for their meddlin' wi' thee.

An' noo that to the rose it's joined, an' strength an' beauty blend,
An' round the three-leaved shamrock green it's keen, sharp blades extend.
It rears its head on Britain's throne, an' shouts wi' muckle glee,
"Oh, what's the chiel sae venturesome that meddle daur wi' me?"

O'er this, our young society, lang may the Thistle wave,
An' may we on our name an' laws this motto bright engrave:
"Let weel alane, an' like unto the thistle down I'll be,
But woe to the uncanny han' that meddle daur wi' me."

PURE NICKEL COINAGE.

Suggestion Advanced by Prof. Coleman —An Interesting Report.

The famous Sudbury nickel field is described in part three of the report of the Bureau of Mines, just issued. It embodies the final report of Prof. A. P. Coleman on the results of the field work which he has carried on for the past three summers, with "the object of determining in detail the boundaries of the nickel-bearing rock, and of examining the geological relationships of the known ore bodies, special attention being given to working mines."

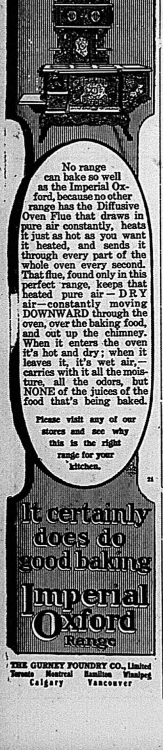
In a chapter devoted to the uses of nickel it is pointed out that Switzerland, Austria-Hungary and France within the last few years have adopted pure nickel instead of the nickel-copper alloy for their coinage. The pure metal does not tarnish or change color, but keeps bright and attractive, and, as it is harder, the imprint stands wear much better. "It is more difficult to counterfeit, since the minting requires more powerful presses." "Why," asks Prof. Coleman, "should not Canada, the producer of half the nickel of the world, replace her ugly cents by clean, untarnishable nickel coins, almost as handsome as silver and much more durable? Canada is presently to have a mint, and it should begin its work by coining one-cent and five-cent pieces of pure nickel; making use of a distinctively Canadian metal."

In his introduction Prof. Coleman, who speaks in terms of praise of the assistance given him by Messrs. M. T. Culbert, W. E. H. Carter, formerly secretary of the Bureau of Mines, a number of Government officials and others, says in part:

"The Sudbury nickel field has long been known as the most important source of that metal in America, if not in the world, but the work of the last three years has brought out more and more strikingly the unique character of this mining region. It has been proved that all the ore deposits of any economic importance are at or near the outer margin of a huge laccolithic sheet of eruptive rock a mile and a quarter thick, thirty-six miles long and seventeen miles wide. This sheet is now in the form of a boat-shaped syncline, with its pointed end to the southwest and its square end to the northeast. The rock composing this sheet is norite at the outer (and lower) edge merging into granite or grano-diorite at the inner (upper) edge. The ore bodies are round the margin of the norite, or along dikelike offsets from it, and have evidently segregated from the rock while still molten, though they may have undergone later rearrangement by circulating water."

Later, in speaking of the marginal deposits, Prof. Coleman says: "These include the Creighton mine, owned by the Canadian Copper Co., which may safely be called the greatest nickel mine in the world, having already produced probably more than 500,000 tons of rich ore, and, as it is supposed from the results of diamond drilling, having millions of tons in reserve."

At the present time only two companies are actually at work, the Canadian Copper Co. and the Mond Co. "Both," says the report, "seem to be fairly established with good mines and satisfactory methods of smelting and refining the ore, so that the future should be prosperous." . . . . "The only real competitor of Ontario as a nickel producer is the French penal colony, New Caledonia, in the South Seas."



No range can bake so well as the Imperial Oxford, because no other range has the Diffusive Oven Flue that draws in pure air constantly, heats it just as hot as you want it heated, and sends it through every part of the whole oven every second. That flue, found only in this perfect range, keeps that heated pure air—DRY air—constantly moving DOWNWARD through the oven, over the baking food, and out up the chimney. When it enters the oven it's hot and dry; when it leaves it, it's wet air,—carries with it all the moisture, all the odors, but NONE of the juices of the food that's being baked.

Please visit any of our stores and see why this is the right range for your kitchen.

"The Man Who Looks Into the Eye" is Here.

We have for years been looking into the eyes of people with obscure diseases, by means of different instruments and electric light, the two principal instruments used are the Retinoscope, and the Opthalmascope, the former for errors of Refraction,—which means defects that glasses will remedy, this method is called the "Shadow Test," and is based on entirely scientific principles, it was discovered about forty years ago by Sir Wm. Paget Bowman. The latter instrument is used also for errors of Refraction, but more particularly for detecting diseases of the Retina (the vital point of sight), by means of this instrument we can see its blood vessels and the Optic Nerve, etc. It was discovered in 1851 by Helmhaltz, an eminent scientist. It requires years of study and experience to become proficient with these instruments. We test the eye by these free of charge.

City Fathers Take A Two Months Holiday.

GOOD DEAL OF TALK AT LAST NIGHT'S COUNCIL MEETING — WHAT IS TO BE DONE AND WHAT IS NOT TO BE DONE.

The City Fathers were in a jovial mood when the Mayor rang the bell last night. Perhaps the thought of approaching holidays made them happy. It was decidedly warm in the Council chamber, and the merry song of the mosquito sounded cheerfully in one's ears. Ald. Cooper, Gordon and Knox were absent.

COMMUNICATIONS.

The Board of Health wrote detailing certain accounts which were to be paid, stating that the Chairman of the Board, the Medical Superintendent and Mr. J. A. Laidlaw were a committee to act with the Council re Isolation hospital, and recommending that a suitable uniform be procured for Inspector Arnott.

"Nonsense," said some of the aldermen, "when will he wear the uniform?"

"When he's taking tickets at the rink," said Ald. Sinclair.

However, Ald. Panter, Paterson and Marsh were in favor of the recommendation, which finally passed, only Ald. Green voting against it, Ald. Sinclair being in the chair.

THE FRANCK ST. CROSSING.

The City Clerk read a letter from Mr. W. H. Biggar, G. T. R. solicitor, which stated that the G.T.R. would put the roads and bridges over their property leading into this city in good repair without delay, but did not think the city should insist on the Franck St. crossing being opened. The G.T.R. thought there were already crossings enough leading into Belleville. There was no intention to raise the tracks at North Front St.

There was considerable discussion on the matter, and finally

Ald. Marsh moved that the City Solicitor write Mr. Biggar that the city insists on the opening of the Franck St. crossing.—Carried.

JULY 23RD A CIVIC HOLIDAY.

Mr. W. H. Wallbridge, of Toronto, wrote stating that the Belleville Old Boys resident in Toronto were coming down a thousand strong on July 21st. This was to be an annual affair. The party would stay till the late evening of July 23rd, and it was requested that the Mayor proclaim Monday, July 23rd, as a civic holiday.

None of the aldermen spoke very enthusiastically in favor of the request, as Ald. Sinclair and some others thought the city would look dead if the stores were shut, but finally

Ald. Panter moved that the request of the Toronto Old Boys be granted, that the Mayor be asked to proclaim July 23rd as a civic holiday, and that the citizens be requested to decorate their houses and stores in honor of the annual home-coming of the Belleville Old Boys now in the Queen City.—Carried.

ACOUSTIC PROPERTIES BAD, SAYS THE PROFESSOR.

Prof. Denmark was heard in reference to the band stand at Victoria Park. He said the ceiling of the stand smothered the sound, and it would be wise, in his opinion, to either remove the roof of the stand or build a platform on the west side of Victoria Park. The acoustic properties of the present stand were not good, and people complained could not hear the band when it gave concerts on the park.

Ald. Panter pointed out that the present ceiling of the band stand had been put on at the request of the band

After a little more conversation

Ald. Sinclair told the Professor that the Chairman of Parks was away, the appropriation was nearly all spent, and there was small prospect of anything being done in regard to his request this year.

The matter was referred to the Parks Committee.

WANTED WALK BUILT AS ADVERTISED.

Mr Ross, a resident of William St., addressed the Council in regard to the proposed granolithic walk on William St. south which had been advertised to be built down to Dunbar St. He wanted to know why it had not been built.

Ald. Panter said the walk in question had been advertised all right, but the city did not feel called on to build granolithic walks, where there were no residences. Property-owners, who owned the vacant property, objected. If the property-owners on William St. could agree the city would build the walk.

The matter was left to the Public Works Committee.

OBJECTS TO A POLE.

Mr. William Gordon wrote objecting to a telegraph pole which had recently been erected just in front of his door on Station St. He wanted it moved.

The Mayor promised to look into the matter.

COMMITTEE REPORTS.

The reports of the various standing committees, as already published, were passed without change or discussion.

ACCOUNTS PASSED.

The following accounts were passed, some of them subject to the chairmen's checking:

Trenton Electric Co.	$363.41

(There was a rebate of $11.79 for lights out.)

T.S. Carman	24.30

MISS BELL'S SALARY.

Ald. Marsh moved that Miss H. Bell, City Clerk Mikel's stenographer, be granted an increase of $1.50 per week from the city during the balance of this year.

During the discussion which ensued it came out that Miss Bell was paid $3.50 per week by Mr. Mikel. She asked for more, which he could not afford to pay her, hence the city was asked to pay the increase asked.

Some of the aldermen thought that Miss Bell was Mr. Mikel's employee, and the city had nothing to do with her wages at all.

Ald. McCrodan, Marsh and the Mayor spoke in favor of the motion. No one else had any objection to it, but they rather objected to the modus operandi.

The motion finally passed.

PAINTING THE BRIDGES.

Ald. Marsh asked Ald. Panter if it was the intention of the Public Works department to paint the bridges this year.

Ald. Panter asked Ald. Marsh if the Chairman of the Executive would advance any more money in case the Public Works committee exceeded its appropriation.

Ald. Marsh retorted that the Chairman of Public Works had, this year, been given $1000 more than last year, in view of such contingencies as bridge painting arising.

The matter dropped.

A RIGHT OF WAY CASE.

Ald. Panter called the attention of the Council to the case of a lane leading off Foster avenue, which had been used as a thoroughfare for some time, and which certain parties now desired to close up.

The City Soliciter said the lane in question was in the class known as "dedicated" roads.

The matter was finally left in the hands of the Mayor, Chairman of Public Works and Ald. Sinclair.

DOWN WENT THE ZWICK'S ISLAND SCHEME.

Under the head of Enquiries,

Ald. Panter asked if the Zwick's island filtering basin scheme was dropped or would it be gone on with.

The City Clerk said that, according to the latest estimate, they would need $5000 more than the by-law called for.

Ald. Marsh said the by-law which had been submitted to the people was now practically dead. By its terms the city was compelled to issue the debentures inside of a year. This had not been done.

Ald. Panter said that if the city were going to take action in the matter now was the time. Could they get authority from the Municipal Commission, which had lately dealt with Gas Works extensions?

Mr. Mikel said they might if they could show that the new system would bring the necessary increase in revenue

INSPECTION OF BUILDINGS.

The discussion was going on when Ald. Marsh butted in and closed it off abruptly by asking if the Building Inspector had inspected certain Front St. buildings which were alleged to be unsafe. The speaker mentioned the case of the stone, which had fallen two stories and just missed a pedestrian.

Ald. Panter said Sergeant Hayes had taken action in two cases, he knew.

WATER AGAIN.

Ald. Sinclair was beginning to talk on the Zwick's island scheme again, when

Ald. Marsh rose to a point of order. There was no motion before the chair, and he did not want to stay there all night listening to talk which was out of order.

Ald. Sinclair said he would make an enquiry then. He would ask the Mayor if, in his opinion, it would not be wise to make an inspection of the intake pipe.

Ald. Marsh said that, last spring, the intake pipe had been inspected by a diver for 600 feet from the shore, and found to be all right.

THE BAND CONCERTS.

Ald. Panter asked if it was true that any member of the Council had asked the Fifteenth band to give eight concerts on the park for $75.

Ald. Vermilyea said, so far as he was concerned, it was not true. He had asked the manager of the Fifteenth band to fix a price for six concerts and he had refused to do so, saying "If you have $200 to spend, we want $100 of it." The manager said his band would play for whatever the Oddfellows' band did, but they would fix no price. If the Oddfellows' band played for nothing they would do the same.

"But," said Ald. Vermilyea, "I said, 'you have not given us a price.'"

"No," was the reply, "and I don't intend to."

OTHER ENQUIRIES.

The Mayor asked when the weeds would be cut.

Ald. Panter said they would begin to cut them to-morrow.

Ald. Green asked if it would be necessary to introduce a by-law forbidding people to tie their horses to the verandah round the meat market. Such a practice was wrong and should be stopped.

The matter was left in Ald. Green's hands, with the understanding that the City Solicitor would prepare such a by-law for him.

THREE BY-LAWS PASSED.

Ald. Marsh introduced the following by-laws, which were passed and numbered 1291, 1292, and 1293:

Re Collecter's rolls.

To acquire land and add to Queen Victoria park.

To ratify an agreement between the city and Robt. McCoy, re horses for Fire Department.

SOME IMPORTANT MOTIONS.

Ald. Panter moved that $20,000 be spent on granolithic walks this year, instead of $10,000, as first passed.—Carried.

Ald. Panter moved that $10 reward be offered for the arrest and conviction of parties found mutilating granolithic walks in course of construction.—Carried.

Ald. Marsh moved that, when the Council adjourns at this meeting it do not again meet in regular session till Sept. 10, and that the committees next meet on Friday, Sept. 6, and that the chairmen of the different committees, the Mayor and chairman of the Executive be authorized to sign cheques for all necessary expenses during the interim.—Carried.

Ald. Vermilyea moved that $300 be granted to the East Hastings fair, to be held in this city.—Carried.

A TAR MACADAM WALK.

The Mayor said that a walk down near the rolling mills was in a very bad condition. Something should be done with it. He suggested that a tar macadam walk be built as an experiment.

This was agreed to.

THE MAYOR'S THANKS.

Just before "Orders of the day" was reached

The Mayor said he desired to express the thanks of Mrs. Sulman and himself for the handsome gift and good wishes of the Council on the occasion of his marriage. He felt their kindness deeply and hoped the good feeling between his confreres and himself would always continue.

Ald. Sinclair, in the name of the Council, gracefully voiced the warm feelings of that body towards Mayor and Mrs. Sulman, and the Council adjourned at 10.30.

Four officers of the torpedo boat destroyer Bedovie were found guilty of having premeditatively surrendered the Bedovie, and all four were condemned to death by shooting, but on account of extenuating circumstances the Emperor will be requested to commute their sentences to dismissal from the service and to be deprived of certain rights.

Too Rainy For a Wedding.

In Sutton a generation ago lived a man named Marsh. He decided after due consideration to marry a young lady in an adjoining town. The day was set, preparations were made for the wedding and the guests were assembled. The appointed hour arrived, and the bridegroom did not appear. Another hour of waiting, and still he tarried. The young lady's father became impatient. "I'm going to hunt him up," he said. A half hour's drive brought him to the Marsh home.

"Where is Frank?" he demanded.

"He went down cellar to pick over some potatoes, seeing it's so rainy," was the response.

"What do you mean by not coming to the wedding?" demanded the irate prospective father-in-law of the tardy bridegroom.

"It rains so hard I thought you wouldn't have the wedding," Marsh replied, "but I'll fix up and ride back with you, seeing everybody's there."

Haeckel Visiting Darwin.

When the carriage drew up before Darwin's house, with its ivy and shadowy elms, the great scientist stepped out of the shade of the creeper covered porch to meet me. He had a tall and venerable appearance, with the broad shoulders of an Atlas that bore a world of thought; a Jove-like forehead as we see in Goethe, with a lofty and broad vault deeply furrowed by the plow of intellectual work. The tender and friendly eyes were overshadowed by the great roof of the prominent brows. The gentle mouth was framed in a long silvery white beard. The noble expression of the whole face, the easy and soft voice, the slow and careful pronunciation, the natural and simple tenor of his conversation, took my heart by storm in the first hour that we talked together, just as his great work had taken my intelligence by storm at the first reading. I seemed to have before me a venerable sage of ancient Greece, a Socrates or an Aristotle.

A Snake That Swallows Eggs.

The hydraci yeti is a native of South Africa, and, taken all around, he is a curiosity in the reptile line. Unlike the regulation snake, he has no teeth in his mouth, but has a full set of grinders in his stomach. These dental wonders grow from the center of each vertebra. They pass through the walls of the stomach, and are each crowned with enamel. Hydraci is the champion egg sucker, and the teeth in the stomach appear to be nature's provision for breaking the shell of the egg without running the risk of losing the precious contents. When the egg lands in the stomach and the serpent's instinct tells it that everything is all right, the addominal walls contract, and the egg is crushed against the long row of vertebral teeth.

MORE CAVALRY MUTINY

Most Serious of Such Affairs Since That of Sebastopol.

Revolutionary Crowds Dispersed by Cossacks—Lieut. Tom Makes a Revolutionary Speech, Incites a Riot, and is Arrested—Landlords Flock to St. Petersburg Asking Protection For Property—Respects Foreign Opinion.

Tambow, July 10.—A mutiny broke out July 7 in the Kasarva Regiment of cavalry, and during the consequent disorder an infantry officer and a soldier of the Nejini Dragoons, who attacked the mutineers, were killed.

The mutineers have barricaded themselves in their barracks.

St. Petersburg, July 10.—The news of the mutiny at Tambow, which apparently is the most serious of such affairs since the Sebastopol mutiny, is confined to the bare details of a censored agency despatch, showing that the mutineers, when attacked by loyal troops, offered armed resistance before retreating to their barracks, where they are now barricaded.

Revolutionary Crowds.

Political demonstrations, during which the crowds carried red flags and sang revolutionary songs, occurred in many places in St. Petersburg Sunday afternoon and night, necessitating the interference of the police and military patrols. Street cars were held up and their occupants were compelled to uncover and salute the red flags.

The most serious affair happened near the Moscow railroad station, where an officer, later identified as Lieut. Tom, made a revolutionary speech to a crowd of 2,000 people. A detachment of police attempted to disperse the assemblage, but the people armed themselves with stones dug up from the streets, and beat off the police and squadron of Cossacks. Eventually the Cossacks were reinforced and fired a blank volley in the air, whereupon the rioters fled to neighboring courts. Only a few persons were slightly injured. Lieut. Tom was arrested and taken to the fortress.

Sing "The Marseillaise."

A performance at the People's Palace was broken up, the audience singing the "Marseillaise" as they dispersed.

The guards on the mail wagons are now armed with rifles, owing to the increasing number of attacks made upon these vehicles. Six more newspapers of this city have been confiscated.

Landlords from the provinces where agrarian disorders are occurring are flocking into Moscow and St. Petersburg, appealing for troops to protect their property.

Interior Minister Stolypin has sent the representatives of foreign countries the Government's official report of the Bialystak rioting, for transmission to their respective Governments.

It is a distinct recognition of the power of public opinion abroad and indicates the solicitude of foreign Governments to know the Russian side of the case.

Dr. Goldwin Smith Retires.

Toronto, July 10.—Dr. Goldwin Smith will resign from the board of governors of Toronto University. Dr. Smith has intimated that his reasons are that the reorganization of the university required time and labor, and at his advanced age he could not undertake the responsibilities of attending meetings at all times. He wishes to allow a younger man to take hold of the work, and hopes for the board the best of success.

King's Horses For Canada.

London, July 10.—The Yorkshire Post (Leeds) says that the King will send representatives of his famous Shire stables at Sandringham to Toronto, Ottawa, London and other horse shows. Lord Rothschild at the request, it is said, of the King, is sending exhibits also.

SHOOTING AT BISLEY.

Canadians Will Use the Lee-Enfield Rifle This Year.

Bisley Camp, July 10.—The annual meeting of the National Rifle Association commenced yesterday with a record attendance. The Canadians are all in good health, and very fit for the arduous work of the next fortnight.

In addition to the regular team, Transport Sergt. Stuart of the 43rd Regiment, Ottawa; Staff-Sergeant Bayles of Toronto; and Capt. Mitchell of the Corps of Guides, are here.

The Canadians are gratified by the announcement that H. R. H. Prince Arthur of Connaught, who recently toured the Dominion on his return from Japan, will distribute the prizes on Saturday, the 21st.

The Canadian team has definitely decided not to abandon the Lee-Enfield rifle for the Ross weapon, as was expected would be the case. They have found that they have not had sufficient practice with the new rifle to justify its use, so they will shoot with the Lee-Enfield, as in previous years.

In the armouries competition yesterday Staff-Sergt. Mortimer of the G. G. F. G., Ottawa, scored a 34. The range is 900 yards.

In the Singer competition, seven shots at 600 yards, Staff-Sergt. Mortimer made 34.

Every day is a new life, every sunrise but a new birth.—Jordon.

SUNDAY BILL IN SENATE

Read a Second Time Though Objections Are Made.

Senator Cloran Wants Special Committee to Take Up Lord's Day Act—Senator Kerr Would Exempt Jews From Operation of the Act, and Have No Prosecutions Without Attorney-General's Consent.

Ottawa, July 10.—The Sunday observance bill came up in the Senate unexpectedly yesterday morning, the second reading being moved by Hon. R. W. Scott. He said that often acts of Parliament were very loose when they touched the habits and customs of the people. In the present case he could not say that the provinces had any right to complain of this legislation for they had a clear right to legislate as far as their powers were concerned. Mr. Scott went over the chief provisions of the bill and explained the object and purpose of each.

Opposition to Clause Five.

On clause five, prohibiting a game of amusement for which an admission fee was charged, Senator Choquette said, if that clause remains, we will fight the bill to the bitter end. It is one we cannot stand, and I would like to know if the Secretary of State is going to persist in it.

Hon. Mr. Scott said it was a compromise clause. It might grate on the prejudices of some people, but it had been accepted for the good that was in the rest of the measure.

Senator Choquette said clause five would stop harmless horse-racing in Quebec by the farmers on Sunday afternoon, not for gain but to test the merits of horse flesh. An admission fee of ten cents was charged in order to keep up the course, and the race took place after Mass, between 3 and 6 o'clock p. m. He could not stand for the bill unless that clause went out.

Things He Could Not Reconcile.

Senator McMullen could not say that he was entirely satisfied with all the provisions of the bill, and he would have been better pleased if some of the amendments made in the House had not been added. He had no desire to trample on the conscientious convictions of others, but this legislation was necessary in a Christian-professing county like Canada. He did not know how Senator Choquette could reconcile horse-racing and gambling with the divine command to keep the Sabbath Day holy.

Senator Choquette—Not gambling.

Senator Cloran—I shall not allow that statement to go before the country that we in the Province of Quebec reconcile gambling and horse-racing with the observance of the Lord's Day. That's a little too strong.

Senator McMullen—I have not made any such statement. I have not charged the people of Quebec with anything of that kind, I say. If they can reconcile any of these things I have enumerated with God's law, let me express surprise. He regretted they had not earlier in their history enacted Christian legislation of this kind.

Two Amendments.

Senator J. K. Kerr of Toronto gave notice of two amendments, one to incorporate in the bill the clause exempting Hebrews from the operation of the act which was defeated in the House and then providing that prosecutions could not be undertaken without the consent of the Attorney-General.

Senator Bostock (British Columbia), gave notice of an amendment to, or rather a substitute for, the bill, which only validates all existing provincial laws, but attempts to delegate to the various provinces jurisdiction over criminal law hereafter so far as necessary to regulate Sunday.

Senator Cloran gave notice that he would move for the appointment of a special committee to consider the pending bill and the Sunday question in all its phases.

Senator Frost feared the advent of the "American Sunday," and thought it the duty of Canada to guard against it.

Senator Landry opposed the bill as an intrusion upon provincial rights.

Senator Choquette said that the bill was a doubleheaded affair. There were sections properly enough in a Dominion Act, while others related to local affairs, and should be eliminated. While opposed to the bill in its present form he would not delay its progress at this time.

The second reading was then carried without division. It will come up in committee to-day.

The Railway Act.

In committee on the amendments to the railway act, Mr. Lancaster's clause, regulating the speed of trains through cities and villages was stricken out; but otherwise the bill was passed as it came from the Commons.

REVISION OF THE RULES.

Estimates For the Intercolonial Railway—Minister Optimistic.

Ottawa, July 10.—Replying to Mr. Gervais in the House of Commons yesterday morning, Sir Wilfrid Laurier said the Government had been in negotiation with the Government of Newfoundland with a view to the solution of the difficulties as to jurisdiction over Ungava Bay and the eastern coast line of Canada north of the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

Dr. Sproule called attention to a statement which he said had been published in The Globe that some of the recent King's birthday honors had been conferred at the instance of the Governor-General without regard to his Ministers.

"I may say that statement is without foundation," Sir Wilfrid Laurier replied.

Revision of the Rules.

The House then took up the report of the special committee which had revised the rules of the House, Sir Wilfrid Laurier pointing out that there were only four important changes: (1) Requiring members to register attendance; (2) requiring a member moving the adjournment of the House to discuss an urgent matter to secure the consent of twenty members; (3) meeting at 1 and adjourning at 6 p. m., on Wednesdays and (4) revising the rules for private bills.

The Intercolonial.

The House spent the afternoon in supply on supplementary estimates for the I. C. R.

Mr. Emmerson said receipts had increased by $836,981, and expenditures had decreased enormously. The result would be a surplus for the year and this was not a mere "spurt," he had the new road now started right.

Mr. Barker (Hamilton), was cynical. These rosy futures for the I. C. R. were an old story. He criticized the purchase of oil from a company in which Mr. Emmerson was interested. Reference was made to the dismissal of Mr. Skeffington from the detective service of the railway. Postage stamps were being stolen in the Intercolonial offices at Moncton. Mr. Skeffington detected the thieves. Shortly after he was dismissed.

Mr. Emmerson said the dismissal was for cause; the work was not being well done.

Votes For Next Nine Months.

The committee then took up the supplementary estimates for the current nine months for the Intercolonial Railway. One vote amounted to $1,011,000. Among the items were $116,000 for exchange of drawbars on freight cars, $540 000 for locomotive and car shops and land at Moncton, $53,500 to strengthen bridges, $72,500 for machinery for new shops at Moncton, $35,500 for siding and spur lines, $26,000 for increased water supply.

Mr. Brodeur presented some estimates, which passed, including a vote of $20,000 for the establishment of Marconi wireless station between Cape Race and Cape Ray.

MR. BASTEDO DISMISSED.

Deputy Commissioner of Fisheries Is Removed as Result of Recent Investigation—Actions Were Partizan.

Toronto, July 10.—Premier Whitney gave out a statement yesterday in part as follows:

"S. T. Bastedo has been removed from the position of deputy commissioner of fisheries. I regret very much the necessity for this decision on the part of the Government. This is the only removal by the Government of an official holding a prominent and important position in the Parliament Buildings.

"The occurrences which led up to the charges, which were made by a fellow employe against Mr. Bastedo took place before the present Government came into power. The charges were of such a nature—comprising, among other offences, the mutilation of official letter books, the mutilation and secretion of letters written on official paper the suppression of documents called for by resolution of the Legislature, and of interference by Mr. Bastedo in election campaigns—that an investigation became necessary.

"The evidence and the findings will, of course, be laid upon the table of the House, together with the evidence and the findings in any other similar cases.

"The report of the commissioner, Mr Judd, was made on March 23 last, and the decision with reference to it by the Government has been delayed owing to the illness of the Minister of Public Works, and through the desire of the Government to give the matter thorough consideration."

Without going into the commissioner's report in detail, the Premier then quoted one or two of his findings.

With regard to Mr. Webster's case the statement is made that "the conclusion of the commission with regard to Mr. Webster will be dealt with later on."

Mr. Bastedo entered the civil service in 1880 as private secretary to the late Sir (then Hon.) Oliver Mowat. In the fall of 1898, he was appointed secretary and financial officer of the Fisheries Department, then established. In the following spring he became deputy commissioner.

10,000 HEAR CHAMBERLAIN.

Canadian Manufacturers' Association Sends Congratulations.

Birmingham, July 10.—(C. A. P.)—The celebration in honor of Joseph Chamberlain's attainment of 70 years was continued last night when 10,000 persons assembled in Bingley Hall to witness the presentation of 120 addresses of appreciation of Mr. Chamberlain's political services. The addresses came from various parts of the United Kingdom. Replying to the speech, Mr. Chamberlain entered on a political retrospect.

In a letter, C. E. Ballantyne, president of the C. M. A., conveys congratulations to Joseph Chamberlain of every member of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, hoping he will visit Canada.

PRESTON TEN AHEAD.

Conservative Candidate Gains In the First Day of Recounting.

Port Arthur, July 10.—The scrutiny of ballots in the Port Arthur and Rainy River election case commenced yesterday afternoon before Justice Teetzel of Toronto.

Up to 6 o'clock twenty-one votes cast for Kennedy had been counted out.

This gives Preston, the Conservative candidate, ten majority.

Banished From Canada.

Sandwich, July 10.—Joseph Coveyeau, arrested a week ago charged with keeping a disorderly house and who it was alleged was guilty of bigamy, was released yesterday by Magistrate Bartlett of Windsor upon condition that he immediately leave Canada and never return.

His Honor Departs.

Toronto, July 10.—Lieut.-Governor Clark left the city last night for a lengthy vacation at Portland, Maine. He was accompanied by his family. During His Honor's absence, Sir William Mulock, chief justice of the exchequer division, will act as administrator.

Arctic's Next Voyage.

Ottawa, July 10.—Two mates and ten sailors have arrived from Newfoundland to go with the Arctic to Hudson Bay and northern water. It is expected that Capt. Bernier will leave with the Arctic about Saturday next.

PRESTON 15 AHEAD.

Mr. Justice Teetzel Orders Other Side to Start Count.

Port Arthur, July 11.—The scrutiny into the ballots in the Port Arthur and Rainy River election trial was adjourned at noon, to be resumed in Toronto on the 28th, when argument will be heard as to the rights of the court to scrutinize ballots cast by aliens and under-age voters. Justice Teetzel was not clear on this point and would not proceed until it had been cleared.

At the adjournment Mr. Preston had succeeded in striking off twenty-six ballots polled for Mr. Kennedy, thus giving him (Preston) a majority of fifteen. At this stage the justice ordered that Mr. Kennedy proceed with his case, as there was no use continuing to pile up a majority for Preston. If Kennedy succeeds in affecting the majority secured by Preston, the latter will be allowed to go on again.

Memorial Service.

London, July 11.—A memorial service for the Canadian and American victims of the Salisbury railroad disaster of July 1, took place in St. Paul's Cathedral yesterday in the presence of a large congregation, including many celebrities. The service, which was fully choral, was conducted by the Dean of St. Paul's, assisted by Archdeacon Sinclair.

Still Cashing Bad Cheques.

Ottawa, July 11.—Thomas Corcoran, the clerk in the Marine and Fisheries Department, who disappeared on May 24, having stolen a cheque book from the department, forging the name of the accountant and chief clerk, and obtaining $160, is alleged to have passed more of the cheques in New York.

The Scented Court.

"The scented court" was the name by which the court of Louis XV. was known throughout Europe, on account of the rage for perfumes which then prevailed in France. The expenditure of Mme. de Pompadour for this one branch of her toilet amounted to $100,000 annually. It became the fashion for the host or hostess of a great entertainment to signalize to their guests what particular perfume was to be employed for scenting their rooms on the night for which the invitations were issued, and they were expected to use no other, so that the delicate effect of a unity of odors might be produced. At court a different perfume was presented for each day of the week.

Three Die in A Collision.

Dozen Italians Are Hurt In Railway Wreck At Galt.

Seventh and Worst Wreck at "Calamity Curve" on the C. P. R.—Ballast Train Backed Into a Pile-Driver Near the Bridge Where There Is a Sharp Curve and a Steep Grade—Mrs. Dietrich's Splendid Service.

Galt, Ont., July 11.—As a result of a collision on the C. P. R. at noon yesterday, three men lost their lives, V. Nicolo and F. Favello, Italians, and Samuel Muma, a Scotchman, of Innerkip, foreman of the gang of 50 navvies, of whom the dead men were members.

About a dozen other Italians were hurt.

The accident was caused by a ballast train backing into a pile-driver on the track, at work near the bridge. The injured are in the hospital. An inquest will be held to-day.

The accident is the seventh, and perhaps, the worst that has occurred at this point on the road, a sharp curve with a steep grade. The spot has aptly been termed "calamity curve."

The wrecking train from Toronto cleared the track before 6 o'clock.

The wreck occurred near the home of Mrs. Dietrich, who showed herself possessed of unusual nerve and presence of mind under trying circumstances. She telephoned for doctors and for priests to minister to the injured Italians and performed splendid service in personally attending to the wounded.

Chamberlain's Noble Sentiments.

The Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, who has now reached his seventieth birthday, has lost none of his intellectual vigor, nor desire for a closer union of the different portions of the Empire His speech delivered at the inaugural dinner of the 1900 Club at the Savoy Hotel, London, on the 25th of June last, proves this.

After discussing the Educational Bill now before the Commons, he said, "We are not called upon at this "moment to press for fiscal reform; "no practical result would come "from a discussion in the House of "Commons; but we are all committed to it. (Cheers). When we "return to power we bring our "policy with us."

What a contrast is this sentiment when compared with the mongrel Liberal party of Canada, who agitated the country for nearly a quarter of a century, advocating a fiscal policy, and, the moment they attain power, abandon every semblance of it.

Continuing he gave utterance to sentiments which should find an echo in the heart of every man who desires the continuance and maintenance of British power and influence in the world:

"And my lords and gentlemen," said Mr. Chamberlain, "with fiscal reform remember, we bring preference also. (Cheers). That indeed is not the least important part of our constructive work. Our cause has suffered in the last few days the greatest loss which it has met with since it was propounded, in the death of Mr. Seddon—a really noble-minded man in his devotion to the welfare of the empire. Mr. Seddon's last words in dealing with this subject are indeed his legacy to the empire that he loved. He died almost in harness; he overworked himself, and his last task was to establish closer relations between his own colony and the great Commonwealth of Australia I know that he was disappointed if not discouraged by the result of the recent election insofar as it affected the progress of these fiscal arrangements of which he was so strong an advocate. But feeling as he did for the moment it was useless to press the case of the empire and the case of the colonies upon the present government, he turned to the colonies, and he was engaged in endeavoring to secure an intercolonial preference based on this principle of reciprocity. And is it not significant, is it not strange, that the present under-secretary of state for the colonies, while maintaining strenuous opposition to anything in the nature of our proposals, nevertheless was good enough, in a letter which was recently published, to patronize the colonies in their endeavor to do for themselves what we apparently refused to do with them? For the colonies to meet together to devise treaties of intercolonial commerce, to make this great step towards the union of the empire—that is a step which has Mr. Churchill's approval But why is the motherland to be left out? (Cheers.) And when this work has been accomplished, as I hope it may be, and I believe it will be; when the colonies have led where we ought to have led, do you suppose that it will be left there, and that our people will allow us to be, as it were, exiles from our own empire? No, my lords and gentlemen, we must follow where our children teach us the way (Cheers.)

"Now our duty remains. It is a great and inspiring duty, it is the work of this generation, of the early part of the present century: it is thrown upon us who have without labor of our own received from our ancestors an empire such as the world has never before dreamt of; it is thrown upon us to maintain it and strengthen it. I say that upon no party, no nation, there has ever been in the history of the world so great an opportunity, so weighty a responsibility, and I pray that we may be worthy of it. (Loud cheers.)

TIMELY TOPICS.

All the world and his wife were down at the park last night. The weekly band concert is a popular institution in Belleville.

• • •

That ceiling on the band stand didn't seem to make much difference last night. One could hear the band all over the city. It is probably not so much a question of ceiling, as a question of wind.

• • •

In the Peterboro schools 169 pupils wrote in the entrance exams, and 105 were successful — nearly two-thirds. When these figures were quoted to local school teachers they winked the other eye. It was strange, they thought, that Peterboro pupils did so well while the pupils of all other places found the papers unusually tricky. They must have excessively bright youngsters in Peterboro.

• • •

"I am glad," said a citizen, that the Council has decided to build a tar macadam walk at last. In other places, as cheap walks, they are unsurpassed."

• • •

Talking of cheap and clean walks, Ald. Sinclair the other evening told of the walks he had seen in Wolfville, N. S. They were sanded gravel, and every one who walked on them was loud in their praise.

• • •

Belleville could have gravel walks if some of our city employes worked as do the city employees of other places, where they are supposed to obey orders, not interpret them to suit themselves. We heard a lot about the gravel on Zwick's island when that beautiful spot was purchased, but since then nothing but crushed stone has come from there. Everybody knows that crushed stone is as far different from screened gravel as chalk is from cheese. The former makes an abominable walk, the latter an ideal one.

• • •

A New York yellow journal has the sublime nerve to throw across a whole page of tommyrot the question, "Why are American women the most beautiful that ever lived?" The answer, as a Guelph paper points out is simple; "They are not."

• • •

This beautiful year 1906 will go down in history as the year when things were likely to happen and didn't. There was the sewerage system, and Front St. paving, and the Zwick's island filtering scheme — all now classed with the might-have-beens. But cheer up, the city clock keeps time once in a while, anyhow.

• • •

Sing ho! the merry holiday
Did you go out upon the bay?
Or in the fields among the hay?
Or stay at home so blythe and gay
And run the lawn mower?

• • •

Here's rank heresy, from the Montreal Gazette; "A dislike for whiskey never made a man honest, though some people consider it a satisfactory test."

• • •

Grit papers one and all "deplore" the dismissal of Mr. Bastedo. But they never dropped a tear for many a good official who was ousted by the Laurier Government for nothing else than because he happened to be a Conservative. The Bastedo case seems to be fairly well covered by the following, from the Toronto News; "Mr. Bastedo is a victim of the methods of the politicians from whom he received his appointment." Nuff sed.

• • •

Toronto Star; Sir Mackenzie Bowell would draw the ties that bind us to England still tighter. All right, Sir Mackenzie, but you must promise to stop when we show signs of getting black in the face.

The only ties that appeal to the Star and its ilk are G. T. P. ties.

The Kingston City Council defeated a proposal to grant $200 towards the coming Old Boys' reunion. The Mayor said that personally he would contribute towards the matter, but the city's money was urgently needed for sidewalk and street repairing. It would be a good thing if other places, besides Kingston were not quite so ready to vote grants to everybody who asks for them.

"Here's an example of devotion. A widow saves up for ten years after her husband's death and then puts up a magnificent monument to him, though it takes all her money."

"Bet ten dollars she did it to spite her second husband."

Time to begin to shine up, good people The Toronto old boys will be here in ten days.

They are having a log rolling competition in the harbor this afternoon, and if politicians were not barred it would be like finding money for Mr. Jerry Hurley.

The corporation weed cutter is at work to-day, but the corporation expense cutter, many people appear to think, has been enjoying a holiday for these many years past.

Offering a reward for the conviction of people who mutilate granolithic walks under construction is a move in the right direction. Some young imps, it is said, have lately caused much damage by acts of vandalism in this regard. Talking on this matter with an alderman, it was suggested that the reward might be made to include cases of mutilation of walks already constructed — those, for instance, which have been chopped and defaced by many parties in winter time.

"Oh!" said the alderman, "there is a by-law covering that already."

And the newspaper man was so surprised to hear it that he forgot to ask why it wasn't enforced,

A Canadian woman has just died from using headache powders, but, judging by the following from the Buffalo Express, they must use worse than headache powders in Yankeeland;

"Great good could be done by incorporating into law the suggestion made at the meeting of the New York State Pharmaceutical Association that cocaine and morphine be sold on prescription only and that a prescription be used but once And a great deal more good could be done by all druggists living up to such a law."

A dog rushed into a school yard in Chicago and bit several children. It was probably trying to drive them away, knowing well that the month of July is no time for children to be at school.

A Cedar Rapids (Ia.) man dropped dead while a palmist was examining one of his hands. If he had only waited a few minutes he would have learned that he was to live for many years, become very rich and take a trip to Europe.

• • •

The man on the next block dropped in for a chat this morning, and he looked very glum, indeed. His eyes put one in mind of the slang expression, "two burnt holes in a blanket." Asked what caused him to be in such a used-up condition, he replied that he lived beside a fellow, who always got up early in the morning to do any work that was to be done about his premises. This morning he started to cut his lawn at 4.30 o'clock, and the machine kept up a clatter until near seven o'clock, by which time carts began to hustle past and made more sleep entirely out of the question Only a few days ago the same neighbor was abroad at dawn with a hammer. He pounded a fence until a man up the street put his head out of the window and beseeched him to be quiet. To his credit he stopped hammering, but he may be up some day next week just as early beating a carpet. Life wears rather a blue aspect for the man on the next block when he thinks of his early-rising neighbors.

• • •

Things were pretty quiet on our main aisle this afternoon.

• • •

By the way people were going down to the wharf, there must be a lot of our citizens on the water to-day, if not on the water wagon.

• • •

We hope that the new Sunday bill is not so bad as a member of Parliament indicates when he says; "The Sunday bill as it now stands sanctions the doing of everything on Sunday except the holding of a prayer meeting."

The Largest Jack Manufacturer in the World Writes about

Zutoo

Regarding your Zutoo Tablets I beg to say: I have been a sufferer from headache since childhood and have used all, or nearly all, of the so-called "cures" on the market, till warned by my physician to discontinue their use on account of their bad effects on the heart. Some months since my attention was called to your Zutoo Tablets and I have been using them ever since with the most gratifying results. I find they cure a "sick" or "nervous" headache in a few minutes and leave no bad effect. My family use them whenever needed with equally good results. I have frequently given them to friends who were suffering from headache and they never fail to give quick relief. I find them a good remedy for "sour" stomach as well as headache. I always carry them in my grip on the road and would not be without them at any cost.

WITTY AND SCHOLARLY EPISTLE FROM PROFESSOR DENYS, WHO, IN THE BLUE LAURENTIANS, IS COMMUNING WITH NATURE AND POLISHING HIS PHILOSOPHY.

To the Editor of The Intelligencer;

Dear Mr. Editor,—I should be an ingrate if, after laying aside the staff wherewith, accompanied by Nero, my dog, climbing the crowning cliff of our adjacent hills was done, I failed to give thought to friends whose many deeds of regard have long since inspired pleasing recollection. In absence the simplest message has the eloquence of an ambassador. It tells of remembrance and affection, worthy attributes in this intense world. It has been said that men of merit can seize an ordinary occasion and make it great. This sounds nice, though I doubt if the task is as facile as said. I always felt sorry for the little lad who, after his first attempt at composition, was informed by his teacher that he had neither subject nor style, nor anything much at the beginning, the end or in the middle. Such sweeping criticism is disheartening to young and old. But, here on this craggy steep, away from the multitude, with the bright blue heavens above, the green valley at my feet and that impressive silence solitude imparts, am I sure the hour is not pulsating with prime opportunity for friendly converse. Whilst Venice slept, the boy Galileo, from the tower of St. Mark's, was discovering the four satellites of Jupiter and noting the phases of Venus. I am glad I am not here exactly to enrich science, and I am positive Jupiter is glad also. To interpret the mysteries of heavenly bodies is no mean occupation, and hence from the mighty realms of Omnipotence which we are content to behold on bended knees, we turn our eyes to earth made by the same master hand. It may then not be quite abusing transition to thus pass from the glory of the Madicean stars to the opulence of my mountains, the glittering streams and the verdant fields that, for miles, stretch their smiling surface beneath my gaze. And having now safely returned to our own planet, I feel more at home to pursue our holiday chit-chat. Nero, too, I judge from his dancing eyes, is exultant. I took him with me from a motive—must I confess—not altogether unselfish. As sturdy of form as he is fair of face, designing dogs who would so forget themselves as to even suspect our meek mien and push their investigations beyond the justifiable limit, would find in him a canine who does things. He, however, is liked by bow-wows of good standing and, on general principles, favors quiet. When, from this sylvan retreat, I think of the heat which during the past month, in crowded centres, was so comfort-destroying, I gave thanks our taste inclined persistently towards country life. The more simple our wants, says a sage, the nearer we are to the gods. Without claiming all that this implies, there is a calm and freshness and peace in these rural havens of repose you would vainly seek elsewhere. Here, no need for perpetual attention to toilet. In well nigh Edenic attire you can in one of these shady nooks—God's first temples—leisurely wait for the sun's piercing rays to relent and the earth to cool. If you love nature, the dewy fragrance of the woodland, the trembling leaf, the twittering birds and even the shrill lay of the grasshopper will appeal to your reflective sense. This last little artist, be it said en passant, makes not music with its mouth as we once thought, but with his hind legs, which he draws up and down against the edges of his wings, whose covers serve as strings. Again, down yonder, rambling knee deep in white clover, may be seen prosperous herds of cattle. One head of these, a fine mooley cow, with placid countenance, was proudly introduced to us as having an authentic record for giving its weight in milk twice a month. Her youthful offspring also proved a peerless specimen of its dynasty. Not less interesting are the close-clipped, cool-looking, motherly ewes, with their little black, bleating lambs, whose innocent antics between meals—for which there seems to be no set hours—cannot but amuse one. And now with twilight stealing on the horizon, we, too, must soon seek our repast, which ever is a joy, for our cook, like Caesar, excels in everything, an advantage the princely "Quinte" has especially trained us to value. With heartiest good wishes to you, Mr. Editor, and trusting, in the words of one immortal author, that I have not been "cramming a gluttony of words into your ears against the stomach of your sense." I am ever,

Yours very truly,

PAUL DENYS.

NATURE SPARES

The Stricken Rose From Grief.

What a fortunate provision of nature it is, that deprives the rose of mental suffering; for how poignant would be its grief to discover, in the height of its blooming glory, that a canker fed at its heart, and that its beauty and fragrance were doomed forever. Nature always spares the suffering; she is a veritable storehouse of pleasing rewards, for those who seek her aid. In the years gone by falling hair and grayness have cast a gloom over the lives of thousands of young women, but thanks to the investigations of scientists the true cause of hair destruction is now known to be a germ or parasite that burrows into the hair follicles. Newbro's Herpicide absolutely destroys this germ, thus permitting the hair to grow as nature intended.

Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

SALE OF STAMPS.

NEW PLAN ADOPTED BY THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL.

Ottawa, July 9.—Hon. Mr. Lemieux has promptly taken up and dealt with the question of the sale of stamps. He has given authority to a plan to extend the facilities under which postage stamps may be obtained by the public. In addition to the present method of licensing, a plan of permits will be adopted. This will consist of a simple card giving authority to sell stamps under practically the same conditions as now exist, except that no commission will be allowed, and that the permit holder or his representative will not be obliged to purchase his stamp supplies exclusively from the local postmaster. The supplies in cities, will be procured from the local postmaster sub-postmasters and licensed vendors in the post office, but not from other licensed vendors. As to other centres of population where stamp licenses are held, the permit holder may purchase stamps in the usual way from his local postmaster. In such case the local postmaster may grant a permit to any reputable merchant, where it can be shown that it would afford a measure of convenience. The new plan will not necessarily supplant the present one, although most smaller vendors may prefer it because of the simplicity of its requirements.

Young Irish Lad Has Sad Experience.

FOUND HIS MOTHER IN MONTREAL MORGUE UPON ARRIVAL IN THAT CITY.

Montreal, July 10.—Patrick Duffy, an Irish youth of fourteen years, arrived in Montreal a few days ago, hoping to join his mother, who had preceded him to this country. The two, mother and son, were the only living members of their family, and so the mother decided to come to Canada and prepare the way. That was five years ago, when her boy was but nine years old. Not until recently was it possible for Patrick to leave his native land, but at last the wherewithal came. The lad arrived here, buoyant and full of hope, but his mother was not at the place to which he had been directed. Then began a search. Traces led to the city morgue, and there the boy found the features that he knew so well awaiting identification. The woman had died suddenly while at work scrubbing, trying to make up for the dollars that had been sent to pay her son's passage.

A Cooper Wedding.

ELLIOTT—BLAIR.

A very pretty wedding took place on Wednesday evening, June 20th, at the home of Mr. Hugh M. Blair, Cooper, when his daughter, Blanche, was united in marriage to Mr. John Elliott. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. J. A. Connell on the lawn in the presence of about one hundred and twenty-five of their relatives and friends. Miss Kathleen McCoy played the Wedding March. The bride, dressed in white silk, wearing a bridal veil artistically arranged, and carrying bridal roses, looked particularly charming. She was supported by her sister, Miss Mabel Blair, of Toronto, who was dressed in dainty white embroidery. The bride's brother, Master Jack, acting as page, and her little cousin, Jennie Blair, as flower girl, looked very sweet in their snow-white attire. The groom was supported by Mr. Sydmer Bird, of Thurlow.

The tables, prepared on the lawn, were very prettily decorated with bunting and evergreen and illuminated with Chinese lanterns. The novelty of this feature added much to the enjoyment of the guests.

The presents were numerous and costly, the groom's gift to the bride being a beautiful pearl brooch, to the bridesmaid a gold ring with pearl settings, to the groomsman a gold pin and to the little page and flower girl pretty little rings.

The happy couple left for a visit to Toronto, Buffalo and other western points.

While it may be just and right that a man should be humiliated, no right feeling man will rejoice at it.

Talk about public speakers mesmerizing people. The greatest is the mesmerism of plain truth plainly and earnestly told.

Abbey's Salt is regularly ordered by physicians in place of Citrate of Magnesia, Seidlitz Powders, Epsom Salts, Liver Pills and Mineral Waters.

The medical profession at large recognizes the fact that Abbey's Salt is not only the ideal laxative and cure for Constipation, but is also a perfect tonic to purify the blood—correct stomach, liver and kidney troubles—and invigorate the whole system.

THE TEST.

(Houston Post.

If you'd a million dollars,
  And I had thirty cents,
    We'd get together
    In any kind of weather,
You in gem studded collars,
  Me in my rags and rents;
If you'd a million dollars
  And I had thirty cents.

If I'd a little cottage,
  And you a mansion grand,
    Love ne'er could span the spaces
    Betwixt our hearts and places,
If I ate humble pottage
  And you the rich viand;
If I'd a little cottage
  And you a mansion grand.

If you were fond of revel,
  And I were fond of books,
    We'd doubtless stay asunder,
    For love would be a blunder;
'Twould irk me, on the level,
  To have to govern cooks;
If you were fond of revel
  And I were fond of books.

But since you have no "mun" now,
  And I'm as poor as you,
    We'll try in the wee cottage
    And eke with humble pottage,
If what will do for one now
  Won't also do for two;
Since you, dear, have no "mun" now
  And I'm as poor as you.

Mr. W. J. Bryan, in taking the stand that the Democratic convention, when it meets two years hence, must be left free to select the best candidate available, has taken the surest means of promoting his own candidature. It seems altogether likely that his nomination by State convention will now go on more rapidly than ever.

A correspondent writes to enquire whether James J. Hill, the great American railway magnate, is not a Canadian by birth. We are not sure whether he was born in Canada or Ireland, for his parents were Irish, but it is generally accepted that he first saw the light in the province of Ontario. It is positively certain, however, that he knew no other country than Canada until he was sixteen years of age.

Both the United States Senate and the House of Representatives have surrendered to the Beef Trust, and the bill has now passed into law in the exact shape the packers insisted upon—that is, the government, and not the traffic, must pay something like three million dollars a year for inspection fees to force the packers to obey the laws—and the packers are not compelled to affix dates to the labels of cans.

The failures in the Dominion during the first six months of this year, are reported by the Dun Company as 632 in number, with assets of $3,465,335, and liabilities of $5,214,975, or average individual assets of $5,485, and $8,257 liabilities. This compares with 627 failures for the corresponding months last year, with assets of $3,014,208, and liabilities of $4,506,945; or average assets per individual failure of $4,807, and liabilities of $7,219. Real estate and brokerage failures in province of Ontario account for more than half the increase over last year's losses; while manufacturing losses in this province account for over a million of increase in liabilities. Trading insolvencies show, on the other hand, an improvement all round, both as to number and liabilities.

It is not often that litigation over wills involving eighteen millions sterling arises, even in America, much less in Europe. A case of the kind has just been decided in Paris. It concerns the estate of Mr. Singer, the great sewing-machine manufacturer, to whose widow and six children the colossal sum named was bequeathed. Mrs. Singer, with such a goodly estate as one-seventh part of eighteen millions in her own right, successfully sailed through two subsequent marriages before herself paying the debt of Nature in 1904. when she bequeathed the whole of her share to her third husband. Naturally her children felt averse to such a disposition of the family property and as it included more than 8,000 £20 shares in the Singer Company, to which was attached a non-negotiable condition, they invoked French law. The judges seem to have found some difficulty in giving any absolute decision and urge compromise.

Love's Young Dream.

She was waiting for him at the door when he returned home from business, and he clasped her in his arms. The honeymoon was over, and they had been just three weeks in their new flat. Her delicious dinners had not yet proved all that he had hoped for, but he was good natured about it because their servant was little more than a girl. The bride was looking after the cooking herself.

"Oh, Dick," she said as she took his hat, coat and bundle of newspapers, "I've had such a delightful day! Florence has been here, and she was delighted with our cozy corner, as she called it. Then we went out shopping together, and I've the loveliest"—

"Yes, yes, dear," he said, "but you can tell me all about it at dinner. I'm a little hungrier than usual tonight, and—why, what's the matter?"

"Dick," she tremblingly said, "I've"—

"There, never mind, dear, if you have spent a little more money than you should have done. We'll make it up somehow."

"But, Dick, I've let the girl out for the evening, and"—

"Oh, never mind the girl. We'll wait on ourselves, and I'll help you to wash the dishes. There now."

"But, Dick, dear, I've been so busy I've forgotten the dinner."—London Tit-Bits.

The Nazareth of Today.

Nazareth, where Jesus spent his boyhood, calls to mind a picture of a hazy, half mystical village of the far east. The Palestine of today is a network of railroads and telegraph wires. Modern hotels with elevators and bell boys now occupy sacred places of history. Cafes stand where once the hosts of Israel fought, contending with chariots and horsemen. The awkward camel back is transplanted by the compartment car. One would look in vain for the hospitable villager standing at the door of his humble flat roofed home. Tall, slanting roofed buildings predominate, with fresh red tiles imported from France. In a prominent place on the brow of a hill stands the English orphanage, which provides for the education of the orphans of Palestine. English and Arabic are taught here as well as housekeeping and needlework. A telegraph station, with an Armenian operator in citizen's dress, keeps Nazareth in touch with the world.

Quieted the Barber.

A distinguished senator from the northwest strolled into the barber shop in the senate wing one day for a shave. The chairs were all occupied. The statesman, seeing this, started to go out, with the idea of returning a little later, but the head barber of the tonsorial parlor sought to detain the senator. He called after him in a rather strident tone:

"You're the next, senator!"

The northwestern senator wheeled about, assuming a sad smile, placed a hand over his fast pulsating heart as though the throbbing there pained him and said to the head barber.

"Be good enough not to remind me of that any oftener than you can help. I understand fully that I am tabbed, but permit me to enjoy what peace I may until the blow falls."

And the occupants of the chairs chuckled under their soapy masks.

Tropical Skies.

To northern eyes the intense brilliancy of the tropical and semitropical sky comes as a revelation. Sometimes at noon it is painfully dazzling, but the evening is a vision of prismatic light holding carnival in the air, wherein Milton's "twilight gray" has no part. Unless the sky is held in the relentless grip of a winter storm the orient holds no gray in its evening tones; these are translucent and glowing from the setting of the sun until the stars appear. In Greece we are dreamers in that subtle atmosphere, and in Egypt visionaries under the spell of an ethereal loveliness where the filigree patterning of white dome and minaret and interlacing palm and feathery pepper tree leaves little wonder in the mind that the ornamentation of their architecture is so ravishing in its tracery.—Century.

Dearer.

"George," murmured the young wife, "am I as dear to you as I was before we married?"

"I can't exactly tell," replied the husband absentmindedly. "I didn't keep any account of my expenses then."

We must be sure to give due weight to the good side of every event that has two sides.—Eliot.

LITTLE BELL BIOGRAPHIES

Liszt

FRANZ LISZT, born 1811, died 1886, was the first of those great pianists of the 19th century, which, after himself, produced such brilliant stars as Rubinstein and Paderewski. Though he was an eminent composer and conductor, he will be remembered as the first representative of the modern style of piano playing and the greatest yet in his art.

Like Mozart and Beethoven, he was early placed under a teacher, so that by the time he was nine years old he played wonderfully the most difficult music, even extemporizing correctly upon airs suggested by his audiences. Soon after his 25th year he made concert tours over Europe and was for many years the idol of the musical world. About 1850 he wholly gave up concert performances for conducting. Finally in 1868 he devoted himself to teaching and composition. As piano pieces for display of brilliant technic his "Hungarian Rhapsodies," especially No. 2, are unequalled by any other composer.

It was Liszt who first showed the world the marvellous possibilities of the modern piano. If it had not been for his improvements in fingering and other matters, the brilliant technic, expressive shading, orchestral effects in piano playing would have been impossible. It was his work that stimulated manufacturers to vie with one another until it was possible to give to the world so finished an instrument as which in every regard, mechanical and tonal, is The Perfect Concert Piano.

STRICTURE AND KIDNEY DISEASE CURED.

G. E. WRIGHT.

"I had stricture for eleven years. It finally brought on Bright's Disease of the Kidneys. I had an uncomfortable shooting pain in the groin and feeling as though something was in the urethra. My back was weak and I could scarcely stoop over. Urine was full of sediment. Had a desire to urinate frequently. Family doctors, so-called specialists, patent medicines, electric belts, all failed. I was discouraged. I had spent hundreds of dollars in vain. Finally I consulted Drs. Kennedy & Kergan as the last resort. I had heard a great deal about them and concluded from the fact that they had been established over 25 years that they understood their business. I am delighted with the results. In one week I felt better and in a few weeks was entirely cured. Have gained sixteen pounds in weight."

HAMLIN GARLAND

COPYRIGHT. 1905. BY HAMLIN GARLAND

Raymond's motive in thrusting them out appeared more and more a deed to win applause. It lowered him, made him less admirable in every way, and when he spoke to her she withdrew into herself with a glance which chilled and depressed him.

"Of course his character is of no consequence to me," she thought, "except in so far as he is likely to influence Louis." The situation suddenly lost its spirit of comedy and took on a very serious cast. The plan of leaving a sensitive, poetic boy to the company and influence of men like these became questionable, even dangerous. Baker was a foolish and stupid person, and these rough riders troubled her; but Raymond, to whom the boy's eyes already turned with fervent admiration, was more corrupting still, for whatever weaknesses he might have would surely come to be active and vital forces in debasing others. The whole design, in the light of this encounter, assumed the face of folly.

The powerful young rancher, a mixture of barbarism and culture, engrossed her quite as a mountain lion might have done. His action could not be foretold, and she was amazed to find herself carried entirely outside herself, shaken and dismayed. As he set to work to put the table in order, silent and sullen as before, she watched him from her corner with intent gaze. "How deeply can I trust him?" she asked herself. "Don admires him, and he certainly is a man of intelligence."

Louis, who had gone to see the sunset, called to her excitedly, and as she stepped outside the door she, too, caught her breath in wonder and admiration.

She turned to the dim purple range, crumpled into ridges and slashed with deep valleys. "They may be alluring to you, laddie, but they scare me—a little. Well, perhaps you'll be able to go and see what they are like by and by, when you are stronger."

"Perhaps Rob will take me. I would not be afraid of anything with him. He's a splendid type. Don't you think so?"

Ann smiled, but answered doubtfully, "He seems a fine resolute fellow." Her sisterly anxiety reappeared. "But I don't like to leave you here, Buddie. These men, the best of them, seem rough and reckless. I think you'd better go back with me—really I do."

"Oh, no! I'm all right here, sis. Rob will look after me. It's just what I need."

"Maybe it is for the best, but I have a feeling that something is going to happen to you. I don't like to go back without you. I'll stay on a day or two longer anyhow. I want to find out more about conditions here. I have a queer feeling at my heart. I don't want to leave you. Let us go in."

A kerosene lamp stood among the dishes, and the driver of their team and two late coming horsemen and the Mexican boy were all eating together. Raymond was not to be seen, and Ann realized, with a pang of dismay, how wholly she was depending upon him. "Without him I shall be scared," she admitted to herself. The other men paid very little direct attention to her beyond a moment's awkward pause and a lowering of their voices. They continued to discuss the fire and their day's work. It was plain that they were of different temper from the crowd Raymond had thrown from the door, and yet they were not prepossessing.

The liveryman, a short, dirty and very assertive man of small wit, was maintaining himself against one of the riders in an argument. "I punched cattle all over them hills," he was saying. "I know it's all another fake like that old Mount Horeb business in '70. It's nothin' but a cattle range—a lot o' smooth hills"—

"But they've found the gold. They can't be no question about it now. I've got a brother up there, and he writes me"—

"They told the same kind o' yarns about Horeb, and see how it turned out. They ain't an ounce o' gold in this whole Rampart range. It ain't the right kind o' formation."

"Well, I'm goin' up there anyhow," said Baker, "as soon as Barnett can fill my place."

"So am I," said one of the other cowboys, a dark, smileless fellow nearly forty years of age.

"They're talking about Sky camp," whispered Louis, "the new mining town."

The talk among the men shifted again to a discussion of the fire. "I hope Bob won't order us out to fight it tonight. I'm tired as a dog," said one of the men.

"The way I put it up is this," bleated the liveryman: "That fire started from somebody campin' over on Birch creek, and it's 'way beyond the ridge. It's got to cross that rocky wash before it can do any damage."

"Well, we'll know when Rob gets back," replied Baker, and Ann inferred from this that Raymond had ridden away to locate the fire, and heartily hoped he would not be gone long.

The men shoved back one by one and with sly, curious glances at the girl, sitting so cold and white and still against the wall, went out to smoke and discuss her with the driver. Baker, mindful of his duties, remained. "Don't be uneasy, miss. One of us will stay here anyhow."

Louis was looking over his sketching material, his mind busy with plans for work, when a shout outside announced Raymond's return. The lad rushed to the door. "Oh, Ann, come quick!" he called, a moment later. "Here he comes! Oh, can't he ride!"

Ann reached the door just as Raymond dashed up and swung from his saddle. His voice was not loud, but it was stirring. "Boys, the fire is climbing the ridge, and we've got to fight it. Gather up your blankets and gunny sacks. We'll find Williams over there with some water barrels. Hustle now! I'll be along a little later. Tom, you take charge till I come."

With groans and half jocular curses the weary men, loyal to their duty, scattered to rope fresh ponies and gather up such material as they had for fighting flame, while Raymond came to the door and brusquely said to Ann: "I'll leave Baker to look after you, Miss Rupert. I hope you won't mind."

"Oh, certainly not," said Ann as firmly as she could.

"I'd like to go along!" cried Louis. "May I?"

"You're needed right here," Raymond sternly replied. "We're likely to be out all night, and your sister needs you."

"Couldn't Baker go in your place?" asked Ann very quietly.

"Jack isn't very energetic. No; it's my duty."

"That's why I'd rather you stayed," Ann said. "If we should be attacked by Indians or anything, Mr. Baker might be asleep."

He laughed. "Indians! There aren't any within 200 miles of here."

"But you said you'd take care of us, and Mr. Barnett has consigned us to your care."

He warmed beneath the allurement of her glance. "But how would it look for the boss to remain comfortably at home while a fire"—

"You're not the boss. You're only the cook."

His face lighted up. "True enough." After a moment's hesitation he added: "Very well, consider me your protector and cook. Baker is in for it." And he went away filled with a delicious sense of having suddenly been honored above his desert.

Ann was accustomed to men who flew to do her bidding, but this instant victory over the big rancher pleased her unaccountably, and she laughed softly, acknowledging a glow of confidence and relief in the promise of his presence.

Out by the corrals the trampling and snorting of excited ponies could be heard mingled with the muttered oaths of the men as they hurriedly roped and saddled. The sky was darkening rapidly, and the pillar of smoke already glowed like a brazen tower. It rose straight into the air for hundreds of feet, then spread away into a long, level cloud, showing that the wind had not yet begun to fan the flame.

At last the men were all mounted and, with a final command from the boss, spurred away into the gloom, complaining, weary, but faithful. Raymond felt a little foolish as he faced the liveryman from Wallace.

"No, I'm not going—at least not until I get Barnett's people fixed for the night. You'll have to bunk in the tool shed, I reckon."

"That's all right. I'll curl down close to my team. I don't want to run any risks with a lot of toughs like that Williams gang cavortin' around. They had just liquor enough aboard to make 'em reckless. I'd advise you to look out for old Turkey Egg there. He has it in for you."

Raymond was unimpressed. "They're halfway to Wallace by this time, and, besides, Speck is a big bluff anyway. We're rid of him forever."

"Well, all is, when you meet him next you pull first," the little man replied very seriously.

Raymond walked slowly toward the house, filled with a guilty joy. Instead of a night of hard riding and laborious wet bag swinging he had given himself the pleasure of sitting in conversation with a beautiful and cultured girl. "I haven't earned this," he admitted. "I don't deserve it. It's too good to be true, but Barnett will approve. Anyhow, I'm going to enjoy it while I can."

Nevertheless, this sense of being a sneak and a cheat threw over him a gloomy and preoccupied air which vexed Ann, who began to question him very much as she would have done had she discovered unusual powers in her coachman. "How do you happen to be out here, Mr. Raymond?"

"SWISS FOOD"

He replied bluntly: "I don't know. I came here six years ago because I hadn't any trade and the cattle business was attractive, and I've been here ever since."

"But you are wasting your time and talents."

For a moment he meditated a jocular reply, but at last gravely said: "I know it. I've felt like a dough boy for some time, and—well, I'm just about decided to try my luck up at the big camp. I wish you would take a letter to Barnett and be sure that he reads it. I want him to send another man down here to take my place. But, see here, you're both tired and want to go to bed." He rose and lighted a second lamp. "Mrs. Barnett's bed is in this room"—he opened a door on the side opposite—"I'll see if it is prepared."

Ann interposed. "Oh, no! I'm not so helpless as that. Let me take the light. I will do very well, never fear."

He yielded to her. "I'll get you some water, and I hope there are some clean towels. Let me know if there is anything else I can do."

"You are very thoughtful."

"We try to keep that room ready, so that when the folks come down it will be tolerable."

"I'm quite sure it will do," she said definitely and entered the room.

Raymond turned to Louis. "Youngster, can you shoot?"

"Not very well."

"Learn. A man going round this country with a young woman wants to be prepared for war. He may never have any need of a gun, and then again, unexpected, he may. A gang of hoboes like that today is dangerous when they get to drinking, and it stands a man in hand"— He made a sign commanding silence.

Ann reappeared with a pitcher in her hand. "If you'll fill this for me?"

"With pleasure," he quickly replied. After filling it and placing it in her room, he asked: "Now, which bag is yours? I'll pass that in."

"This one. But where are you and Louis to sleep?"

"Right here." He caught at a sort of frame hung upon the wall. It fell and was transformed into a bunk. "Right here, close beside your door, I'll put the youngster. I'll not take much sleep tonight. The boys will need some hot coffee when they come in." He walked to the door and stood there looking away toward the fire. "I'm afraid they've an all night job of it. The mountain wind is springing up."

"If you really feel that you ought to go"— she began rather feebly.

"Would you feel safer if I stayed?" His voice possessed a note of tenderness as he asked this question. His tall form, outlined in the outer darkness, again appealed to her with power.

She hesitated. "I never was among—I mean I have never been separated from my kind in this way before. I am a city dweller, and, I confess, I am a little nervous."

"Then you'd like me to stay?" he insisted.

"Yes, I wish you would."

"Then I will do so. I'm sure Barnett will excuse me when he knows"—

Something—a whip, a pistol—snapped far out in the darkness, a little slapping sound, a puff of dust rose from Raymond's broad breast, and he put his hand to his heart with a quick, inward gasp of pain. "Oh!"

"What was that?" asked Ann.

He swayed back against the door frame, and a yellow white pallor came over his face. "Some one has touched me," he said slowly through his set teeth. "It's that cowardly hound Speck. Go call your driver. I'm shot." He tried to walk to a chair, but reeled and fell.

Ann's first impulse was toward laughter. It was so absurd, so melodramatic, so perfectly impossible. "He is trying to frighten us," she thought, looking down at him, but Louis ran out screaming for Watson.

Raymond partly rose and faced her. Big drops of agony sweat gleamed on his forehead. "It's no joke," he gasped, seeming to divine her feeling. "He's put it right through, just above my heart. Don't let me bleed to death," he ended, with guttural harshness, and began to tear at his coat in the effort to get it off. As he took away his hand and studied his palm, which was red with blood, Ann's heart grew sick with horror. Her limbs grew numb and weak. Then, as she watched him tearing feebly at his coat, the long dormant woman in her awoke. She ceased to tremble and fell on her knees beside him.

"Let me help you," she said, and her voice was calm and clear, her fingers firm. When his coat was off he sank again exhausted, breathing hard.

"Cut away my shirt—get at that hole and plug it," he commanded. "Anything that will fill it. You'll find some scissors there in that box—in the window."

His shirt was wet with blood, and yet the girl clipped it away with steady hands. He looked down at the wound and then smiled up to her. "I'm all right. It was a steel jacketed 30-30. It won't bleed much, and it's above my lung. I'll fool him yet."

The driver, wild of eye and much crumpled of hair, scrambled into the room. "Who did it? Who did it?"

"Never mind who did it. Plug this hole," commanded Raymond. "Bring some cold water and pour on it."

Ann saw that the driver's wits were too muddled to permit of proper action, and while her tense nerves quivered she bathed the wound, which was already ceasing to bleed.

"Turn me over, cap," called Raymond. "You'll find another vent on the other side."

Louis and the driver turned him gently on his face, and Ann was horrified to find an uglier wound than the other. Sick with horror as she was, she contrived to cut away the shirt and stanch the blood as before.

Raymond was recovering from the first shock of the wound, and, though his breathing was troubled, his mind was clear. "Now, Watson," he said to the driver, "spread some blankets under me, and then you go out to the corral and take my brown mare, with the saddle on, and slide out for Wallace and bring a doctor. Don't urge the mare—just let her take her gait—and don't ride her back. Leave her there."

After the driver had helped him to a bed on a blanket Raymond added, "Now I've got to be quiet and wait, that's all there is about it." He looked at Ann. "You can go to bed and sleep. Youngster, you're in for sentinel duty tonight"—

Ann interrupted him. "You must not talk, not another word! Lie perfectly still. We will keep cool bandages on your wound till the doctor comes."

He submitted to her directions and lay quiet, moving only to allow her to change the compress. Louis, when he knew what was needed, became almost as deft as Ann and relieved her of the painful task of replacing the bandages. But the powerful frame of the ranchman grew each moment more inert, and at last they could not dress the wound at his back.

CHAPTER V.

FOR a long time the silence remained unbroken except now and then when the girl bent over the silent figure to ask, "Can I do anything for you?" Each time she listened with added fear, hoping eagerly for his voice. "Oh, I wish we could do something," she whispered now and again to Louis.

The boy, worn out with his day's excitement, struggled manfully to keep awake, but as the night deepened slumber rose about him like a wreath of benumbing incense. His sense of what had taken place dulled, his head nodded and drooped, and at last Ann lowered him to the floor, where he slept, his cheek pillowed upon her feet.

Again the singularity of the chance, the absurd unreality of the situation, came upon the self contained girl, inciting her to a sort of hysterical laughter. Here now she sat—Ann Rupert, most conventional of persons—in a rude ranch house, alone with a strange, rough man sleeping in a deathlike trance before her.

The minutes elongated like bands of rubber, attaining the length of quarter hours, and the night stretched away into horrifying distance as she sat tensely waiting, hoping each moment for deliverance, expecting each instant to hear the swift beating of hoofs, the hoarse laughter of the men; but only the wind serpents hissed and the wolf howled.

"I'm shot." He tried to walk to a chair, but reeled.

At last immobility became intolerable, and, lowering Louis' head to the floor, she gently placed his doubled coat beneath it and with a mighty effort of the will bent again above the pallid man, so tragic in his supineness, and whispered:

"Are you still suffering? Can I do anything for you?"

He turned his head slowly and with a glance which made her shiver answered: "No; I have ceased to bleed. I am going to pull through if my pulse keeps down. Won't you take it?"

Timidly taking his brown wrist in her soft finger tips she tried to count the pulsing of his blood.

He waited a little time in silence, then said: "It's there, but it's weak. Don't you feel it?"

"Yes; it is more regular now," she answered.

"I'm not going to die," he continued in a hoarse, flat tone. "I could get up and mount a horse right now, only I'd bleed if I did. It's hard to keep quiet, but I'm going to do it. I can't afford to die now. You've roused me. There's something in the world for me to do."

"You must not talk," she whispered. "Please—it will do you harm."

She put her hand impulsively on his forehead as if he were a child, and he closed his eyes and lay in silence for several minutes. When she withdrew her palm he muttered: "Leave it there. It—is so cool and soft."

"Would you like a wet cloth on your head?"

"No—only your hand—if you don't mind"—

Her feeling toward him at the moment was like that she manifested toward her brother. "I don't mind, if it helps you," she answered, but a flush rose to her face.

Eggs—Firm, unchanged; receipts, 22,962.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Cables Unchanged—American Prices Are About Steady.

London, July 10.—Cattle are quoted at 10c to 11¼c per lb.; refrigerator beef, 8c to 8½c per lb.; sheep, dressed, 13½c to 16c per lb.

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

Toronto, July 10.—The receipts of live stock at the city cattle market were 53 car loads, composed of 779 cattle, 830 sheep and lambs, 345 hogs and 172 calves.

Exporters.

Few shipping cattle were offered and it was well that it was so, as there was little or no demand for them. Prices were easier and the top of the market was $5 per cwt. and that was for a small lot of five cattle, the best on the market. The ruling prices for exporters would be around $4.50 to $4.80 per cwt. Bulls sold at $3.50 to $4 per cwt.

Butchers.

The supply of butchers' cattle was not large, but quite equal to the demand. Trade for them was draggy, with a downward tendency in prices. Choice picked lots of prime cattle, and there were few of them, ranged around $4.60 to $4.70; loads of good, $4.30 to $4.50; fair to good, $4 to $4.25; common, rough steers, mixed with cows, $3.50 to $3.75; best butcher cows, $3.50 to $3.75; common cows and canners, $2.50 to $3.25 per cwt.

Feeders and Stockers.

Trade in feeders and stockers was slow, with a light demand. Prices were easy at the following quotations: good steers, 900 to 1050 lbs., at $4 to $4.25; good steers, 800 to 900 lbs., at $3.90 to $4.10; light stockers, $3.25 to $3.60; medium stockers, $3 to $3.25; common stockers, $2.75 to $3.

Milch Cows.

The number of milch cows and springers offered was not large, and generally of common to medium quality. The market for them was slow, as there were no outside buyers from a distance. Prices ranged from $20 to $52, but only three cows were reported at the latter price. The bulk sold from $30 to $45 each.

Veal Calves.

The receipts were not large and prices for them were firm at $4 to $6.50 per cwt. for the general run. The quality of the bulk was not what could be called good, too many being marketed before they were good enough to kill. Prime new milk fed calves are still worth $7 per cwt., but none of this class was reported.

Sheep and Lambs.

The run of sheep and lambs being light prices were a little firmer, the market having recovered from the larger deliveries of last week. Export sheep sold at $4 to $4.25 for the bulk, with prime lots, of which there were few, at $4.50 per cwt. Spring lambs sold at $6.50 to $7.25 per cwt., with a few prime lots at $7.50 per cwt.

Hogs.

Deliveries of hogs were light. Mr. Harris reported the market strong at $7.60 for the bulk of offerings, with a few prime lots of select bacon hogs at a little more. Lights and fats sold at 25c per cwt. lower.

EAST BUFFALO CATTLE MARKETS.

East Buffalo, July 10.—Cattle—Steady; prices unchanged.

Veals—Receipts, 100 head; slow and 25c lower; $4.50 to $7.50.

Odd.

Hicks—What do you think of that university making Dumley a doctor of laws? Wicks—Oh, well, the universities do very crazy things sometimes. Hicks—Yes, and yet they are always supposed to be in possession of their faculties.

THE COMPLEXION.

Use Discretion in the Selection of Lotions and Creams.

In caring for the complexion it is well to remember what may be good for one skin may prove injurious to another.

Glycerin, for example, agrees perfectly with some and burns others. Benzoin cannot be applied to some and soothes others, and so on.

That it why it is best for a woman to use discretion in the selection of her lotions and creams and also why one complains that such and such a cream brings pimples and blotches and, directly afterward another woman extols the identical article as having improved her skin wonderfully.

Many times it is the method rather than in the article itself that the difference lies. One woman will give her face the cleansing needed to relieve the congestion of the pores caused by the accumulation of dust and other particles that form blackheads. Then she will rub in the cream recommended, the result being a great improvement. The other woman will carelessly rub a wet cloth over the face and neck, leaving the grime all on. When the cream is applied it is exactly like a coat of paint over a dirty window or door frame. The dirt shows through and looks worse than before.

A BABY'S BED.

One That Is a Saver of Both Room and Trouble.

One of the sweetest little baby beds imaginable was made entirely by the newcomer's grandmother. First she took a good sized clothes basket made of the soft wide splints, but with firm edges. This was covered entirely with light blue paper cambric. Over this she put white dotted muslin, with a frill hanging over the outside and held close by a blue satin ribbon going all around the basket and tying in a bow at the side.

A large sofa pillow of fine curled hair was sacrificed for the mattress. This she picked over with great care, made a pretty little tick of blue and white striped wash goods and fitted the mattress into the basket. The tiny sheets were hemmed by hand and the soft little white blankets bound with blue satin ribon. There was also a blue and white knitted spread and a soft silk covered eiderdown comforter.

The handles of the basket were left free and bound closely with blue satin ribbon. Thus the little bed can be picked up and carried anywhere without a bit of trouble. In an apartment of moderate size such a scheme is well worth while, and it is a great convenience to be able to carry baby from room to room in his little bed so easily. —New York Press.

LAUNDRY LINES.

Bed linen and underclothes should be soaked in tepid water to which has been added some melted soap and some soap powder.

After putting colored clothes through the wringer rub the rollers with a cloth saturated in paraffin oil. That will remove all color from them.

Coffee and tea stains if rubbed with butter and afterward washed in hot soapsuds will come out, leaving the table linen quite white and fresh.

If starched clothes are very stiff when brought in from the line they will fold and get into shape with much less work if they are sprinkled and let lie in a heap for an hour or so before folding.

When the water is too muddy to whiten the clothes it can be cleared very quickly by stirring in a little cornmeal. The meal will go to the bottom as soon as it is thoroughly wet and will carry the soiled particles with it.

Some Unfortunate Mannerisms.

What old fashioned folk called "tricks" of speech or manner are deplorably easy to assume and extremely difficult to break off. Several to which girls are more or less prone are these: Repetition of a sentence or the point of a story, telling it over again almost in the same breath; the usage of "you know" or "don't you know" for emphasis and beginning a laugh with such haste that it entangles itself in the speech and the final words are delivered in a giggle. All these and similar mannerisms may be more readily dropped in youth than later in life, and every girl would be wise to watch herself lest she fall into them or their like.

To Prepare Beef Tea.

Beef tea as ordinarily prepared is of little nutritive value, but if the white of an egg be mixed with a cupful of beef tea and heated to about 160 degrees F. the value of the beef tea is greatly enhanced. Again, if minced raw beef be just covered with very weak dydrochloric acid (four drops of acid to one pint of water) and left to macerate for the night the liquid strained off and squeezed out of the flesh by wringing in a cloth contains so much syntonin as to make it highly nutritious when neutralized. Such a liquid will remain clear after boiling to remove the raw flavor.

Ruskin on a Cook.

To be a good cook means the knowledge of all fruits, herbs, balms and spices and of all that is healing and sweet in fields and groves and savory in meats; means carefulness and inventiveness, watchfulness and readiness of appliance. It means the economy of your great-grandmothers and the science of modern chemists. It means much tasting and no wasting. It means English thoroughness, French art and Arabian hospitality. It means, in fine, that you are to be perfectly and always ladies (loaf givers) and are to see that every one has something nice to eat.

FOR YOUNG FOLKS

THE BOTTLE CANNON.

An Experiment That Is Both Interesting and Harmless.

Take a thick empty quart bottle and pour water into it until it is one-third full. In the water dissolve one of the powders—bicarbonate of soda—that druggists sell to make seltzer water.

Put the contents of the other package, tartaric acid, in a playing card rolled up into a tube and tied around with a thread, one end of the tube being sealed or plugged with two pellets of blotting paper.

Suspend this miniature cartridge from the cork by means of a piece of thread attached by a tin tack. The open end of the cartridge must be uppermost, and when all is ready you cork the bottle tightly, having allowed enough thread to swing the cartridge clear of the water.

THE BOTTLE CANNON.

To explode the cartridge and discharge your novel cannon, you lay the bottle horizontally upon two pencils on the table; they will act as your gun carriage.

Pretty soon the water will penetrate the blotting paper plugs and reach the tartaric acid. Effervescence will at once takes place, and the carbonic acid gas thus generated will throw the cork from the bottle with a loud report, the cartridge trailing after it like a rocket.

And you will have a still further imitation of field artillery in the recoil of the bottle, which will roll back several inches.

Make this little experiment; it is both pretty and harmless.

INDIAN GIRL'S BALL.

The Way This Rather Rough and Tumble Game Is Played.

Indian girls have a game called Pah-pah-se-kah-way, which means "maidens' ball play." The ball consists of two deerskin bags, five inches long and one inch wide, fastened together by strips of leather seven inches long. Each girl is armed with a stick five feet long, with which she tries to catch the ball and carry it to the goal of her side.

The girls, with their long braids of hair, assemble in a group, and the ball is thrown among their uplifted sticks. The one who catches it soon has it torn from her by the stick of some other player, and so it is tossed among the playing sticks until a girl on the outskirts of the group gets it and starts to run home with the prize. The others run after her, and the game becomes rough, but Indian girls do not mind this.

All the while the game is being played the girls keep up a gentle cry of "Amgoo"—a sound like the cooing of pigeons, which it is intended to imitate. Whole villages assemble to see this game, and prizes of red cloth, beads and bright ribbons are given to the best players.

A Big Little Thing.

If you had been living prior to 1853 and had gone to the postoffice to buy postage stamps, they would have been delivered to you in a solid sheet, and you would have been compelled to cut them apart to use them. Perhaps you may know somebody who bought them in that way. A certain Henry Archer, in England, realizing the need of a more convenient method of getting them apart, invented a machine for perforating the sheets. That was in 1847, but, would you believe it, the postal authorities declined for six years to have anything to do with the innovation, old fogies that they were, and it was not until 1853 that the house of commons was persuaded to adopt the plan, and it then voted Mr. Archer £4,000 ($20,000) for his patents. The perforated stamps as we now use them were soon afterward issued to the public. He received big pay for a little thing, didn't he? But when we think of the benefit to the public the pay seems small enough.

A Potato Menagerie.

There is much fun for little ones in making a potato menagerie. Take half a dozen large, solid potatoes and, after carefully peeling them, cut animals from them. The only tool necessary is a good sharp penknife. It requires some practice to become a skillful "potato cutter," but the trouble is well rewarded after the boy or girl sees his collection of animals placed in a nice row on a table in front of him. There should be an elephant, a giraffe, a hippo, a horse, a lion, a cow, a bear, a hog, a cat and a dog.

After completing the menagerie the animals may be colored with water colors and ink. A hog may be left potato color, save for spots made of ink. The giraffe is also left the natural potato color and spotted with ink.

It is quite surprising how lifelike these little animals will look, and they will keep for many days in good condition.

Puzzling.

"It's odd," said Joe, "when Tom comes here
We play what he likes best
'Cause mother says I must consult
The wishes of my guest."

"Yet when I visit Tom and play
To play what I like most,
Then mother says I must give in
To Tom 'cause he's my host."

—Carolina Mischka Roberts in St. Nicholas.

THE FRENCHWOMAN.

Let Her Teach You a Lesson Out of Her Beauty Book.

The Frenchwomen are the most beautiful in the world, not by grace of feature, for there are other nations that are just as well gifted as to features, but because of other traits. They know how to dress and how not to dress. They know how to show off their own good points.

And they know how to conceal their defects. A Frenchwoman never displays her forehead fully. A Frenchwoman never destroys the oval of her face. A Frenchwoman never bundles her neck up high unless she be an old woman. A Frenchwoman seldom wears jewels near her eyes, and a Frenchwoman takes very good care to keep her figure very near to the classic.

If one were to sum up the graces of the Frenchwoman one would say that she knows how to use her eyes, that she understands the art of lifting up her chin, that she has the trick of tilting her head at the right angle and that she has brought vivacity down to a fine art. Then one would say also that she makes the most of her best feature, says Woman's Life. If her eyes are her strong point she drapes her hair in Grecian waves across her temples so as to bring out the beauty of her eyes, and she shades them delicately and makes her eyebrows grow long and dark, and she coaxes her lashes to curl.

SITTING GRACEFULLY.

An Art That Should Be Acquired by Every Woman.

Not one woman in a hundred knows or thinks about seating herself gracefully. Columns have been written about how to enter a room gracefully, how to acquire a graceful carriage in walking or dancing, but the art of sitting gracefully seems to have been omitted from the category.

Yet it is one of the things that are necessary to make a girl as attractive as possible.

The average girl spends much more of her time sitting than walking or dancing. How much more necessary, then, that she make the most of her opportunities.

A woman may be very beautiful and her whole appearance may be spoiled by her awkward movements. How distressing to watch her flop down in an ungainly manner in an attempt to seat herself somewhere!

If a woman is tall she should choose the highest chair to seat herself in instead of doubling herself into a disjointed position in a low chair or one too small for her.

When she seats herself at a table she should not lean over it lazily or rest her elbow on it.

These habits are too easily acquired, and a woman does not add to her attractiveness by indulging in them.

DRESS HINTS.

If leather "lifts" are fitted into the heels of rubbers the overshoes will wear longer than without them.

The art of bow tying is one that every woman of limited means should acquire if she wishes to be well dressed.

Spirits of wine will clean soiled silk embroidery. Dip a camel's hair brush in it and brush the trimming until all dirt is removed.

Worn silk may be patched with a scrap of the same neatly put on with mucilage. Place a piece of tissue paper over the place and iron until dry.

An overtrimmed hat is a deal more unsightly than a hat that has nothing on it but a ribbon. More women suffer from a lack of overdressing, anyway, than from a lack of trimming.

When you baste turnover collars and cuffs in your waist, take an extra stitch or two at each corner. This will prevent that ugly curling up which so often mars the otherwise trying effect of the pretty little set.

Preparing Meringues.

Whoever has not struggled desperately at a luncheon or dinner to cut through the stiff, crisp shell of a meringue glace, in imminent peril of landing it on one's own or, worse yet, one's neighbor's best gown? Now, a meringue to be truly delicious must be soft and creamy all through, quite precluding any such misfortune. How is that desirable creaminess to be attained? Very simply. Before serving your meringue remove it from the freezer and let it stand in the open air for a time—say, twenty minutes. For a plain family dinner it might be taken out just after the soup is removed. This allows the ice cream to permeate the shell and makes the meringue much more delicious.

Women and Water.

"If nervous women would only drink more water they would not be so nervous," remarked a trained nurse the other day. "Nearly every physician will recommend a woman who is suffering from nervous prostration or nervous exhaustion to drink lots of water between meals, but many women who do not come under a doctor's care would feel better and look better if they would drink say a quart of water in the course of the day," says Home Chat. "Water is a nerve food. It has a distinctly soothing effect when sipped gradually, as one can test for herself."

An Object Lesson.

There's a little English story going the rounds which is a tremendous object lesson to most of us home bodies:

An old Frenchman stepped into a crowded car, and a young girl sprang up, urging him pleasantly to take her place. As he sank into it he said gratefully:

"Ah, mademoiselle, if you are so kind to a stranger, what must you be at home!"

AIDS TO APPEARANCES.

Things Women Should Remember In Choosing Their Attire.

Every woman should remember when choosing a dress that she must study closely her own appearance and dress in the style that is most becoming to her height, figure and complexion.

What will suit a tall woman will look quite out of place on a woman of smaller dimensions.

In choosing her dresses the tall girl should bear in mind that a short one detracts from the height, and in this matter fashion favors her, for the long trailing dresses for everyday wear are a thing of the past, and it is seldom a woman is seen in the streets with her skirts trailing in the mud or dust or tucked away under her arm.

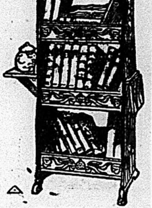
Some tall women in order to make themselves appear shorter make the mistake of stooping, thinking that in so doing they will lessen their height, while instead of making themselves appear shorter they only succeed in looking awkward and ungraceful.

The extra tall girl seems to have an advantage over the short girl in the fact that she can usually walk gracefully when once she has got out of the stooping habit; but with a short person this is seldom the case, and her walk has a tendency to develop into a waddle. She can, however, add to her height more easily than a tall person can detract from hers. By wearing high heeled shoes quite an inch is added to the height. The broad waist belt gives length to the waist. Squatty hats should be avoided and large ones overlooked by her.—Exchange.

BOOK RACK.

Odd Design That May Be Easily Imitated by the Home Worker.

The making of book stands and book racks appears to be almost as endless as the making of books, and the newest productions have much to commend them in the way of form, finish and ornamentation. One of the recent creations which can easily be imitated by the home worker is shown in the illustration. It is of dark toned oak polished to glossiness and set in relief by panels of beaten copper with the characteristic luster and sheen of this metal. Copper trimmings for desk, den and library furnishings are much in favor, and a book stand is one of the best mediums for the exploitation of their effectiveness.—Brooklyn Eagle.



HANDY BOOK STAND.

Housekeeping.

What right has a girl to marry and go into a house of her own unless she knows how to superintend every branch of housekeeping? asks a writer. And she cannot properly superintend unless she has some practical knowledge herself. Let all girls have a share in housekeeping at home before they marry; let each superintend some department by turns. It need not occupy half the time to see that the house is properly swept, dusted and put in order, to prepare puddings and make dishes, than many young ladies spend in reading novels which enervate both mind and body and unfit them for everyday life. Women do not as a general rule get pale faces doing housework. Their sedentary habits, in overheated rooms, combined with ill chosen food, are to blame for bad health. Let the present generation add to its list of real accomplishments the art of properly preparing food for the human body.

Dusting Furniture.

The proper method of dusting furniture has to be learned; it does not come naturally. Girls rarely begin with a duster in each hand, which is absolutely necessary to success. That in the left hand is needed to prevent leaving finger marks when lifting and steadying the furniture. Each piece should be wiped lightly from the top downward to remove dust, and then, after the duster has been shaken out of the window, not over the carpet, it should be rubbed vigorously to raise the polish. The legs and spindles should be rubbed between the two dusters with both hands. This is a saving of time and insures all sides being equally bright. — Philadelphia Press.

For Hard Hands.

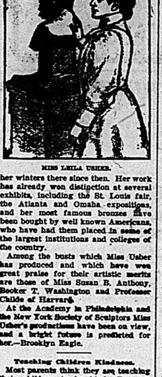
Many people have naturally dry skin. The following treatment will soften it wonderfully:: First soak the hands in warm water and while still wet apply a small quantity of olive oil. Rub this well in till the skin has absorbed as much as it will; then dry thoroughly. At night sleep in a pair of loose white gloves, which for ventilation should have the finger tips cut off and the palms punctured all over with a stiletto, lined with almond paste made by mixing in half an ounce of rose water enough almond meal to form a thick paste.

WOMAN'S WORLD

MISS LEILA USHER.

An Artist Who Is Winning a Reputation as a Sculptor.

Among New York's artists is Miss Leila Usher, who is making a successful career for herself in the world of sculpture. She has not aspired to very great things, and her studio is not full of figures in heroic size, but her excellent work is mostly in portraiture. In this she has special power, and according to expert critics her character delineation is the force which puts her in a high rank among women sculptors. She is a western woman, but opened a studio first in Boston, where she came into public notice. Four years ago she moved to Manhattan and has spent all her winters there since then. Her work has already won distinction at several exhibits, including the St. Louis fair, the Atlanta and Omaha expositions, and her most famous bronzes have been bought by well known Americans, who have had them placed in some of the largest institutions and colleges of the country.



MISS LEILA USHER.

Among the busts which Miss Usher has produced and which have won great praise for their artistic merits are those of Miss Susan B. Anthony, Booker T. Washington and Professor Childe of Harvard.

At the Academy in Philadelphia and the New York Society of Sculptors Miss Usher's productions have been on view, and a bright future is predicted for her.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Teaching Children Kindness.

Most parents think they are teaching their children to be kind. But are they? asks Annie Lillian Swett in the Housekeeper.

I was in a home recently where there was a pet cat. The married son and his wife were staying there, and they had a little girl two years old. One morning the child came into the sitting room and picked the cat up and put her arms tight around its stomach and squeezed it. My hostess took the cat and put it outdoors. The child cried a little. The mother of the child said, "Never mind, baby, when the kittens out in the wood shed get big you can squeeze them all you want to."

Children frequently see their elders strike animals. If we had no other way of finding out this fact, we would know it from watching children play. Children when riding a stick will yank it and jerk it and whip it. It is the first impulse of a child nine or ten years of age when anything happens to strike the offending object.

Children are merely copyists. They do only what they have seen their parents do. When they are small they have tender hearts and a strong sense of justice. A very young child when anything goes wrong feels nothing but grief. It is the training of parents only that hardens children, dries up their well of sympathy and turns their thoughts unconsciously toward revenge. I saw a very little child once that had fallen out of a chair and hurt itself, and it cried quietly. The father came into the room and said, "We'll whip the mean old chair for hurting baby," and then the child gleefully whipped the chair. When children have such training no one need wonder that there is so much cruelty in the world. If they were properly taught by example and precept they would realize that it was not right to torture any of God's creatures.

Orange Flower Skin Food.

Before going to bed every night wash your face in hot soapy water, using a complexion brush. Then with the hands dash the water on the face at least fifty times. Rinse in warm water and then apply cream. The face is rinsed in warm water so as to keep the pores of the skin open and to allow them to absorb the cream. The recipe is as follows:

One-half ounce of white wax, one-half ounce of spermaceti, one-half ounce of cocoanut oil, one ounce of lanoline, two ounces of oil of sweet almonds. Melt in a porcelain kettle, remove from the heat and add one ounce of orange flower water, three drops of tincture of benzoin. Beat briskly with egg beater until creamy. Apply at bedtime. Rub it in with a rotary movement of the finger ends, then by spreading the fingers out over the face pick up the muscles of the cheeks with a "clawing" movement.

In the morning bathe the face in clear cold water.

This food does not cause a growth of hair on the face. The formula costs about 50 cents to be filled.

Cease Thinking of Self.

Worry is an excessive anxiety, which is generally due to bodily or mental infirmity. It is a dyspepsia which converts food into poison. The victims of worry are victims of disease, and their first care should be to get health. Possibly they eat too much, or they eat what is unwholesome or badly prepared, or they breathe impure air, or they sleep too little, or they attempt to do too much. They hurry, and therefore do poor work, and therefore worry.

Worry proceeds from enfeeblement of body or mind and intensifies the evil. It becomes an obsession, a kind of mania, which makes it impossible to see things as they are. The sufferers live in a world of forebodings and unrealities. They make themselves miserable about what will never happen. They live in continual dread. Nothing is too slight to arouse their fears. They grow selfish and become indifferent to the tortures they inflict on those about them.—Good Housekeeping.

Relining a Coat.

In relining a coat cut out half of the old lining and lay the pieces on the new material, allowing ample room for turning in, particularly where the old lining shows signs of having been stretched. Then sew up the seams of the new lining except the underarm seam, put the lining in position inside the coat and tuck it in place, using the half of the old lining left as a pattern. Gradually rip this out as the new is put in. Stitch first at the neck, then at the bottom of the front and finally at the underarm seam. When this is done sew up the two seams of the sleeve lining, put them in place and stitch first at the wrist and then at the armhole. Take care not to leave any superfluous stitches in which the hand may catch in putting on the coat.

Mother's Day Off.

"It dawned upon me after I had been married twelve years that every one in my house had a day off except my wife," said the married man. "I always had Sundays, the children had Saturdays and Sundays and the servants had Thursdays. So I talked it over with her, and after a good deal of argument on her part we decided that once every week the family should shift for itself, while my wife went shopping, visiting or did anything else she liked without bothering her head about the dinner or the children. The plan works like a charm, and we have a lot of fun trying to show her how much better we can run things without her."—New York Tribune.

Meat Pie With Potato Crust.

Take six boiled potatoes, three-quarters of a pound of cold meat, three ounces of butter, one egg, one teacupful of meat essence, pepper and salt to taste. Mash the potatoes, add salt, butter and the beaten yolk of the egg; beat all together lightly with a wooden spoon. Cut the meat into thin slices, trim off fat, season with pepper and salt. Spread a layer of the mashed potatoes on a pie dish, lay in slices of meat, pour over meat essence, add the rest of the potatoes, smooth over with a knife and bake in a moderate oven for half an hour. Serve very hot.

Use For an Old Feather Bed.

From a discarded feather bed may be made warm and light comfortables. Take two pieces of sateen or silkoline the required size, lay one above the other, and bind all around except at one end. Fill this covering with feathers until it is the right thickness, then bind the end. Put the comfortable in a frame and quilt it in the ordinary manner, spreading the feathers evenly as you go.

Air Pillows.

Air pillows which give much comfort to travelers and invalids are not the ugly articles shown in the shops some years ago. They are now prettily covered in gay flowered cretonnes and silks. Plaids are particularly effective. When one's head gets tired from the motion of the train or a bad headache appears, these little pillows will prove a boon to the weary traveler.

Preserving Children's Teeth.

Children should be accustomed to vigorous mastication by practice three times a day, and the habit thus formed will not be forgotten. By such a system of training bills for dentistry will be reduced, the child's teeth will become strong and well polished, and there will be distinct strengthening of the facial muscles.

Making the Wrists Plump.

Thin, bony wrists can be fattened somewhat by this treatment: Massage for ten minutes every night, using any good cold cream. After this bandage with cloth wet in cocoanut or cod liver oil, covering with a dry flannel. This will feed the tissues directly, and six weeks of doing this nightly should increase the size.

The Use of Benzoin.

Benzoin should never be used alone on the face. Its tendency is to fluff away the old dead particles of skin and to build a new tissue in its place. Benzoin must be used sparingly and works its best effect when combined with alcohol and rosewater, equal parts.

A test for the presence of sewer gas is sugar of lead sprinkled on blotting paper. If this is held near pipes of closets and washrooms it will quickly discolor if sewer gas is present.

To clean nickel trimmings, etc., moisten common baking soda with enough vinegar to make a paste, spread it over the nickel and polish with a flannel cloth.

Books should have an honored abiding place in almost every room as being the best ornaments and adding the charm of comfort and homeliness.

Grease spots on marble can be quickly removed by applying powdered magnesia.

Orange Triennial Council In Toronto July 16 to 18.

PROMINENT ORANGEMEN FROM ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD TO MEET IN THAT CITY IN TRIENNIAL SESSION — THE PROGRAMME.

A proud period in the history of Orangeism in Toronto, says the Toronto News, will be Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, July 16, 17 and 18, when the fourteenth triennial session of the Imperial Grand Orange Council of the Loyal Orange Association of the World will be held in Victoria Hall on Queen street east.

One hundred delegates will be arriving in a few days from England, Scotland and Ireland, Australia, the United States and Canada. For the first time the views of South Africa will be voiced before the Council, as last year a Grand Lodge was formed, close in the wake of the advance of the British flag.

FORECAST OF SESSIONS.

The first meeting will be called to order on Monday morning at ten o'clock, to be followed by an afternoon session at half-past two. On Tuesday, at 9 a.m. and 2.30 p.m., and on Wednesday, at the same hours, meetings will also be held.

At these gatherings Mr. Robert Burns, of this city, will occupy the honored post of presiding officer, for word has been received that the Grand President, Mr. William Young, of Glasgow, will be unable to come to Canada owing to personal illness.

The chief items of business to come up during the opening day will be the address of the retiring president, the reports of the secretary and treasurer, the selection of standing committees, the reception and reference of petitions, appeals, reports and communications, as well as notices of motion.

The report of the secretary will consist of synopsis of statements from all the Grand Lodges, while the treasurer's report will be limited to the finances in connection with the Council itself.

As the Council is a consultive rather than a legislative body, the questions under discussion will be those affecting the general interests of the Orange order.

While the conduct of the various meetings is entirely in charge of the Grand officers, the County Orange Lodge of Toronto is responsible for all the arrangements of a local nature. This mantle of duty naturally falls to them, from the shoulders of the Grand Lodge of British America, at whose invitation the Council is meeting this year in Canada.

While the expenses of each delegate are borne by the Grand Lodge which he represents, the local lodges, without asking any grant from the city, will arrange for the entertainment of the visitors in a handsome manner.

The steamer Bluebell has been chartered for Tuesday afternoon at four o'clock, to take the delegates for a cruise across the bay, and for a few miles out into the lake, after which dinner will be served at the Hotel Hanlan.

A grand banquet on Wednesday evening will wind up the convention. For this there will be 200 invitations, to include the visitors, the Mayor of Toronto, members of the Ontario Parliament for the city, the Cabinet, etc., and prominent Orangemen, who may be in the city at the time. Dr. Sproule, Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of British America, will preside.

Among the delegates will be three from Scotland, three from Ireland, two from England, two from Australia, and one from South Africa. Those representing the Grand Lodge of British America, which includes Newfoundland, will be: Lieut.-Col. J. H. Scott, Walkerton, Ont.; Messrs. Fred Dane, County Master, Toronto; Wm. Lee, Toronto; E. T. Essery, London; H. Lovelock, Toronto; Jesse G. Wright, Toronto Junction; R. R. Gamey, M.P.P., Gore Bay; Lieut.-Col. A. E. Belcher, Southampton, and Rev. Messrs. W. Walsh, Brampton, and Wm. Lowe, London.

Many of the delegates are expected to be present to take part in the celebration on July 12 in different parts of the province.

HISTORY OF THE COUNCIL.

It was in the Orange Hall of Belfast, Ireland, on July 18, 1866, that the Council was first organized with five delegates each present from England, Scotland, Ireland and the Grand Lodge of British America. The first president was the Right Hon. the Earl of Enniskillen, and Canada's strength was recognized in the appointment as vice-president of Hon. J. H. Cameron, M.P.P.

Belfast was the scene of the first meeting of the Council, July 17, 1867. The second was in Toronto, July 13, 1870, when Sir (then Mr.) Mackenzie Bowell was elected vice-president, and the Orange Institution of the United States joined the organization.

The third gathering was held in Londonderry in 1873, and the fourth in Londonderry in 1876, when Sir Mackenzie Bowell was elected president.

Ottawa, in 1879; London, 1882; Edinburgh, 1885; Carrickfergus, 1888, were the scenes of the next meetings. Toronto was again the choice for 1889, when Hon. N. Clarke Wallace was the choice for president, and Robert Birmingham, grand secretary. Mr. Wallace was re-elected president at the eleventh meeting, held in Glasgow in 1888.

At New York, in 1900, Mr. J. W. Bell, M.P.P. for Addington County, became president, and Mr. Hermann H. Pitts, also of Canada, grand secretary.

The last session was in the City of Dublin in 1903, the largest and most important meeting of the Council yet held.

WILLIE GOT OFF WITH A LECTURE.

The lad Willie Donohue was charged with taking the sum of $11.35 from a cripple named Walter Davison. The latter did not appear and has apparently left the city. Owing to the fact that the boy is under 10 years of age he could not be sent to jail. He was allowed to return home with his parents after the Magistrate had given him a severe lecture.

The Band Concert.

A large number of citizens, of all ages and walks in life, were upon Victoria Park last evening, listening to the sweet strains of music furnished by the I.O.O.F. band. The programme rendered gave general satisfaction. In addition to those upon the park, the harbor was dotted with boats filled with young people. It was an ideal evening for a band concert.

Fatal Accident At Deseronto.

TYENDINAGA FARMER, 72 YEARS OF AGE, FELL DOWN A CELLAR AND CRUSHED HIS SKULL.

In our telegraphic columns will be found a brief account of the accident which befel Mr. Levi Gould, farmer, of the 3rd con. Tyendinaga, at Deseronto yesterday morning. Additional particulars show that the unfortunate man was in Stafford's hardware store purchasing some farming implements. He was reaching for some tools from a wall when somehow he missed his footing and fell down the cellar, crushing his head in a horrible way.

He was taken to a friend's house on a stretcher, dying in a few hours.

The body was taken home last night.

Deceased leaves a widow and one daughter.

A Quiet Wedding.

At 3 o'clock this afternoon a quiet wedding took place at the residence of Mrs. L. McCummon, Evans street. The bride was Miss Pearl Bennett, who has for some time been a resident of this city, and the groom Mr. Clayton Goodsell, of Mount Pleasant, Mich. The couple were unattended. Rev. R. H. Leitch performed the ceremony in the presence of a few friends. Mr. and Mrs. Goodsell left on the evening train for their future home at Mount Pleasant.

Dynamite Bombs In Czar's Palace.

STARTLING DISCOVERY MADE AT PETERHOF YESTERDAY — MATTER SO FAR A MYSTERY.

New York, July 11.—(Special).—According to a St. Petersburg despatch to the World there was wild consternation at the Imperial Palace at Peterhof yesterday, following the discovery in the garden of that palace of several bombs filled with dynamite.

The excitement and dread were indescribable.

It was obvious that the bombs must have been placed there by someone connected with the palace, either as officer, guard or servant, and every one equally was under suspicion.

Gen. Trepoff, the commandant, immediately put in motion all the machinery of his office to discover the culprit, but thus far without result.

In the meantime the person of the Czar is being more rigidly guarded than ever, if increase of precaution is possible.

Says Peterboro Prices Are High.

A CORRESPONDENT WHO MAKES STRICTURES ON THE COST OF LIVING IN THAT CITY.

A correspondent who signs himself "Competition" writes the following letter to the Peterboro Examiner Inasmuch as he brings Belleville into the discussion, it may prove interesting to our readers;

To the Editor of the Examiner;

Sir, — I notice in your issue of the 9th inst., a reply to "Caveat's" letter, which makes the price of living public property for discussion.

As a citizen, I do not think it rude to criticize the cost of living in Peterboro. I spend nearly a thousand dollars a year to keep a family of three in this expensive city. Let us compare with Belleville, Port Hope and Bowmanville.

First in consideration is the house rent, which is nearly fifty per cent. higher. Some one says, "Buy a house" — and pay the exorbitant price, which the present time demands for a house, that may possess worm eaten or knot hole lumber for sheeting or siding, and pay taxes of 25 mills to the dollar. I know the greater lights try to pull the wool over our eyes and state it is only 18 mills on the dollar.

What about the price of coal? Is it not a great deal higher in Peterboro than in Belleville, or any frontier town, or even Toronto? Yes, Coal is cheaper in some of our inland villages.

Now, take our vegetables, I have bought potatoes and had them shipped in to me, and saved money by so doing — and thus it goes. And fruit, in a general sense, is much dearer in Peterboro than Belleville, Bowmanville, Port Hope or Trenton.

Then take our meats—are they not extremely high, when you come to pay 15 to 18 cents per lb., and even 30 cents per lb. for cooked meats?

Again, take our butter, I have bought butter at 16 to 18 cents per lb. outside of the city from local dealers when I had to pay 25 cents a lb. in this city.

Take drygoods, I have bought from outside merchants in this line and had better satisfaction than in our own city. But they tell us in their flysheets that they are selling at such slaughter prices? They must be very gratuitous to treat us so liberally and remain in business.

The wages for mechanics and laborers are not much higher than they were five years ago. However, I expect to live in Peterboro, and pay the prices—or buy elsewhere—without the advice of any merchant.

NORTHERN SPIES ARE ALL RIGHT.

THERE IS NO TRUTH IN THE REPORTS OF WINTER-KILLING.

Toronto, July 11.—Mr. P. Hodgetts, Secretary of the Fruit Growers' Association, in reply to the inquiries of a reporter who interviewed him yesterday, said there was no foundation for the reports that the bulk of the Northern Spy apple trees of the province had been winter-killed. "As a matter of fact," said Mr. Hodgetts, "there was very little winter-killing among the fruit trees last winter. Any trees that have died from that cause lately have died as the result of the severe winter of two years ago. The Northern Spy apple trees have not suffered in any of the fruit districts of the province.

INDEPENDENT CANADA

Aspiration Voiced by Mr. Geo. E. Drummond of Montreal.

"Make Canada a Nation Permanently Allied to Great Britain" — Opening Session of Congress of Chambers of Commerce of the Empire Has a Record Attendance — The Canadian Resolution Is Opposed by India.

London, July 11.—(C. A. P.)—With a record attendance, the Congress of the Chambers of Commerce of the Empire was opened yesterday morning by the Earl of Elgin. The Secretary of State for the Colonies said he had learned at the Colonial Office to look on both sides of questions, which he wished to commend to discussion on every side. He would not venture to advise congress as to their course. He hoped they would attain the ambition of all, a united empire.

Mr. Blackwell was elected chairman and Mr. Charles Charlton deputy. The chairman spoke highly of the hospitality received at Montreal by the last congress. A motion congratulating Mr. Chamberlain was passed amid cheers.

The Canadian Resolutions.

Mr. George Drummond of Montreal presented the first resolution, which combined the Canadian resolutions urging preferential trade between the United Kingdom and the Colonies. He spoke for all the leading Canadian Boards of Trade and the Manufacturers' Association in maintaining that "we present the practical importance of calling the colonial conference of 1907 to give effect to the desire to make Canada an independent nation permanently allied with Great Britain." To this ideal the encroachments of the United States trade and the growth of the reciprocity party across the line constituted a grave danger. Within two generations Canada would have a population as great as the British Isles. This market is worth capturing. In Canada they did not accept the verdict of the late British elections as against the proposition. He asked that a commission go into the question. Canadians would not ask for it if it was to make bread dearer in the United Kingdom.

Canada Sacrificed $5,000,000.

Mr. F. Cockshutt, M. P., seconded the resolutions and urged it on behalf of the Empire, not any particular part of it. He said Canada had sacrificed five million dollars of duty because of preference.

Mr. Francis Ashworth, Manchester, opposing the resolution, said that after two years of education tariff reform had been overwhelmingly defeated at the last British election. Cries of "No Chinese labor" from the Canadian section. The loyalty of the Colonies are not dependent on sordid bonds.

Mr. Charles J. Wilson, S. Scotland, supported the resolution and said he had been converted from free trade.

India Wants No Tariffs.

Sir Ernest Cable of Bengal and Mr. C. H. Armstrong of Bombay opposed the resolution on behalf of India, which desired to avoid tariff walls. They claimed that India, and not Canada, was the most important part of the Empire.

Lord Avebury, in opposing, said it was difficult to get a reciprocal basis. He thought the prosperity of Canada would have been greater if free trade had been adopted. The only thing to benefit the Empire would be entire free trade within the Empire.

Mr. Octavius Beale, Australia, supported the resolution on the same lines as Canada.

Dissent For Denison.

Col. Denison made a vigorous and patriotic appeal. Answering quotations by a previous speaker from Sir Wilfrid Laurier's speech at the Cobden Club, he said Sir Wilfrid had changed his mind, and had made distinct offers. Loud dissent greeted his remark that England was going backward.

The resolution was supported by Messrs. H. Beauchamp, New Zealand; G. Hirst Birstall, Sir S. B. Samuel, London; G. Parkes, M. P., Birmingham, and opposed by Messrs. A. J. Hobson, Sheffield, and George Wight, Sunderland.

Sir Charles Tupper pointed to the possibilities of the West in answer to a question whether the Empire could support the Empire. In Canada Liberal and Conservative were united on the question. The progress of the policy since its inception made its success a certainty. The congress adjourned without a vote.

A complaint was brought before an eminent English bishop that a clergyman in his diocese was wearing an Oxford master's hood when, in fact, he had no such degree. "I call it, my lord," said the complainant, "wearing a lie on his back." "We need not use quite so strong a word, Mr. Smith," the bishop replied in his blandest manner. "Call it a false hood."

McINTOSH BROS.

TO PROROGUE THURSDAY.

Dominion Parliament Will Cease Its Labors on That Day—Pension Bill Debate Trap.

Ottawa, July 11.—In answer to a question in the House yesterday by Dr. Sproule, Sir Wilfrid Laurier stated that prorogation would occur on Thursday afternoon.

The supply bills presented last night appropriate for last year's supplementary estimates $2,929,502. The estimates for the nine months ending March 31, 1907, amount to the tidy sum of $54,642,468.

The Senate bill respecting the sale and marking of manufactures of gold and silver, was passed by the Commons yesterday morning. It will not go into effect for a year.

No Compensation For M. P.'s.

The committee on election laws reported a bill providing that no member of Parliament can practice before committee of the House or receive any compensation directly or indirectly in relation thereto. The imprisonment feature of the punishment was struck out and the fine made not less than $500 nor more than $2,000, instead of $10,000. A clause was added providing for the punishment of anyone who offers compensation to such a member for such services.

Trap For Opposition.

The Government set a trap last night for the Opposition. Upon the second reading of Mr. Fielding's bill to repeal the pension grab, Sir Wilfrid Laurier intimated that he might be willing to let the matter go over till the autumn session. Then all the Liberals sat tight and let the Conservatives do the talking.

Mr. Turiff (East Assiniboia), Mr. Clements (East Kent), and Hon. Geo. E. Foster debated the bill briefly.

THE SUNDAY BILL.

Senate Changes the Title of Bill Known as "Lord's Day" Bill.

Ottawa, July 11.—In the Senate yesterday, Senator Power moved that the phrase, Lord's Day be stricken out wherever it may occur in the bill, and the word Sunday substituted. The amendment carried—yeas 31, nays 13.

Senator Mitchell very sagely remarked that every day was the Lord's day, but the first day of the week was commonly known as Sunday.

This point disposed of, the Senate made short work of Senator Cloran's objection to the definition of Sunday, and it still extends from "12 o'clock on Saturday afternoon to 12 o'clock on the following afternoon.

Tries to Kill It.

Amendments moved led Senator Landry to say that it was evidently out of the question to cover the entire Dominion by a consistent Sunday law. The matters involved were those for localities, and should be referred to the provinces. He moved that the committee rise.

Senator Scott pointed out that, to carry this motion, would "kill the bill," and it was defeated, only Senators Landry, Godbut, Bolduc and Montplaisir, all of Quebec, voting in the affirmative.

The Senate committee reported the bill and virtually nullifying the provisions by amendment. There will be no prosecutions except upon order of the Attorney-General of the province. The Piche amendment was dropped. Prohibition of work on Sunday and Sunday excursions are made subject to all provincial acts and laws, public and private, heretofore or hereafter passed. Exemption is granted to "all vessels."

Disgusting Conditions In Britain.

London, July 11.—The annual report of the inspector of factories and workshops yesterday, shows that the conditions here are quite as revolting as anything alleged of the Chicago Meat Packing revelations. Dirty factories and disgusting methods seem to be the rule, instead of the exception. Jam factories, bakeries and sausage makers are all censured as being equally filthy, and the description of one fits most of the others.

MANAGER A DICTATOR

Mr. J. M. Spence in Control of the Central Life Co.

Business of Young Company Probed by Royal Insurance Commission—Ex-President Thomas Crawford, M.P.P., While President of the Company, Borrowed $4,000—How the Concern Was Floated.

Toronto, July 11.—Thomas Crawford, M. P. P., and the Central Life Insurance Co. of Guelph were before the Insurance Commission yesterday. Today the commission will take up the affairs of the Dominion Life Insurance at Waterloo, and to-morrow the Mutual Life.

The Central is a young company, under J. M. Spence, who has managed to get the controlling interest.

Mr. Crawford who was president from its inception in 1901 until the end of 1905, was the first witness called, and told of the organization proceedings. J. M. Spence was organizer. He was asked to become president, and Hon. J. W. St. John was also on the board. There were seven directors, but Mr. St. John and Major Craig dropped out, the former owing to a dispute with Manager Spence, and, as the latter controlled the majority of the proxy vote, he succeeded in getting Mr. St. John out of the way, contrary to the wishes of witness. Witness wanted a new manager appointed, and Mr. Spence stepped in with the controlling power and bought over Mr. Crawford's stock at the price he paid for it.

Thought Purchase Quite Proper.

Certain debentures of the Provincial Building and Loan Co., of which Mr. Crawford was president, were bought at his instigation by the Central Life, despite the fact that the Ontario Government refused them as proper security. Witness explained that he knew the value of the debentures, and thought the deal quite proper.

Mr. Tilley approached the subject of loans to directors, and learned that witness himself had borrowed $4,000 from the Central Life on a promissory note. No interest was mentioned. Mr. Crawford said that the suggestion had emanated from Mr. Spence, who was very friendly with him at the time, but was not so friendly now.

J. M. Spence, manager and practically owner of the Central Life, then took the box. The directors, according to him, got their stock at par, while other subscribers had to pay the premium. Along with Mr. Crawford, he had borrowed $15,000 from the Imperial Bank on personal notes to make up the Government deposit. His salary was $3,000 per year for the first five years. Mr. Crawford got $400 per annum.

The St. John Trouble.

The St. John trouble arose out of fees charged the company for their law business. Mr. Crawford wanted to get witness out of the manager's chair and make him superintendent, but this witness refused to do, as he would have to relinquish his power given him by the proxies.

Mr. Tilley took Mr. Spence's evidence in regard to witness' illness. The minutes showed a resolution to the effect that, during Mr. Spence's illness, any extra expense incurred was to be deducted from witness' salary.

Mr. Spence said that this was not correct, and that there was no resolution ever passed.

From the minutes, Mr. Tilley read a resolution to the effect that J. M. Spence be given three months' leave of absence. When Mr. Spence came back he would not stand for a reduction of $75 being taken out of his salary. He made objections, and the directors ordered the money to be repaid.

"What were your reasons?"

"I found that Mr. Crawford had been trying to dig up something against me, and found a $75 increase in my salary, which I had taken for expenses paid out in reorganization. It was not the $75 that I kicked at, but the principle.

Dictates Own Salary.

"Mr. Spence's salary as president and general manager was $2,500 a year. Mr. Spence said he was making $900 on accepting the dual position. He made it clear that he was taking $500 less than his previous contract, and, if necessary, should the financial standing of the company not warrant this amount, he is willing to take less

Mr. Tilley brought out the fact that as witness had complete control of the company, he would say what his own salary would be.

Mr. Spence said that he had never used his power in any way to run the company, only to its best interests.

Mr. Tilley then took up the $4,000 loan to President Crawford on May 12, 1902. He asked witness if Mr. Crawford's evidence to the effect that he had the sanction of his manager was correct, and Mr. Spence answered that he went into the deal as innocently as an unborn child.

"Mr. Crawford came into my office and told me that he was stuck, and needed $4,000. I said that I had not four thousand cents, and Crawford asked if it would not be all right for him to borrow it from the funds of the company on a promissory note.

Crawford Good For It.

"I said 'You are good for it,' and as he was the president, I could do nothing else but put the loan through. He had done good turns for me, and I did not think I was doing anything wrong."

Mr. Spence's own loans were gone into. He had put through a $2,500 loan for himself under the guidance of the Continental Life for a few days on some real estate. At certain times he got advances on salary.

Five thousand dollars of Provincial Building and Loan debentures, Mr. Spence said, were purchased by Messrs. Crawford and St. John. He had nothing to do in the matter.

The purchase by the witness of stock from the shareholders who could not pay the call of 5 per cent. made to raise the Dominion deposit, was discussed.

How Stock Was "Sold."

Mr. Tilley unearthed a new scheme of getting a company floated on a substantial basis, and putting in deceiving returns to the Government. At the outset, the directors took stock to the value of $100,000, and so pretended that the stock was all sold. These transactions dated from October, 1901. When applications came in in the regular way some of the directors who had stock gave authority to cancel the amount and assign it to the applicant. Witness saw nothing wrong in this, and Mr. St. John, his solicitor, had advised him that it was a proper transaction.

"This was done simply to get into the Ontario Government returns," said Mr. Spence, when pressed by Mr. Tilley.

"The purchase of 104 shares, which completed the 5,000 shares, by Mr. Spence, was questioned. He gave his note, which was discounted at the bank with the understanding that the stock would be sold again, and that he would not have to pay for it.

Tried to Shift Responsibility.

Witness tried to shift the responsibility on the solicitor, but Mr. Tilley went after this sort of quibbling, with the result that Mr. Spence admitted he had not discussed the matter with the board.

Mr. Spence's stock account was dissected very carefully by Mr. Tilley. He probed the transfers that witness had made to his wife. That Mrs. Spence was just holding the stock as trustee for the company was admitted by witness. There was no arrangement with the directors, and Mrs. Spence was liable for stock.

Mr. Tilley read a statement showing that at the end of 1904 the total premium and interest receipts of the Central Life were $48,000, and the expenses $70,000. That was about $19,000 expenses over and above all receipts. The impairment of capital up to that date was $20,176. Agents' advances amounted to $2,000.

Mr. Spence said that this was a bad asset and not worth anything. Agents' advances has been abandoned. Mr. Tilley tried to find out what this asset was worth, but witness could not say.

Lapse Rate 66 Per Cent.

The Central Life issued 1,232 policies, amounting to $1,305,500 during the four years ending 1904, of which 788 policies, amounting to $831,750, lapsed. This would make the lapse rate about 66 per cent., which Mr. Spence claimed was no worse than other companies.

No profit and loss account had been furnished the commission because Mr. Spence explained the company had never kept such a statement, but that in the future an account of this kind would be kept.

Mr. Tilley used up a lot of time going over the financial statements of the company. Items were investigated, but nothing startling was developed. The impairment of capital at the end of 1905 was $36,000. Counsel brought out the fact that the impairment was nearly double that of last year. In 1905 $130,000 worth of insurance was written.

"This," said Mr. Tilley, "is not very satisfactory," and witness admitted that the expenses of the Central were altogether too high.

The Central had no actuary because it could not afford one.

ACQUIT ROJESTVENSKY.

Others Found Guilty and Sentenced to Be Shot, But This Will Be Commuted—Admiral Irresponsible.

Cronstadt, Russia, July 11.—Admiral Rojestvensky, whose trial on the charge of surrendering to the enemy after the battle of the Sea of Japan, began before a court-martial here July 4, was acquitted yesterday after the court had deliberated for nearly ten hours.

Four officers of the torpedo boat destroyer Bedovia, who were placed on trial with the admiral, were found guilty of having premeditatively surrendered the Bedovia, and all four were condemned to death by shooting.

But on account of extenuating circumstances, the Emperor will be requested to commute their sentences to dismissal from the service, and to be deprived of certain rights, which they would otherwise enjoy.

St. Petersburg, July 11.—Government figures, made public yesterday, show an unprecedented immigration to Siberia, 86,867 persons going there during the last six months.

Gerald White Chosen.

Pembroke, July 11.—At the Conservative convention here yesterday, Gerald White, eldest son of the late Hon. Peter White, M. P., was unanimously chosen as the candidate. Peter White and R. W. Gordon, lumberman, of this town, were also before the convention. Peter White withdrew, and on a ballot being taken between Gerald White and R. W. Gordon, the former was declared the choice. R. L. Borden, J. G. H. Bergeron, M. P. for Beauharnois, and Rufus Pope, ex-M. P., and others, delivered addresses.

An Englishman's Sad Fate.

Hamilton, July 11.—Andrew McGarvey, an Englishman, who had arrived in Hamilton from the old land only a few weeks ago, got into a quarrel with a boy named Alexander McDonald, a fellow-employe at the Norton Manufacturing Co.'s factory. It is charged that McDonald kicked McGarvey in the head. Blood poisoning set in, and McGarvey died yesterday morning in the city hospital. McDonald was arrested yesterday afternoon. The charge against him now is aggravated assault.

'TIS THE LORD'S DAY ACT

Commons Would Not Concur in Senate's "Sunday" Change.

Commons Accepts Amendment Which Requires an Order of Attorney-General of Province Before a Prosecution May Commence, and Also That Relegating to Various Provinces Entire Question of Sunday Parks, Etc.

Ottawa, July 12.—Sir Mackenzie Bowell did not move the promised amendments yesterday morning to the Sunday bill. He doubted if it could be amended so as to have any effect at all.

Senator Lougheed made a brilliant speech, pointing out the inconsistent and divergent views of the Laurier Government.

The bill was read a third time and passed without division.

Back On Commons.

When the bill went back to the Commons Mr. Aylesworth moved that the change in title and phraseology from "Lord's Day" to "Sunday" be not concurred in.

Mr. Aylesworth's motion not to concur in this amendment passed without division.

The Commons then declined to concur in the following Senate amendments:

Defining provincial act as a "public" or "private" act.

Including express matter in clause respecting passenger trains.

Permitting any "car," as well as "train," to be carried on Sunday to its destination.

Permitting street railway and ferry at Sault Ste. Marie to operate on Sunday.

Conferring on "all" vessels the exepmtions conferred upon "ocean-going" vessels.

About 11 o'clock the Lord's Day bill restored to its former name, and with a few of its wounds bound up and dressed, was carried back to the Senate.

Senate Swallows.

The Senate last night swallowed bodily all the amendments of the House to the Sunday bill. The only division favored the Government; yeas 33, nays 8.

McIntyre Bolts.

The House yesterday morning concurred in the amendments made by the Senate to the Railway Act. McIntyre (Liberal, Perth), voted with the Opposition against Hon. Mr. Emmerson's motion, which was carried by 64 to 24.

The pensions to ex-Ministers were repealed yesterday morning almost without debate and without division.

Toronto, July 12.—Two Normal School deputations waited upon Hon. Dr. Pyne yesterday. The larger was from Stratford and the other was from Lindsay. Hon. Dr. Pyne promised in both cases that the representations would be considered.

Commercial Congress.

Overwhelmingly Supports Resolution for Preference.

Enthusiastic Cheers on Announcement of Vote, Which Was 107 to 36 in Favor of Reciprocity Arrangement, With 21 Neutral—Canadians Sing "God Save the King"—An "Advisory Imperial Council."

London, July 12.—By an overwhelming majority, the Congress of Chambers of Commerce of the Empire yesterday morning adopted the Canadian resolution in favor of preferential trade. The show of hands revealed large individual opinion in favor of closer imperial trade relation. The vote by chambers was: For the resolution, 107; against, 36; neutral, 21. The neutral votes included the important chambers of London, Birmingham, Edinburgh, Melbourne and Sydney.

The result was received with enthusiastic cheers, the Canadians rising to their feet and singing "God Save the King." Eighteen English chambers voted against the resolution; the remainder of the opposition was scattered over divergent parts of the Empire.

Advisory Imperial Council.

Again, on the initiative of Canada, congress, after luncheon, took up the question of an imperial council. The resolution urging the home and colonial Governments to appoint such a body was moved by R. H. Alexander, Vancouver, seconded by Arthur Bennett, Warrington. They argued that it was time to systematize the affairs of the Empire.

On the suggestion of F. H. Mathewson of Montreal, the name was changed to "Advisory Imperial Council."

The resolution was adopted, with only a few dissenters.

The congress also passed a resolution, introduced by George E. Drummond, in behalf of the Montreal Board of Trade, to the effect that the congress "hereby reaffirms the principle of the resolution adopted by the last congress, that it is the duty of the self-governing colonies to participate in the coast defence of the Empire."

Wars Due to Colonies.

At a complimentary banquet last night at the National Liberal Club, Lord Loreburne, Lord Chancellor, emphatically denied that the Liberal party was unfriendly to the colonies. At the same time they should face the fact that all the British wars of the last ninety years were due to India and the colonies, says in the case of India, the cost was almost exclusively borne by the United Kingdom. Practically the only danger of collision arose through the contiguity of the colonies to foreign nations.

Presentation to Chamberlain.

At a special meeting of the Tariff Commission yesterday a presentation was made to Mr. Chamberlain, commemorating the 70th anniversary of his birth. In reply Mr. Chamberlain said he had faith in the protectionist propaganda, which had been delayed too long. He was not ashamed to change opinions under conviction.

GALT WRECK INQUEST OPENED.

Samuel Muma, Reported Dead, Has a Chance of Recovery.

Galt, July 12.—Last evening the coroner's jury met to enquire into the fatality on the C. P. R. Tuesday. The jury consists of: Mark Mundy, foreman; Alex. Ames, H. C. Bartlett, E. Radigan, B. Radigan, J. W. Gilliland, William McClure, A. Deans, J. Struthers, C. L. Haas, W. A. Hunter, W. Cowan, J. White, L. J. Groh. Dr. Vardon was coroner. The inquest was adjourned till Friday night.

Samuel Muma, the Canadian foreman from Innerkip, who was reported as instantly killed, is still living and the doctors says he has a "fighting chance" for ultimate recovery. He regained consciousness Tuesday night. A number of ribs were fractured and the splintered bones pierced his lungs in several places. When Muma was picked up he was unconscious and showed no signs of life. Mrs. Muma was driven in from Ayr to the hospital. Her distress was pitiful, but she was somewhat encouraged by being told that her husband, who had just recovered consciousness, had a chance for his life. Pietro Salvano is said to be in a dying state.

Bad Lumber Fire.

Halifax, July 12.—There is a destructive fire in Newfoundland, the worst in the history of its lumbering industry. The fire was in the Timber Estate Co.'s property at Mintbrook, near Cambo. The company's big mill, offices, warehouses, barns, ten dwellings and half a million feet of lumber were destroyed, causing a loss estimated at over $100,000. Over 150 men are out of employment and many families are destitute. The concern is controlled by Canadians.

Eugenia Visits Emperor.

Ischl, Austria, July 12.—Eugenia, ex-Empress of France, arrived here yesterday, and was met by Emperor Francis Joseph. Before coming to Ischl, the ex-empress asked the Emperor's permission in writing, saying: "Being near death, I request your Majesty grant me the opportunity to see you once more in life, that I may thank you for all the kindness you have shown me."

Packers Cleaning Up.

Chicago, Ill., July 12.—Secretary of Agriculture Wilson yesterday finished his work in Chicago. He said he was satisfied that the packers of Chicago are making every effort to put their plants in sanitary condition, and that the department will put the revised regulations into effect on Aug. 1.

Editor Nominated.

Winnipeg, July 12.—Both the local political parties are showing activity in the nomination of candidates. Yesterday, the Liberals nominated Ira Stratton, editor of The Postmaster's Journal, to contest Rockwood.

One May Be Saved.

Montreal, July 12.—The steamship Cervonia has no water in her hold. Attempt will be made to-day to pull her off. The steamship Angota is full of water and may be almost a total loss

Victory For Miners.

Dubois, Pa., July 12.—The long coal strike in this region was settled yesterday, and all employes will return to work next Monday. The settlement includes all the mines along the Buffalo, Rochester and Pittsburg R. R., and affects about 10,000 miners and laborers. The terms are a substantial victory for the miners.

Brakeman Killed.

Toronto, July 12.—Jolted from the top of a car, W. D. Law, a brakeman, was killed in the freight yards at Orangeville at 3 o'clock yesterday morning. Law's home was at Credit Forks. He was brakeman on a freight train running out of Toronto Junction yards.

Indemnity Exempt.

Brockville, July 12.—The county judge has given a decision in the appeal of George Taylor, M. P., against the assessment of his sessional indemnity, holding that it is not assessable.

INTELLIGENCER JOB OFFICE

FOR CHEAP AND ARTISTIC WORK.

Daily Intelligencer.

Mr. Whitney and His Colleagues.

Naturally, perhaps, many Liberal papers in this province, which have suffered a little in revenue through the Ross Government being kicked out of office, have indulged in much abuse of the Premier, Hon. Mr. Whitney, and his colleagues. But it has remained for only one paper, the Guelph Mercury, to charge them with lack of ability and strength, whatever other faults their opponents might profess to find in them. The Mercury says;

> "There is no more cohesiveness in the ministerial mass than there is in a sand heap. The Whitney Ministry stand self-confessed a group of weaklings."

Replying to the above, the Guelph Herald, which is edited by Mr. Joseph Downey, M.P.P., makes the following very conclusive and pertinent answer;

> One might question the Mercury's justification for the statement that the Ontario Cabinet lacks cohesiveness On every matter, administrative or legislative, that has so far been presented, the Cabinet has been a unit. There has never been a suggestion of the cliques or cabals, the divisions or bickerings which have revealed themselves so painfully outside the Council Chamber at Ottawa. Union and harmony and mutual dependence and esteem have so far characterized the attitude of the Ontario ministers to each other, as far as those who enjoy their confidence have been able to observe. But possibly the Mercury knows better than they.
> The declaration that "the Whitney Government stands self-confessed a group of weaklings" has a familiar ring to it. It carries us back to the days when another group, a group of Heaven-born statesmen were in office. Then we were assured by these very statesmen that for the ores in the mines, the crops in the fields, the flocks on the hills, we were, in a large measure, indebted to them. They were fathers of the people in the true sense of the term, generous, indulgent and always paternal. Dire things would happen it, in a moment of weakness, the people dispensed with the services of these good men, for Whitney and his associates were "a group of weaklings." Well, the people didn't believe these self-declared patriots. The people concluded the Ross Government had lost all right to public confidence, and hurled them from office. Instead of the predicted disaster gratifying results have followed. Quietly, smoothly and efficiently the public service has gone on. Public confidence has been restored. Business methods have been introduced into the management of our institutions. The public domain has been protected, and in some instances reclaimed from the spoilsmen; graft and concession are at an end. The laws of the land have been enforced, poolrooms have been closed; hotel-keepers compelled to live up to the regulations. The numbered ballot has been abolished, and every British subject allowed to exercise his franchise as he pleases. Into the Education Department new life has been infused; an honest effort has been made to lift the teaching profession onto a higher plane and solve the great problem of education in the rural sections. Toronto University, languishing for so many years, has been placed on a solid financial basis, and raised forever above the partizan direction and back stair influence which have been its bane. The door has been opened to the obtaining of cheap power by municipalities, and an effective check placed upon the huge monopoly which the Ross Government created. A new railway law to meet the new conditions which electrical development has created has been passed, and a just, simple and inexpensive tribunal created for the settlement of differences between corporations and municipalities. And so on through every department of the public service. Honesty in administration; progressiveness in legislation have been stamped on the record of the Whitney Government.

Time Was Limited.

The average woman thinks the stars and sun would cease to shine sooner than that they should interfere with the regular routine of household duties. A London woman was recently informed by her physician that she would have to have an operation performed. She said she didn't see how she could; that Monday was wash day, Tuesday ironing day. Wednesday the Missionary Society met, Thursday was the day to clean up, Friday to bake, Saturday to give the children their baths and mend. If she could get it on Sunday after dinner, and before evening services, perhaps she would try it.

Sore Nipples.

A cure may be effected by applying Chamberlain's Salve as soon as the child is done nursing. Wipe it off with a soft cloth before allowing the child to nurse. Many trained nurses use this salve with the best results. Price 25 cents per box. To be had at R. Templeton & Co.'s drug store.

TIMELY TOPICS.

The Glorious Twelfth.

Remember how it rained last year, when the boys walked in this city.

Hurrah! for King William and his horse which was able to walk on two legs.

Anyhow, according to the pictures we see of King William these days, his charger did most of its walking that way.

They say that, hoping to obtain something on which to use his "fish set," which was presented by his admiring colleagues on a recent day in June, our worthy Mayor went fishing yesterday afternoon. "Did the fish bite?" he was asked afterwards. "None of 'em bit me," said His Worship.

The Marshal's horse, in the Orange procession, gave a convulsive jump when the big drum boomed this a. m., showing that it was no blood relation of the noble steed that bore King William at the Boyne. It would have taken more than a Belleville band to make His late lamented Majesty's horse try the 23 act.

They've been having a grave-yard picnic up Galt way. The scheme was to get people to meet in the graveyard, having their lunches with them. Then, during intervals of the conversation, they cut the grass and otherwise tidied up the graveyard.

Wouldn't that be a great scheme to try in connection with the old Dundas street burying ground? The d. s. b. g., we are told, sadly needs a little dusting and a few other embellishments.

A Parisian, a man of honor though very fat, walked half a mile to fight a duel. He was in such condition when the field of glory was reached that the attending physician decided that it would be suicidal for him to make any further exertions. So the affair was called off and the fat one was the hero of the reconciliation banquet. First thing you know someone will be catching cold at a French duel.

The following, from a leading U. The City Council of St. Catharines has inaugurated an era of "business methods" in carrying on the city's affairs. In looking over the city pay roll the aldermen discovered that St. Catharines was paying out more every year in salaries of city officials than any other place of its size in the land. A special committee was appointed to look into the matter thoroughly and ascertain if all the officials employed were necessary. Hitherto a city engineer and a waterworks superintendent have been employed, but these offices are to be combined, one man filling both. The city clerk is under suspension by the mayor for alleged inattention to duties, and a new city clerk is to be appointed. They must have a "Civic Improvement Club" in St. Kitts.

In to-day's Globe and Mail and Empire the Minister of Education, Hon Dr. Pyne, is quoted as saying that a decision has not yet been reached as to the sites of the new normal schools. It would appear that some towns have been crowing a little too quickly. Belleville's chances are good yet.

Canada's Claim to Physical Supremacy.

Many English papers have quoted our statement—says "Canada"—that "the Canadian is to-day the heaviest and strongest man of all the white races." A gentleman who has lived several years in Canada, and had many opportunities of contrasting his inhabitants with those of other lands, writes that he could quite endorse the above opinion. He had often been struck when in Toronto by the number of tall and fine-looking men, and when the Canadian contingent of volunteers was got together for the South African war they had no difficulty whatever in getting men well over the standard of 5 ft. 7 in. In Ontario the average height is about 5 ft. 8 in., and in Nova Scotia it is somewhat higher. As regards height alone the Canadian is thus apparently on a level with the men of Great Britain, where the average is as follows:

	ft.	in.
England	5	7
Scotland	5	8
Ireland	5	8
Wales	5	8

The tallest men in Europe are in the southwest corner of Scotland—Ayr, Aigton, Kirkcudbright, and Dumfries—where the average is 5 ft. 10 in.: and a line drawn across the map to this point from Norfolk will divide the men with the greater number of inches from their shorter brethren, who occupy the southern half. In other nations the average heights are as follows:

	ft.	in.
France	5	5
Germany	5	6
Italy	5	3
Russia	5	4 1-2
Spain	5	5
Scandinavia	5	6
Finisterre	5	4

Precocious Fox.

Charles James Fox is probably the only man who ever made a maiden speech in the commons while still a youth in his teens. He was nineteen when he took his seat for Midhurst, and within a few months he had made three excellent speeches. And yet even at this early age Fox used frequently to sit up all night drinking and gambling.

New Hair

Ayer's Hair Vigor makes the hair grow because it is a hair-food. Feed the hair-bulbs, and the hair grows. That's nature's way, and that is all there is to it. Strong and healthy hair stays in, keeps soft and smooth, and grows thick and heavy. Then aid nature with Ayer's Hair Vigor. A little of it often does great things. There's genuine comfort in a handsome head of hair! J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

Mr. George Leach Died This Morning

WAS WELL KNOWN AND HIGHLY RESPECTED BY MANY CITIZENS.

Mr. George Leach, who resided in the 2nd concession of Thurlow, just outside of the city limits, died at an early hour this morning.

Deceased, who was 75 years of age, was born at Brighton, Eng. He had lived in this vicinity about 35 years, and was well known and highly esteemed. Deceased had been ill for some time with stomach trouble. Mr. Leach was a member of Emmanuel Reformed Episcopal Church. An aged widow and a family of two sons and two daughters survive. The sons are Walter, of Alexandria, Iowa, and Arthur, of St. Catharines, and the daughters Mrs. Schaffer, of Mayville, N.Y., and Miss Leach, at home. The sympathy of a large circle of friends will be extended to the family in this their hour of affliction.

DANDRUFF CAUSED BY A GERM.

A New Discovery That Kills The Germ and Prevents Baldness.

Pretty near all the hair preparations for dandruff have some merit in allaying itching of the scalp, and in being a fairly good dressing for the hair, but there is only one that recognizes what causes dandruff, falling hair, and baldness, and that is Newbro's Herpicide. This germ eats its way into the scalp, it digs up the scalp into little white scales. Unless it is destroyed there's no permanent stopping of falling hair and cure of dandruff and baldness. Newbro's Herpicide kills the germ. "Destroy the cause, you remove the effect." Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

A WOMAN'S WAY.

(Baltimore Sun.)

The world is full of heroines
  Whose bravery none can doubt;
In circuses they face the lions,
  At home put thieves to rout,
But when the storm has passed away,
  The trouble disappears,
Why is it that they always say:
  "She then burst forth in tears?"

A sudden panic thrills the school,
  The children rush to death;
The gentle teacher, calm and cool,
  Controls them with her breath.
But when the horrid fear is quelled,
  The tumult once more sleeps,
Why is it, by some force impelled,
  She "sits right down and weeps!"

The fire is burning in the mill,
  The terror stricken run
To dash pell mell across the sill
  And perish every one.
A woman leaps before their path;
  They stop, in ordered streams,
They file to safety from death's wrath,
  While she sits down and screams!

I guess, from Helen, fair, of Troy,
  Unto Joan of Arc,
'Twas ever woman's way of joy
  To move in mysteries dark,
No doubt, when Molly Pitcher, bold,
  In battle's blood was painted,
She left her daring deed of gold
  And went right home and fainted.

Already over 60 lives are reported lost as the result of Uncle Sam's 4th of July celebration, a result which bids fair to break all previous records of the kind. The casualty list is 1000 greater than a year ago. It is early yet for the list of deaths from tetanus or lockjaw to be made up, but it is being heard from.

The Toronto Globe was authority for the report that friction existed between the Government and Earl Grey on the distribution of honors. Sir Wilfrid Laurier says there is no truth in the story. Is it possible, asks the London Free Press, The Globe no longer enjoys the confidence of the Ottawa Cabinet?

Dan Kelly, a long lank, red-haired youth of twenty-three, living in Portland, Ore., has distinguished himself by three feats of physical prowess, two of which, the running feats, would thirty years ago have been called impossible. Kelly is credited with running 100 yards in 9 3-5 seconds; with doing 220 yards in 21 1-5 seconds; with covering 24 feet 2 1-2 inches in the broad jump. There may have been other runners in the past naturally "just as good" as Kelly, but lacking his drill. It is science and training that break records.

It is an old saying, and a true one, remarks a Yankee paper, that it is easier to get into bad habits than good ones, and hard to break off a bad habit once acquired. It does not follow that a child who is allowed much liberty and runs the streets at night always makes a bad man or woman. There are exceptions to all rules. But it is an exceedingly dangerous school, that of the street, and has brought more sorrow and anguish to parents' hearts than any other one thing. It leads almost inevitably to the pool room, saloon, cheap dance halls, disreputable houses and ruin. A great deal has been said against the curfew law as puritanical and unnecessary, but a reasonable curfew law would mean in the end thousands of happier homes, less work for police, courts, penal institutions and expense to taxpayers.

The dangers of athletics in excess have been recognized by others besides Dr. Robert E. Coughlin, but he has put the results into concrete form. Of 128 deaths among athletes last year, 50 were due to disease and 78 to accident. Cerebro-spinal meningitis was the direct cause of death in 9 cases; heart disease in 8; pneumonia in 7; pulmonary tuberculosis in 7; Bright's disease in 5; appendicitis in 4; typhoid fever in 4; suicide in 2; apoplexy in 1; tonsilitis in 1; splenic anaemia in 1; senility in 1. The accidents arose from football in 28 cases; baseball in 12; horseracing in 9 boxing in 6; gymnasium feats in 3; auto-driving in 2; gold, hammer-throwing, bicycle coasting, handball, polo and wrestling being responsible about equally for the other fatalities. The average age at death from disease was 31; from accident, 26 years 1 month. The conclusion are that athletes are exceptionally liable to heart lesions. fatal complication of pneumonia with heart trouble, infectious disease, and pulmonary tuberculosis, that they average much shorter life than other persons, and that American football is especially dangerous.

Aaron Burr In Prison.

Even to his jailer Burr was the grand seigneur whose rights there was none to dispute.

"I hope, sir," ventured that official at their first encounter, "that it would not be disagreeable to you if I should lock this door after dark."

"By no means," graciously returned the prisoner. "I should prefer it to keep out intruders."

"It is our custom, sir," continued the turnkey, "to extinguish all lights at 9 o'clock. I hope, sir, you will have no objection to conform to that."

"That, sir," answered Burr, "I am sorry to say is impossible, for I never go to bed until 12 and always burn two candles."

"Very well, sir—just as you please," agreed the jailer. "I should have been glad if it had been otherwise, but as you please, sir."—Frederick Trevor Hill in Harper's Magazine.

Birds' Spring Wedding Clothes.

There are a number of birds that put on fresh, bright beautiful clothes for their spring weddings. These birds, when they mate, change their sober dress of gray or brown for plumes of gold and scarlet. Thus the warrior bird of Germany puts on for the mating season a ruff of many bright hues, while the female dons a cape of white. The grebe's wedding dress is two tufts of brilliant blue feathers. They stand like horns upon his head. They enhance his beauty greatly. The gnat catcher is a dull brown bird, but in the spring his plumes turn a beautiful green. The fire weaver's wedding dress is the most splendid of all. This bird, a sober fellow in the winter, wears when he takes a wife a dress of bright red.

Diving For a Wife.

In many of the Greek islands diving for sponges forms a considerable part of the occupation of the inhabitants. The natives make it a trade to gather these, and their income from this source is far from contemptible. In one of the islands a girl is not permitted to marry until she has brought up a certain number of sponges and given proof of her skill by taking them from a certain depth. But in some of the islands this custom is reversed. The father of a marriageable daughter bestows her on the best diver among her suitors. He who can stay longest in the water and bring up the biggest cargo of sponges marries the maid.

Whistler Saved Him.

A certain famous English poet whose name the reader must be left to fill in for himself was once threatened with expulsion from a swell London club for dancing a fandango upon the silk hats of other members. James MacNeill Whistler, however, interposed and saved him with his eloquence. One man of genius, Mr. Whistler urged, was worth any number of silk hats, seeing that silk hats could be replaced and men of genius could not. Then and not till then the irate committee reconsidered its decision and accepted the apology which was tendered.

It is the privilege of posterity to set matters right between those antagonists who by their rivalry for greatness divided a whole age.—Addison.

HAMLIN GARLAND

COPYRIGHT, 1903, BY HAMLIN GARLAND

"The boys will come in soon, and then you can go to bed and rest. I'm sorry to trouble you. You can go now. I'm all right," he said.

"I shall not leave you," she firmly replied.

"You're mighty good," he said simply.

The night wore on interminably. At a little past 3, faint and far, arose the cheerful crowing of a cock. Her heart burned with joy—the morning was near! As she waited the light came and voices, faint and far away, touched her ear, and then slowly, moving in a disorderly squad, the weary fighters of flames came riding down the slope and across the meadow.

The herders did not ride up to the house, as she expected them to do, but turned aside toward the stables, and she could hear them as they dropped their saddles and turned their tired ponies loose. "Surely they will come now." Then all was still save the crowing of the cocks and that sad howling of the wolf on the hill.

Unable to endure the suspense, she tiptoed across the floor and hurried out toward the corrals, her heart in her throat with fear of the body on the floor. She ran as silently as possible, as if to avoid rousing some fierce animal, and was close upon the men before they saw her.

"What's that?" she heard one quick, keen voice cry out.

Then each man rose from the heap of blankets wherein he lay curled like an arctic dog.

Ann answered them breathlessly. "Come to the house, quick. Mr. Raymond is shot!"

Their responses were like bullets: "Shot! Who shot him?"

"Some one fired out of the darkness—he was standing in the doorway. I'm all alone. He must have help!"

"Where's Watson?"

"Gone for the doctor."

Shaking loose from his bed, Baker started on the run for the house, but Ann cried out sharply: "Wait! Go quietly. You must not excite him." And, walking beside him, she returned to the house, and in a sort of daze the other herders silently followed. The jangle of Baker's big spurs, familiar and penetrating, called Raymond to a knowledge of his surroundings.

He turned his head and looked at the men in a way that made them shrink and asked: "How's the fire? Did you stop it?"

Baker replied, "Yes, we got her under."

Raymond half closed his eyes. "I'm glad you're here. This lady needs a rest. Somebody did for me. Baker, you and Jones and Skuttle stay here. Perry, you saddle a horse and get Abe and his wife. Miss Rupert, you go to bed; the boys will look after me now. I can't let you wear yourself out for me."

But Ann could not so easily be put aside from her plain duty. "No, I will stay till the doctor comes."

At last, when the wounded man was lying comfortably on a thick pile of blankets and the white light of the morning filled the cabin, Ann yielded to his entreaties, went to her room and threw herself down upon her bed with a sense of having put all her caseful, careless girlhood behind her. It was as if she had suddenly been flung into a gray and bitter sea far from shore.

Louis, who had been roused by the return of the herders and who sat watching their slow and painfully cautious handling of the sufferer with the mute, unemotional gaze of a sleepy kitten, followed his sister into the inner room and stood in silence till his bewilderment left him and his perplexity crystallized into words. Then he said:

"Jupiter! I didn't know you could do such things. What do you think? Is he going to die?"

"I don't know, laddie. I hope not. I've done all I can."

Ann must have dropped asleep thereafter, for when she woke the horizontal rays of the flaming sun filled the room and the loud and hearty voice of a woman could be heard out in the kitchen. Her words came distinctly to Ann's ears. "Now, Rob, you've got me to deal with. I'll cuff your ears if you don't do as I say. You've got to eat to keep your strength up."

Ann rose hastily, but paused before the closed door with a new and singular timidity. The coming of another woman made her own position embarrassing. With a return of resolution she opened the door and met the big gray eyes of a tall, broad shouldered, slatternly woman, who stood over Raymond with a bowl of steaming broth in her hand. She was neither deft nor dainty, but Ann perceived that she was capable and good tempered, a natural nurse, experienced in the ways of the border.

"Good morning," she called, and her inflections and many of her phrases were masculine. "You must 'a' had a right hard night of it. Friend of the Barnetts, Rob tells me."

Her familiarity and the essential commonness of her tone repelled Ann, who asked, with cool dignity, "Can I do anything?"

"Not a thing. I'm Mrs. Scribbins, Rob's nighest neighbor. We come a-runnin' the moment we heerd of this thing, for Rob's a mighty good man and neighbor."

Ann repented and held out her hand. "I'm glad to see you, Mrs. Scribbins. I'm Miss Rupert, and this is my brother." She turned to Louis, who had crept to her side, pale and silent.

Mrs. Scribbins shook hands, carefully guarding her broth. "I don't see how you kept Rob down. I've had to just about throttle him once or twice since I came. He's a headstrong cuss and hates being bossed or nussed."

"Has the doctor come?"

"Good Lord, no! But I've sent Abe up the road. That fool Watson is more'n likely to get lost and never get in. Even if he did he couldn't get a doctor here before noon, and that Wallace doctor ain't worth the powder to blow him up anyway. We need a bone doctor from Valley Springs. As soon as Don Barnett hears of this he'll come a-runnin' with the best there is in the Springs."

Raymond lay on his pile of blankets, his face expressionless as that of a dead man, but his eyes called to the girl, and she bent to ask, "Are you better?"

His lips moved a little. She bowed lower, and he whispered, "Yes—bring Don"—

"They have gone for him."

"They must hurry." Then he added, "Don't leave me."

With a conviction that he knew he was about to die, she spoke, and her tone was tense with a desire to help him. "I will not leave you. Do not worry."

He closed his eyes again and lay so still, so breathless, it seemed that he had entered upon the last coma, beyond the reach of any medicine.

Louis, awed quite out of his sprightly self, drew Ann aside and whispered, "How is he?"

"He is worse. Oh, I wish the doctor would come!"

"The boys say that big, speckled faced fellow did it. He had it in for Mr. Raymond. Do you know, Perry, the Mexican boy, took a horse and was going to chase them up, but the boys wouldn't let him. They've sent word to the railway, and they'll have Speckle before night. Uncle Don said that these fellows were only hired men, but seems to me they're a good deal like the old time cowboys."

CHAPTER VI.

BARNETT was at breakfast when a telegram was laid at his elbow by the maid. He opened it leisurely, thinking it some matter of business, but his hands stiffened as he read:

> Bob Raymond is shot. Send best doctor in town quick. WATSON.

For just a moment he sat in silence, then rose and walked slowly to his library. Seating himself before the little desk on which stood a movable telephone receiver, he began to "make things hum." He reached his friend, Dr. Braide, and set him in motion. He ordered out his racing automobile. He telegraphed Watson to take fresh horses and return by way of Junction and get the best doctor there. "Burn the air as you go," he added.

After giving orders for his valise to be packed he walked up to Mrs. Barnett's room and kissed her good morning without betraying his excitement.

"I'm going out to the ranch," he said. "The boys are having trouble with the hay, and I want to see how they're coming on. You won't mind, will you?"

"Of course not, Don. I'm going to be all right in a few hours. I'm glad you're going. You can bring Ann home. You should have gone with her yesterday."

"I see that now," he answered dryly. "It will be a startling world for her. Well, I'm off. Better stay in bed today. I'll be back by tomorrow night, I think."

When he took his seat in his big, flat, powerful auto car his face was set in grim lines. "Is she all right, Henry?" he asked of his engineer.

"In perfect order, sir."

"She needs to be. This is to be a record breaker."

With his big goggles over his eyes and his cap drawn low down on his forehead, Barnett seized the wheel, and the ponderous, panting organism began to move. Wheeling into the street, he let on the full power of the engine, and when he drew up at Braide's gate the mechanism was hot with speed, its joints oiled and frictionless—in racing trim.

Braide, a small, smiling, trig young fellow, came out. "What is it all about, Don?"

"Got your tools?"

He pointed at his bag. "Emergency kit."

"Then all aboard!"

Henry leaped out and caught up the bag, while the doctor climbed in beside Barnett on the front seat.

"This looks ominous. How much of a trip is it going to be?"

"Just a short run," answered Barnett as he swung the shining red bulk of the car into Mogalyon avenue, which led directly east over the plain.

Beneath their feet the puff and click of the piston and the pur of cogs grew each moment more furious until all sounds fused into a humming roar. The keen air of the morning smote the riders jovially. The flaming sunlight slanted upon them with growing heat, and backward, beneath them, the sod swept like a tawny carpet, while Barnett, watchful, intent, composed, worked the levers and valves with the skill of a practical engineer. When they had crossed the two railroads and were climbing the long, low ridge he casually remarked:

"My foreman, Raymond, is shot, and you've got to pull him through."

"Great Scott, Don, I can't afford the time! It'll take all day. If I'd known"—

"You'd have gone just the same," asserted Barnett calmly. The machine was again running swiftly. "You're here, and you daren't jump out, and you might as well enjoy yourself. This is to be a record run. I'm going to pull in by noon."

Braide was young and a man of red blood and shining eyes. "Very well; go it, old sport! I can stand it if you can. I'll make it a holiday and charge you double for every hour."

When they had reached the top of the pass between two pinon spotted hills the road could be seen for miles, driving straight into the mist of the mighty Missouri valley.

"It's all the way down grade from here to Omaha," remarked Barnett. "I could make the run in two hours, only I mustn't invite a breakdown."

"You seem to value your foreman."

"He's something more than my foreman. He's a splendid chap. You've met him—the fellow who went on the 'coyote drive' with us."

"Why, certainly I remember him. I've met him at the club. But he was very reticent. I didn't get at him. Who is he? How does he come to be your foreman?"

"He's a little slow about telling his own life story, but he's all right. I think I know the cause of this shooting. He got into trouble with a couple of fellows out there, and one of them has done him."

As they entered upon a particularly smooth stretch of road the man at the wheel relaxed his hold and said, with deep feeling: "I don't mind saying that I'm anxious about Rob. I've grown mighty fond of him. He's not one given to confidences, and I've respected his reticence. I don't know quite why he is here, but I trust him and count myself fortunate to have him on the place. He made $40,000 for me last year on hay and cattle, and must have a little bunch laid up for himself. I've felt for a year that I ought to put Rob into something better. I owed it to him. Now, if he dies"— He broke off and bent to his wheel to hide the emotion that made his lips quiver.

"I don't mind saying that I'm anxious about Bob."

It lacked ten minutes of noon as Barnett rose above the last great wave of the tawny sea and sighted the clump of cottonwoods in which his ranch buildings sat, and two minutes later he swept into the yard and up to the door amid a throng of singularly silent cowboys and ranchers. The first one to speak was Mrs. Scribbins, who exclaimed:

"Jerusalem the golden! You hain't come from home this mornin' in that doggone thunder cart, have ye?"

"That's what. How's Rob?"

"Quiet as mice; but I hope ye brought help."

Barnett rose from his seat stiffly and climbed painfully down, while Braide seized his case of tools and hurried into the cabin.

Barnett, feeling a small hand gripping his arm, turned to meet Louis. "Hello," said he. "How is Ann?"

"She's all right. She saved Bob's life," answered the boy.

Ann, who stood just outside the door, answered very quietly: "I am quite well. How is Jeannette?"

"I left her feeling very well. But tell me the truth, is Rob dying?"

"No," said Ann. "But he needs help. He was shot last evening and has lain all night in pain. He is very weak now."

Barnett hurried into the hot dusk of the ranch house, smelling of the dinner, which was cooking, and bent above his foreman.

"Hello, Rob! How do you feel?"

Raymond whispered, "Oh, I'm all right; a little weak"—

The doctor interposed. "Clear the room of everybody but this woman." He indicated Mrs. Scribbins. "We must find this bullet."

Barnett turned to the men who filled the doorway. "Clear out, boys; the doctor wants to be alone now."

Raymond smiled a little. "The bullet went on. It's in the wall somewhere."

Barnett came to the door and said to Ann: "You better go out under the trees and rest. You look tired."

"I will stay if I can be of any use."

"We don't need you. Mrs. Scribbins will help us. Please go. Louis, take her away till this is over."

Released from her benumbing load of responsibility, Ann laid her hand on her brother's arm. "Come, Louis," and together they went out along the little winding path which led to the spring.

"What do you suppose they will do to him?" asked Louis.

Ann turned sick. "Oh, I don't know! Don't speak of it! It's too horrible!"

When they re-entered the cabin Barnett met them with a smile. "The doctor says Rob's all right. He insists that Ann saved his life. You poor girl! What a night that boy let you in for! I didn't know till ten minutes ago that you were here all alone and that Jones and his wife had vamoosed. I hope you'll forgive me, Ann."

"Oh, I blame no one but myself," she wearily replied. "I shouldn't have come to this miserable, ghastly region."

"Rob wants to see you. Will you come in and speak to him?"

Ann reluctantly followed Barnett into the inner room where Raymond, with his wounds dressed and limbs properly clothed, lay stretched on the bed. He was very pale, but his eyes were calm and quiet. He reached a feeble right hand toward her, saying painfully: "You've been mighty good to me. By and by I will try to thank you. Without you I would have bled to death."

"I beg you not to give it a moment's thought. I did very little," Ann coldly replied.

His eyes were round and soft and appealing, like those of a big wounded dog. "Don't leave me now. I want you"—

She glanced at the young doctor, who stood listening. He nodded as if to say, "Grant his request." And so she put his hand away gently as if the clinging fingers were those of a sleeping babe and said, with a return of pity: "I will stay till tomorrow. Now please go to sleep."

He closed his eyes under her palm, and tears of gratitude came stealing down from his brown lashes. For the moment she forgot that she had known him but a day; that she, too, was a stranger—far removed from him in every thought and purpose—and consented to stay because he clung to her and needed her. A hand seized her throat, and an emotion which alienated her from her old self rose within her bosom and for a moment frightened her. In the end it irritated her, this pity, and yet it could not be shaken off. A deeper self which she had not known insisted that she keep her word to the wounded man, and so for two days she oscillated between a pitying tenderness for him and a disgust and bitterness with herself and her weakness.

On the third day Braide pronounced his patient out of danger, and then Ann's pity died.

"I am going home," she said to Louis, "and you must go with me. They are going to take the foreman to the Springs, and I cannot leave you here."

Ann said goodby to the wounded man in Barnett's presence, and a sense of irritation caused her to be very distant with him.

"I hope you will soon be able to be removed," she said, evading his glance. "This is a distressing place in which to be sick, and now I must say goodby."

He took her hand in both of his. "I shall miss you, but I won't ask you to stay any longer. You've been very sweet and helpful to me, and I hate to have you go. You will let me see you again, won't you?"

"My cousin intends to take you to his house as soon as you can be moved," she answered formally. "No doubt we shall meet again there."

"I will live in hope of that," he answered gallantly.

CHAPTER VII.

ONCE more in Valley Springs, Ann's old self returned, and the scenes through which she had passed became as unreal as the happenings of a dream, but her sense of injury deepened into dislike of Raymond and the life he represented. Therefore she took care not to see him as he was borne into Barnett's house. "He is nothing to me, and I must decline to be troubled by him further," she said as she was dressing to go out.

Mrs. Barnett, however, was waiting and when the carriage in which he lay came to the door hastened to take his hand in both of hers and make him welcome. "I'm glad you came, Rob. We are going to have you out in a few days. How do you feel?"

In his weak state he could only boyishly say: "Oh, I'm on the up grade! You and Don are mighty good to me."

Thereafter Raymond abandoned himself to the joy of traveling back to life along such ways of wanton luxury as he had never known. He permitted himself to be waited upon, even by

Advertising Talk

WHEN TO QUIT.

An English journal requested a number of its largest advertisers to give their opinions concerning the best time to stop advertising, and the following replies were received:

When the population ceases to multiply and the generations that crowd on after you and never heard of you stop coming on.

When you have convinced everybody whose life will touch yours that you have better goods and lower prices than they can get anywhere else.

When you stop making fortunes right in your sight solely through the direct use of the mighty agent.

When you forget the words of the shrewdest and most successful men concerning the main cause of their prosperity.

When younger and fresher houses in your line cease starting up and using the trade journals in telling people how much better they can do for them than you can.

When you would rather have your own way and fail than to take advice and win.—Newspaperdom.

A big advertisement may make a great splash, but the water soon gets smooth; it's the little ripples constantly moving that tell in the end.

It's a wise salesman who knows when to talk and when to stop talking. Cultivate tact.

Reiteration, perseverence, sticktotiveness—these are the qualities which make success in business.

Advertising is the strenuous servant of a strenuous age. It is the power behind the success of every successful business enterprise.—Printer's Ink.

ANOTHER CITY TO ADVERTISE.

An advertising appropriation of $5,000 has been raised in Columbus, Ga., and will be spent in municipal publicity. Magazines and a few leading newspapers are to be used. The idea originated with the officials of the newly formed Columbus Power Co., which has acquired the magnificent water power of the Chattahoochee River north of Columbus. In the advertisement the fact that electric power is offered for sale at $15 per horse power per annum will be emphasized. It is claimed that no other manufacturing centre in America sells power so cheap.—Press and Printer.

ADVERTISING MOULDS PUBLIC OPINION.

Leaving out the question of the merits of the case, the efforts of the Atlantic Telephone company to obtain a franchise to operate an independent telephone system in New York City and the New York Telephone company to keep out this competition, bring to the fore the means which both the interested parties have taken to accomplish their object.

Both parties realize that to fulfil their ambitions they must have public opinion on their side and both have adopted the same method of obtaining it.

For several days the metropolitan dailies have printed advertisements of each company, varying in size from a tenth to a full page, in which each company has presented its case to the public. Both display and reading advertisements have been used profusely. The information contained in this publicity is of the most forceful sort, including testimony from mayors of cities all over the country, together with that of prominent business men in these cities.

It is an eloquent testimonial to the efficacy of advertising in general, and of newspaper advertising in particular, for it shows that advertising does mould public opinion and that newspaper advertising does it in the shortest possible time.

It also shows to a nicety that all advertising whether used as in the above instance or to sell goods is an effort to mould the public opinion to the advertiser's way of thinking.—Schenectady, N.Y., Union.

POINTED PARAGRAPHS.

Ignorance may not be bliss, but it is often contentment.

Everybody has trouble of some kind. What is the nature of yours?

The average wish is about as valuable as the check of a bankrupt.

People are confronted every day with little problems and do not know what to do with them.

Some men's idea of perseverance is to see how long they can cherish ill feeling for some real or fancied grievance.

No matter how busy a man is he thinks he isn't wasting time if he takes an hour to prove he was right in a most trifling question.

After you have worked hard and saved your money it makes you mad to be approached by a man who has spent his and be invited to go into a scheme that is solely for his benefit.

Queer Drummers.

"There's a story," said a drummer, "about a commercial traveler whose line was tunnels and post holes for fences. Him I never met. I did meet once, though, a drummer selling iron churches and suspension bridges. Another time I met a drummer who said his line was pupils. What did he mean by pupils? He meant, I found, glass eyes for stuffed animals, for dolls and for human beings. One of this man's favorite amusements was to open his sample case and ask the people present to pick out the eye that best matched their own. The people made awful mistakes in this, for nobody, it seems, knows the color of his own eyes."

BUTTONS TELL OF HISTORY.

Discoveries In Old Fort George Present Some New Facts.

A very valuable collection of military buttons belonging to Mr. Richard Taylor was in the Historical room for some years, says Miss Carnahan, president of the Niagara Historical Society, writing in the Niagara-on-the-Lake Times, but for some time we have been without anything of much value in this direction, but last week a collection of buttons, belt buckles, etc., most of them found at Fort George, has been placed in the room. The first named collection might be said to represent the military history of Niagara, as almost every regiment, British, American or Canadian, ever stationed here, was represented. The present collectiotn is not so complete, but has many interesting features. The buttons most frequently found are those of the 41st Regiment, 100th and Artillery. This was the 100th disbanded in 1818, not the 100th formed in 1858. The buttons of the 49th, Brock's regiment, are more rare.

Tells of History.

The six months' occupation by the Americans is attested by buttons with U. S. and Infantry and Artillery buttons. A very fine belt buckle of the 93rd Regiment has very conspicuous the Scottish thistle. Another sent by mail has the Sphinx, Egypt, Java, Niagara, but no number, and on looking up an army list it was found that the 89th Regiment, which suffered so heavily at Lundy's Lane, is entitled to these honors. Four regiments bear on their standards the word Niagara.

From India, Too.

Some time ago, when the circular in aid of Memorial Hall was sent to the colonels of regiments which had been stationed at Niagara, a letter was received from the commanding officer of the 70th Surrey, then in India, stating that he did not think that regiment had ever been in Niagara, but that their records were very incomplete and he would be glad of any information. In the register of St. Mark's were found births, marriages and burials of the 70th regiment.

Sir Walter's Brother.

A rather curious piece of information was found in an article published in the Buffalo historical publications that a traveler at Niagara in 1817, met Paymaster Scott, of the 70th regiment, a brother of Sir Walter Scott, and that he was supposed to be the writer of the Waverley Novels instead of Sir Walter. A letter was sent containing this information and a generous contribution of £2 was received for our fund. A letter with the words 70th Surrey which had lain at Fort George since 1817, was sent and a letter of thanks in answer, stating that it would be mounted for ornament on return to England.

Butler's Rangers.

The buttons of Butler's Rangers, disbanded in 1784, are now rare and still more so are those of the Queen's Rangers, the regiment of Col. John Graves Simcoe, our first governor. The Royal Canadian Volunteers, Canadian Regiment, and Royal Newfoundland Regiment all belong to the period of the war of 1812, as also does the King's 8th. The buttons of the 76th Regiment have the figure of an elephant and the word Hindostan. The King's Dragoon Guards, here in 1837, have the letters K. D. G. and the Royal Canadian Rifles have a bugle on each button.

Had No Number.

Any additional buttons will be gladly received, so that the collection may be made more complete. It is singular that the buttons on the coat of Major Campbell, lately given, have no number. He was a prisoner with Cornwallis in 1781 and afterwards belonged to the Royal Fusiliers and 5th Regiment, etc. The history of the British army as shown in buttons will be found interesting.

The Assistant Receiver-General.

Mr. David Creighton, Assistant-Receiver-General, who for fifteen years represented North Grey in the Provincial Legislature, and who participated in the celebration of the jubilee of Owen Sound's incorporation recently, is a native of Glasgow, Scotland, though of Irish parentage. He was born in the Scotch city April 1, 1843, and came to Canada with his parents in 1855. From 1864 up to his retirement from the journalistic field, Jan. 1, 1896, Mr. Creighton was editor and proprietor of The Owen Sound Times. In 1887 he was entrusted by the late Sir John Macdonald with the task of forming a stock company for the purpose of publishing a daily official organ in Toronto, the result being The Empire, the first number of which appeared Dec. 27, 1887. This paper continued to be published until the arrangement in February, 1895, by which it and The Mail both ceased publication, that a new paper, The Mail and Empire, might take its place. Mr. Creighton sat in the Legislature from 1875 to 1890, when he was defeated by Mr. Cleland of Meaford, the Liberal candidate. It was on May 10, 1895, that Mr. Creighton was appointed Assistant Receiver-General.

Risks Life to Save Guides.

W. W. Little, electrical engineer of the Dayton Hydraulic Co., Chicago, and Dr. C. H. Riggs, of Toronto, who recently returned home from a trout fishing trip on the Nipigon River, tell of an adventure that befell Mr. Little and two Indian guides. The canoe from which Mr. Little was fishing was upset, in the excitement of landing a fish, a short distance above Portage Island falls, which drops seventy-five feet. The guides could not swim, but Mr. Little managed by hard work to get them to the overturned canoe, which was drifting fast towards the falls, where almost certain death awaited them. Dr. Riggs and his two guides had witnessed the accident from a distance and hurried to the rescue, which they accomplished at the risk of their own lives. Mr. Little could have saved himself at the time of the accident, but risked his own life to save his guides. A log sent over the falls later to see what happened to it took seven minutes to appear outside of the boiling waters at the foot of the falls.

A BEAVER FARM.

Unique Spot In the West Where the Rodents Representing Canada Chew Down Fifty Trees Nightly.

Far in the wild West, more than two days' run from Montreal, Toronto, and other eastern centres of trade and commerce, and far from our own firesides, in the wide rolling province of Saskatchewan, there is one of the most unique farms in Canada. It is no less than a beaver colony, where hundreds of the busy chaps, who are as much a national emblem as the maple leaf, are reared and live without fear of harm either from white man or red.

The town of Oxbow is in the southeast corner of Saskatchewan, near the United States boundary line, and is situated on the Souris River 256 miles from Winnipeg, the half-way house of the continent. Near the town is the farm of W. E. Chrismas, who owns a section and three-quarters, which is 1,120 acres of land. Through this farm the Souris River winds its way right and left for about two miles, and there it is that the colony of workers live and thrive. Within the limits of the farm are five dams built by the beavers, now over two hundred in number. The banks of the river are fringed with a splendid growth of poplar trees, which furnish the beaver with timber for his building operations, as well as with his daily bread.

Illegal to Kill Beavers.

According to game laws passed by the Legislature of the Northwest Territories in 1898, it is illegal to kill or injure any beaver until 1908; consequently they are multiplying, replenishing, and waxing fat, and by the time the season opens there will be many pelts for the trapper if the animals have not sooner taken themselves off to a new stamping ground. Having been protected for the last ten years from rifle and trap, the beavers of this farm have naturally grown very tame, and they work steadily in building dams and houses under the water. For the most part they labor by the light of the moon, and while the world sleeps a curious sight may be seen by anyone who cares to sit up and watch the colony at their work. It is necessary, of course, that one should keep out of sight in the long grass and under the brushes, and above all to keep perfectly still, as the slightest sound would alarm these denizens of the water world.

Cut Down Fifty-Two Trees.

One night they cut down fifty-two trees, as vouched for by Mr. Chrismas, who takes a great deal of interest in his little tenants, and does all in his power to preserve them from harm. And while the subject of work is up it may be said that they have no use for one who shirks his duty. Near every new settlement in the west, or in the woods and bluffs, are to be found some one or two living alone who are termed "bachelors," by the breed trappers. These are fellows who have been driven away from their pack on account of laziness, and who are trying to eke out an existence by living off the white man's flour barrel.

Work Very Quickly.

The beavers work very quickly, and it does not take them long to fell a good-sized tree. Once down, the tree is cut into different lengths for dams, houses or food. They are good judges of work too, as they can fell a tree in any direction they wish it to go. The house of the beaver is built in the river bank, the entrance to which is under the water. Once getting the entrance started, they dig inward and upward, so that when the flat is completed they are above the water line, and their habitation is dry, warm and cosy. Although they can stay under water for a time it is impossible for them to live there altogether, so the dens are built some distance from the bank, and a tunnel connects it with the deep water of the river.

Comes Four In a Litter.

A beaver family comes into the world full orbed, generally four to a litter, and its members live with the old folks for two years. After this the parents cut them adrift to shift for themselves and to set up housekeeping on their own account. The full grown beaver measures about two feet in length, with a tail ten inches, which he can use as a spade or trowel, as well as a paddle. The average age is fifteen years, although some have been known to live twenty. When the animal is in its ninth year the pelt is at is highest value, a good one fetching ten dollars.

The Evolution of One Orphan.

A few days ago George Francis Barnes, B. A., B. D., was installed as president of the Wesleyan University at Bloomington, Illinois. It has been ascribed to Napoleon I. that he said that every corporal in the French army, carried a Field Marshal's baton in his knapsack; and so in the case of Mr. Barnes, it may be paraphrased that any inmate of an orphans' home may become a college president. Twenty-eight years ago there landed in Hamilton an English family, poor in pocket, but rich in the number of children. The father and mother lived but a short time after arriving in Hamilton, and the children were thrown upon the charity of the world to care for them, as none were old enough to help the younger members of the family. The two younger boys were placed in the Bigelow Boys' Home, and the older children were provided with good homes, where they were clothed and educated. For two or three years Francis George Barnes enjoyed the care and protection of the home and received the rudiments of an education. Then he was placed with a good family away from Hamilton, where he remained until his term of apprenticeship ended. Young Barnes drifted out to the Western States, where he worked during the summer months for money to keep him during the winter, while he attended school. In course of time he entered a western college, from which he graduated with the honors of his class, and then entered the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was called to a professorship in one of the western Methodist colleges, and when elevated to the presidency remembered his foster home by inviting the matron of the Bigelow Home to attend his inauguration as president.

KICKING HORSE PASS.

Monument Just Erected to Its Discoverer, Sir James Hector—Sympathy in His Sorrow.

At Laggan, near the entrance of the Kicking Horse Pass, has just been erected a monument to Sir James Hector, the discoverer of that gap in the Rocky Mountains. It is the offering of geographers, geologists and other men of science in Canada and the United States, to whose contributions have been added those of men connected with the railway for which that pass affords a route. Standing at the opening of the defile he was the first to thread, and within sight of travelers on the passing trains of the C. P. R., the monument is located exactly where it ought to be, and is said to be in every way suitable. It is described as a beautiful and enduring product of the stone-worker's art. The material out of which it is made is a large-grain granite hewn from quarries in the Cascades range, a stone which the cutters and polishers can fashion to their taste, but which time and weather can scarcely crumble.

Sympathy In His Sorrow.

It is unusual to pay such a mark of honor to a distinguished man in his lifetime, but there was a particular reason for not waiting until Sir James Hector should pass away. He was in Canada three years ago, and, strange to say, the region which had been the scene of his hardships and achievements of nearly half a century earlier became a place of affliction for him. His son Douglas, a young man of 26, who had come with him on this visit, fell ill and died in the hospital at Revelstoke. It was a heavy blow. To this trip the aged explorer had no doubt looked forward with keen happiness. A swift and pleasant railway journey with his son across a continent he had painfully traversed twenty years before that son was born, and before the building of that railway was begun, must have promised him rare enjoyment. The natural grief he would in any case have felt at the loss of his son must have been intensified by the circumstances. This bereavement was made the occasion for the rearing of the monument, which stands to the memory of the son as well as of the father. It is a token both of gratitude for Sir James Hector's services and of sympathy in his sorrow.

The Palliser Expedition.

Nowhere is there a better account of Sir James Hector's services than in "The Selkirk Range," a book published by the Department of the Interior, the author being Mr. A. O. Wheeler, F. R. G. S., topographer of the department. In that valuable work is given the story of the Palliser expedition, sent out to British North America in 1857 to make a study of the interior and to report as to the advisableness of building a transcontinental railway through British territory. The geologist of the party was Dr. Hector, now Sir James Hector, who in after years and until quite recently was head of the Geological Survey of New Zealand. The field work of the party, which was acting under Royal Commission, covered a period of three years and extended over a great stretch of country, includig most of the present Dominion south of the Arctic slope, and between the Great Lakes and the Pacific Ocean. Capt. Palliser's map was the first detailed one that was ever prepared of any part of the Rocky Mountains. It is interesting to recall that in his report of 1863 Capt. Palliser disapproved the idea of a transcontinental railway. He said in part: "I therefore cannot recommend the Imperial Government to countenance or lend support to any scheme for constructing, or, it may be said, forcing a thoroughfare by this line of route, either by land or water, as there would be no immediate advantage commensurate with the required sacrifice of capital; nor can I advise such heavy expenditure as would necessarily attend the construction of an exclusively British line of road between Canada and Red River Settlement." Canada, of course, at that time was made up of what are to-day the Provinces of Quebec and Ontario.

Kicking Horse Pass.

Capt. Palliser was a topographer, not a statesman. He could not look a half century into the future to see the political map that has been made there on the basis of his physiographic map. Less than half a generation after he wrote, the construction of the C. P. R. was in progress, and its lines cover largely the course swept by the Palliser Commission's investigations. In one important respect it seemed destined to follow a route the Palliser expedition had not explored. From both sides construction was directed towards the Yellow Head Pass. In 1880 the project of the road was transferred by the Government to the present Canadian Pacific Railway Co., and the Kicking Horse Pass was eventually selected. Twenty-two years before (1858) Dr. Hector had discovered it. Unlike most of the mountain ways, it seems to have been unknown to the Indians. Ascending the Bow River to a point near Castle Mountain, he reached the head waters of the Vermillion, which he traced to its confluence with the Kootenay. The latter he ascended to the divide between it and the Beaverfoot, down which he came to its junction with the Kicking Horse River. Near that point Dr. Hector was kicked by one of the pack-horses and laid up a day. The incident gave its name to the stream up which he made his way back over the summit of the main chain, thereby becoming the discoverer of the pass now called by the same name as the river, though it is also known as the Hector Pass, as one of the peak of the Rockies is known as Hector Mountain. The explorer would have rested longer to recover from the effects of the horse kick, but that he and his party were on the point of starvation. Game was scarce, or it kept to the higher altitudes, whither the party had not time to follow it.

Artist Foretells His Death.

Herr Karl Gritsch, a young Grundelwald artist, foretold his own death on June 15. "I should make my will, for I am going to perish in the mountains to-morrow," he said. On the 16th while descending the Sigriswiler Rothorn he slipped and fell 600 feet and was instantly killed.

SPOTLESS SERVICE.

Service over the Lake Shore Railway may well be called spotless service. Throughout this entire system there is a noteworthy lack of dust and dirt. Sparkling linen and white-clad waiters greet the traveller in the dining cars, and this "spick and span" appearance extends throughout the train. One steps down at a journey's end over the Lake Shore as clean as when he boarded the train. Cleanliness is but one feature that has made The Lake Shore the most popular road in America. Others are its luxurious coaches, absolute safety, highest speed and punctuality. Tell the agent to have your ticket read "Via Buffalo and The Lake Shore Railway," and write for information concerning rates and routes to J. W. Daly, Chief A.G.P.A., Buffalo, N.Y.; A. J. Smith, G.P.A., Cleveland, Ohio, or W. J. Lynch, Pass'gr Traffic Mgr., Chicago, Ill.

His First Customer.

Schwartz had just taken possession of the little book shop which he had purchased with the idea that there would be an ideal occupation for him, permitting him to sit around and smoke his long pipe all the time. His first patron, or would be patron, on the first morning of his advent as a book dealer was a young woman who wanted to get a book dealing with arctic romance.

"Good morning," she said. "Have you got 'Frozen Dog Tales?'"

"Vat? Lady, dis is not a Chinese restaurant."

"But you don't understand me. I mean"—

"I never heard of frozen dog tails yet. Meppe dey are someding dose Fillingjeeno beebles eats. But nod here, lady, nod here. Dis is a book store."

"Well, probably you do not quite understand me. I wanted to get some book that had stories of the north in it. Perhaps you have 'Pardners?'"

"No, ma'am. Dare iss nobody in dis store but myselluf. Schmidt vanted to take half, but I wouldn't let him in on it, unt"—

But the young woman was hurrying out.

FIVE KILLED OUTRIGHT.

Twenty More Injured In Trolley Collision at Martinsville, N. Y.

Buffalo, July 12.—A train of two trolley cars, westbound from Lockport on the lines of the International Railway Co., and due at Tonawanda at 9.15 o'clock last night, ran into an open switch at a siding just east of Martinsville and crashed into a trolley freight motor and a train of seven freight cars, which were lying on the siding waiting for the passenger train to go by.

Five passengers were killed outright, and a score injured, some of whom may die. The passenger cars were going at a high rate of speed when the accident occurred, and the impact was terrific.

AGED 5, SHOOTS SISTER.

Accidental Tragedy Reported From the Village of Arden.

Kingston, July 12.—A case of accidental shooting is reported at Arden, about 50 miles northwest of this city. Yesterday morning Dr. D. E. Mundell, coroner, received the following telegraphic message:

"Harold Steele, aged 5, picked up from under a bed a loaded rifle while parents were out, discharging it and killing a ten-year-old girl of the same family."

The message was sent in by Dr. Geddes.

Train Crushes Aged Woman.

St. John, N. B., July 12.—As the result of not heeding the warnings given not to walk on the railway tracks, Mrs. Gallagher, aged 75, residing at Westfield, was struck and instantly killed by the Boston train yesterday morning. Mrs. Gallagher was carrying a basket of eggs, when the train came around a sharp curve. Hearing the frantic whistle of the engine she started to run along the track instead of stepping to one side, and in less than a minute she was crushed beneath the wheels and terribly mangled. Two sons of deceased are employed by the C. P. R.

Improving the St. Lawrence.

Ottawa, July 12.—The Minister of Marine has given orders for the construction at Sorel this season of a powerful spoon dredge that is required to excavate the shale that underlies the St. Lawrence River at Cap a la Roche, between Quebec and Three Rivers. It is also intended to instal a system of telephones which will be used in conjunction with wireless telegraphy to advise vessels of the presence of fog along the river.

Assailant Arrested.

Galt, July 12.—John J. Groves, the plumber, who stabbed William West, in the New Royal Hotel here Tuesday night, was arrested at Paris yesterday morning. West has a bare chance to recover.

Groves admitted his guilt and handed over the bloody knife to Chief McFarlane of Paris.

Held For Manslaughter.

Buffalo, July 12.—Alex. Gunnell, the real estate man, whose automobile killed Prof. H. A. Ward, was arraigned yesterday to plead to a charge of manslaughter in the second degree. Justice Murphy increased the bail from $1,500 to $5,000 and adjourned the case.

An Explanation Wanted.

"I'd like to know," began the thoughtful boarder.

"Would like to know what?" asked the boarder who knew it all.

"I'd like to know how 'matches are made in heaven' when they keep all the brimstone in the other place."

HOW WEASELS HUNT.

The Graceful Pose of the Animals When on the Trail.

The lithe grace of the weasel may be observed whenever it is on the trail. At an even speed, with nose to the ground, its reddish brown back seems literally to glide along through the rank herbage by the bank.

It may be the scent of a rat, and the trail may take it in and out of the bank a good many times before it comes up with its victim. It may even have to swim a stream before its persistence is rewarded. It is wonderful how small a hole that long, arched body can glide into and emerge from without the slightest difficulty.

When it has caught and killed its prey its movements are equally graceful as it carries the spoil home to its hole. Crossing a Kentish field I saw a weasel coming along under the hedgerow red toothed from the chase. There was the same sinuous motion of the back, but the little beast's head was held as high as possible and from its mouth hung the limp carcass of a young rat, freshly killed. The weasel held it by the neck and so high, for all the shortness of its legs, that only the end of the rat's tail dragged through the grass.

A family of weasels will often hunt in company, and this is naturally a most interesting sight to witness. The ability of the weasel to enter exceedingly small holes is owing entirely to the structure of its body—its flat head, long neck and short limbs and tail. In a cornrick it can pursue mice with ease along their burrows.—London Mail.

GAME DOGS AND GAME.

A Remarkable Instance of the Influence of Heredity.

The setter ate the mutton chop greedily, but he would have none of the partridge bones.

"A good game dog," said his master, "can't eat game. Its taste is repugnant to him. This is a remarkable instance of the influence of heredity.

"Game dogs have been trained for many generations not to eat the game—the birds and rabbits and what not—which they bring back to their masters in their mouths. They have been trained to consider that the eating of such game would be a disgrace and an unpardonable sin, the same as bank clerks have been trained to consider that the pocketing of a few dollars from the millions they annually handle would be a disgrace and a sin.

"And the result in the game dogs' case has been that this moral abhorrence of game, suggested to them by their masters, has been transmitted in its passage down from one generation to another, into an actual physical abhorrence. In the matter of game, thanks to heredity, game dogs now are never tempted. They can't sin.

"It would be a good thing for policy holders if, in the same way, man's moral disinclination to steal had been changed by heredity to an actual physical aversion of other people's money."

What Father Does.

Mothers may talk, work, struggle to make their sons models by which to shape a new heaven and a new earth. But the boy's world is in the man who is his father, and the boy believes that whatever may be right on Sundays or at prayer times the things that are really good, that really count in life, are what father does. Moreover, it is what father does which defines the means with which the boy shall work, the sphere wherein his efforts shall be shaped. In a word, what father does is the beginning as it is the end of the boy's achievements.

Aquatic Sports Off Victoria Park.

INTERESTING EVENTS YESTERDAY AFTERNOON, THOUGH LACK OF WIND HANDICAPPED THE RACING BOATS SOMEWHAT.

That there is still considerable interest taken in Belleville in aquatic sports was evidenced yesterday afternoon when a goodly number of citizens of all classes and ages assembled upon Victoria Park to witness the various events which took place in the harbor. True it was that there was not wind enough to make the sailing events as interesting and exciting as they otherwise might have been, but nevertheless some of the finishes were rather close, and this was owing to the fact that the wind freshened as the afternoon wore on.

Three events in the sailing races were pulled off, namely, dinghys, freaks and punts. At one time the ten boats which were in competition in the various classes were all in close proximity to each other, and the sight was much enjoyed by the spectators.

It is the intention to have water sports at least every two weeks during the remainder of the summer months, and they may possibly be held weekly.

Following is a summary of the various events;

PUNT RACE.

As already stated, there was scarcely any breeze when at 3.10 "King" Rogers blew the whistle which caused the punts to line up. There were three of them to cross the line two minutes later, namely; Imp, owned by F. Duesberry; King of the Waters, owned by W. J. Reeves, and The Lipton, owned by W. Smith. They crossed the line in the order named and sailed twice over the course. The Imp secured a lead at the start and maintained it to the finish, although the King of the Waters was a close second. The winner won a prize of $2, the second $1.50 and the 3rd $1.00.

At the conclusion of the race Reeves, the owner of the King of the Waters, expressed himself as not satisfied with the result, and a match race for $1 took place between his craft and the Imp. Reeves won by a slight margin.

THE DINGHY RACE.

There were four entries in this class which proved to be a good race. The craft were, the Y.-No, owned by N. Jones; Senga, E. Reid; Skidoo, F. Wallbridge, and Kemah, by F. Rathbun. The Y-No at the start took the lead, but was soon overhauled by the Senga, which won by a fair margin. As the Senga was some two feet longer than her competitors she was compelled to allow two minutes of a handicap to the other three dinghys. This did not deter her from winning, as she crossed the winning line, four minutes ahead of the Skidoo, which was second at the finish. The Y-No was third and Kemah fourth. This race was for the possession of the trophy cup, $1.50 for first, and $1 each for the second and third craft. The cup in question will, at the end of the season, go to the dinghy which wins the greater number of races.

THE FREAK CLASS.

Three boats were entered and started in this class, namely Togo, owned by F. Spangenberg; Crusoe, owned by P. Allen, and Unliked, by G. J. Aris. At the start Togo took the lead but was soon overhauled by Crusoe. The Unliked had considerable difficulty, owing to lack of wind, in crossing the line, and in consequence her two competitors had a good lead by the time she had started upon the course. The Crusoe won by a good margin over the Togo. The winner is an addition to this class of boats and with a good wind will no doubt be able to give a good account of herself. The owner of the winner secured a prize of $2, and $1 was given to the second.

NO LOG ROLLING.

The log rolling contest announced to take place did not come off, although an effort was made to induce some of the river drivers to participate in the event, which would no doubt have proven of interest.

SWIMMING MATCH.

A swimming match between a number of small boys was arranged. Some 12 boys took part. They started off the dock opposite the island and swam to a point where the judges were stationed at the southeast end of the park. The winners were J. Goyer, 1st; A. Burke, 2nd, and F. Keegan, 3rd. Senator Landry Blocks the Bill

REPEALING THE MINISTERIAL PENSIONS, AND PROROGATION MAY NOT TAKE PLACE THIS AFTERNOON.

Ottawa, Ont., July 12.—(Special)—The Prorogation proceedings have struck a snag, and the order calling out the guard of honor for 3 o'clock has been withdrawn.

Senator Landry is blocking the passage of the bill repealing the Ministerial Pensions Act, and refuses to consent to "all rules being suspended to the contrary." He has the floor when the House resumes at 3 o'clock, and it is just possible that prorogation may not take place until to-morrow.

The Man Who "Looks Into the Eye."

IS COMING TO BELLEVILLE.

Beginning Tuesday, July 17, and continuing for seventeen days, a great campaign of optical education and demonstration will take place at the jewelry store of Allan McFee, Dr. Wm. E. Montgomery, the Toronto expert "Shadow test" specialist, has been engaged; a new optical dark room has been built, new appliances installed, and a new day will dawn for those who suffer with defects of vision. Dr. Montgomery, the originator of this new system of sight-testing, is doing a wonderful work throughout Canada. He is teaching one jeweler in each town his new and perfect way, a way that does no guess work, a way that makes no mistakes. Everywhere that his work is known it is pronounced a revelation in optical science and a great achievement in ophthalmic practice. Each day at the store Dr. Montgomery will conduct free examinations for all, charging for material only. Appointments are now being made. Do not miss this grand opportunity. jy6-d8,7,12,14 1tw

"THE MAN WHO LOOKS INTO THE EYE" WITH A 3RD INSTRUMENT

The Opthalmometer, it is for measuring the meridians of the Eye-ball, which it does with mathemetical precision; it is a very expensive instrument, but, by it we can diagnose small degrees of Astigmatism which, it is impossible to do by means of a Retinoscope, or "the Shadow Test," and it is these small degrees which cause so much Eye-strain, even when the sight may be normal. We will test your eyes with this instrument also. Free of Charge.

JEWS RETURN TO THEIR OWN

THOUSANDS LEAVE RUSSIA AND GO TO PALESTINE.

London, July 11.—The correspondent of the Daily Mail at Jerusalem remarks that the influx of Jews into Palestine during the last few months has been remarkable. Five thousand of them from Russia landed at Jaffa a few weeks ago. They will settle in the plain of Sharon.

A few days ago some Jewish financiers made a trip East of the River Jordan. They were highly satisfied with the land there and are willing to establish colonies, but they are rather suspicious of the Bedouin tribes. It is believed that if the Government will guarantee protection, the sale of large tracts of land will soon be completed.

The correspondent states that the Jews are regaining possession of the land by degrees, and that should the present quick rate continue the whole country in a few years will belong to them.

Prevented Possible Drowning Accident.

Mr. C. E. Vermilyea, of Corbyville, was on the spot at the right time on Wednesday afternoon, and was thus enabled to save the lives of two fellow-beings. It appears that two gentlemen, James Palmer and a Mr. Rosevear, were out in a boat on the river, and in changing places the latter stepped on the side of the boat and she capsized. The two men, neither of whom could swim, were struggling in the water when Mr. Vermilyea, without waiting to remove any of his garments, waded in and rescued them, getting both safely to land. His praiseworthy act was the talk of the village.

THE GLORIOUS 12th OF JULY.

MANY LOCAL ORANGEMEN WENT TO TRENTON THIS MORNING — BIG CELEBRATION THERE.

There was no celebration of the Twelfth of July in this city this year, but the local brethren—or, at least, a good many of them—went to Trenton to take part in the big "doings" which are being held there to-day.

About 8.30 this morning the procession formed on Front St., outside the lodge room of Benjamin L.O.L., and, headed by a band, led by Prof. Denmark, marched down Front St. to the wharf, where they took the Varuna for Trenton.

The brethren made a goodly showing, and stepped out proudly. Mr. Ridley Cole was the marshal, on horseback, and rode his prancing steed proudly.

This is the 215th anniversary of the battle of the Boyne, which was fought in 1690.

Between the hours of 9 and 10 o'clock the scene at the wharf was an animated one. Hundreds were eagerly waiting for the arrival of the various steamers to transport them to Trenton.

The Varuna was the first to arrive, and soon had her quota on board.

Shortly after the steamers Niagara and Ella Ross came in and both were well laden with passengers, picked up from various Bay ports between here and Picton. These steamers also took on board a number of passengers here.

At 12.30 the Varuna left here on her second trip to Trenton and she was comfortably filled.

Those on board the steamers were well supplied with music, furnished by brass and fife and drum bands.

It is estimated that at least 1500 people were taken up to Trenton by the steamers.

The steamers Reindeer and Aletha passed up the bay, but did not stop here. They were laden with passengers.

A number from the city drove out to the Village of Plainfield, where a demonstration was held. Amongst the speakers was the Rev. R. H. Leitch, of this city, who is one of the Grand Chaplains of the Orange Order.

"Behold the Western sky,
Where people live but never die."
The reason for this is plain to see,
They all take Rocky Mountain Tea.

The would-be assassin is a sailor, who escaped.

It does do good baking

This is the range that bakes better because the diffusive oven flue draws in cold air from the kitchen-floor, carries it around the oven, and pours it HOT down into the oven FROM THE TOP in a current that moves all round the whole oven and up and out the flue. When that clean, hot air leaves the oven it takes with it all the moisture, all the odors, which in OTHER ovens stay in and saturate the baking food. Perfect draft control, perfect oven, drawn-out oven rack for easy basting,—all points singular to

Owning one costs little because there's such great economy of food and fuel and bother with this range.

It saves its cost in the juices it doesn't bake out of roasts alone.

THE DOMINION LIFE CO

Goes Under Insurance Probe at Town of Waterloo.

President and Managing Director Thos. Hilliard on the Witness Stand—Presents Affairs of Company in Understandable Shape — Usual Questions of Counsel Readily Answered —Opposes Policyholders Voting.

Waterloo, July 12.—Thomas Hilliard, president and managing director of the Dominion Life Insurance Co., faced the Insurance Commission in the public library auditorium here at noon yesterday.

Mr. Hilliard was examined by Assistant Counsel W. T. Tilley. The witness, the promoter of the company, was inspector of agencies for the Temperance and General before he organized the Dominion Life, for about a year, but had other insurance experience. He was actuary himself.

Mr. Hilliard said that the company had obtained its corporation in 1899 by act of the Dominion Parliament, and not by letters patent. Some of the stock was sold before the act was obtained, and the capital was placed at one million dollars, in shares of one hundred dollars each. Mr. Fitzgerald made a kick, that paid-up capital should be $100,000, instead of $62,000.

Received No Commissions.

Mr. Hilliard said that $60,000 of the stock was subscribed by provisional directors. He had sold most of the stock, but had received no commission. When the company was organized and reopened, witness was made an allowance of $800 in addition to actual traveling expenses. The understanding, when the organization took place, was that witness was to be the first managing director, and Mr. Trow the president. Witness' remuneration was fixed by resolution at each annual meeting, but he had never had a contract, nor did not have one now.

Against Voting Policyholders.

Under the charter, policyholders had no vote. In answer to Mr. Tilley's question, "Can you give any good reason why policyholders should not vote?" witness said:

"Yes, because they would not come to the meeting. I would object strenuously to the right to vote being given to our policyholders, and use my influence to defeat the idea. To obtain votes by mail would be out of the question entirely, as it would cost too much money."

Directors Are Thirteen.

In the Dominion Life, the board of directors numbered not less than nine and not more than twenty-one. At the present time there were thirteen directors, who were paid $15 a meeting, and traveling expenses at the rate of 10 cents a mile one way.

The list of directors was then read by Mr. Hilliard, as follows: T. Hilliard, Waterloo; S. B. Bricker, Waterloo; Hon. James McMullen, Mount Forest; David Bear, Waterloo; W. Vandusen, Toronto; Walter Wells, Waterloo; F. Colquhoun, Berlin; George D. Forbes, Hespeler; W. T. Parks, M. D., Woodstock; Thomas Iron, Stratford; A. J. Andrews, Winnipeg.

Held Sao Paulo.

Powers of investment were dealt with briefly, and witness said that he was greatly in favor of broadening of the investments by insurance companies on the principle of utmost publicity.

Mr. Tilley jumped at the words, "utmost publicity."

"What do you mean by that?" he asked.

"I mean that the accounts should be published in full, and much clearer than they are now."

As to unauthorized investments, the Dominion Life held Sao Paulo bonds. They sold these last week.

"The commission was coming," said Mr. Tilley.

"Yes," admitted witness.

No Loans to Directors.

No loans or advances had ever been made to any director or officer of the Dominion Life. An employe had borrowed on his policy and one agent was made a loan in the ordinary way on property he owned about two years ago. Four thousand dollars had been loaned on witness' valuation of this property. The security was ample. The proportion usually loaned was confined to two-thirds the carefully estimated value of real estate. The agent paid the ordinary rate of 5 1-2 per cent. One thousand dollars had been paid back already.

Agents' Balances.

Some of the agents had given trouble in accounting to the company for deals they had put through. The statement showed agents' balances only $746.67. Some of this had been written off last year, but a great deal had been collected.

Commissioner Langmuir asked what amount of the company's real estate loans was made in the Northwest, to which witness replied "one half" business. Andrews of Winnipeg put through all the real estate and mortgage deals on a commission of one per cent.

Independent Valuations Suggested.

"What would you say about practice of sending out to solicitors to get applications and value property for you?" asked Mr. Tilley.

"If the men are responsible, I think it would work out all right. We have independent valuations at other points.

"And not at Winnipeg, because one of the Andrews is a director?"

"He was receiving these commissions before he was made director He was put on the board as a recognition of his services."

"You have $400,000 now," said Commissioner Langmuir. "When you get up a million will you appoint an inspector?"

"That is now under consideration," said witness.

The average rate of interest on all mortgages last year was 6.446. Manitoba loans gave a little better interest.

Directors' Commissions.

"What directors get commissions on loans in Ontario?" asked Mr. Tilley.

"Senator McMullen's son gets some commission on loans he got around Mount Forest. The Senator made the valuation."

Mr. Tilley took exception to this, but to the commissioners witness said that Senator McMullen had guaranteed any less to the company. None of these loans have been called upon.

In the minute book Mr. Tilley found a whole bunch of commission and valuation fees to directors. Director W. Snider had received $20 for commission on the Pineapple loan. Witness said there had been very few cases and they were in the earlier years. The investment business was handled by the executive committee, of which W. Snider was chairman. Witness admitted that several members of the committee had received commissions. Later on an investment committee was named, and the commission idea fell into disuse. Witness, however, would not swear that no member of the investment committee had accepted commissions.

Policyholders' Account.

A feature of this company was the fact that all policyholders had a separate account. A sample of this account was put in.

The Rebating Evil.

He did not know to what extent rebates were carried on and the company had not, as a rule, assisted the agent to obtain a contract. No agents had been discharged for rebating. Some agents had given the whole first premium and in one case the company had given the whole premium.

The preliminary expense account was carried along for some time as an asset and according to witness should be treated in this way. This was in keeping with the witness' idea of a conservative policy.

"The great competition among large insurance companies to-day was to procure good agents," was a point that the witness emphasized particularly.

Messrs. Tilley ad Geary dissected the Dominion Life ledger system of bookkeeping policyholders' accounts. It looked a very good system and the policy ledger was open to the policyholder at any time. This system did not entail a great deal of work.

Mr. Tilley spent considerable time in drawing out Mr. Hilliard's explanation of the profit and loss statement. Item after item was questioned by counsel and explained by witness.

Loans Without Security.

"Have you ever loaned money without security?" asked witness.

"Without security?"

"Yes," said Mr. Tilley.

"No."

"Are you sure?"

"Yes."

"What about $9,000 lent to the Ontario Mutual Life Association?"

"Oh, yes. That is as good as the bank and better," said witness.

"Answer the question, was there any security given?"

"Oh, they're as good as gold."

"Was there any security?"

"Nothing but their note," admitted Mr. Hilliard.

"No other loans of this sort?"

"No."

"That will do," said Mr. Tilley.

R. G. Geary for the Ontario counsel examined the witness briefly.

The leases call for a 50 per cent. royalty on ores running over $1,000 per ton, and only a 25 per cent. royalty on ores below that value.

Mining Man, Not Anarchist.

Seattle, Wash., July 12.—Investigations made by the German Society of this city show that August Rosenberg, now under arrest in Germany on suspicion of being an anarchist, with designs on the life of Emperor William, was a mining man. The chemicals found in his former residence, which were supposed to have been used in the manufacture of bombs, were such as those used by assayers. The anonymous letter, on which he was arrested in Germany, is supposed to have been written by a relative with whom he had trouble.

Died From Blows.

Hamilton, July 13.—The coroner's jury that investigated the death of Andrew McGarvey, who died from blood poisoning at the City Hospital Monday morning, brought in this verdict last evening:

"That Andrew McGarvey came to his death through blood-poisoning caused by blows or kicks from Alexander McDonald, and that there was negligence in not having medical attention sooner; and that the Norton Manufacturing Co. was negligent in allowing so many boys to throw tins at workmen, although in fun."

Crown Attorney Washington announced that a charge of manslaughter would be laid against McDonald, who has been arrested.

Drowned at Rosseau.

But Czar Is Trying to Form a Coalition Government.

St. Petersburg, July 13.—Finance Minister Kokovsoff has given authority for the statement that the resignation of the entire Cabinet is in the hands of the Emperor.

So far as can be learned, however, his Majesty is not yet ready to charge the Constitutional Democrats with the task of forming a Ministry, and is still seeking to compromise the issue by forming a coalition Cabinet composed of the more solid of the Conservative and Liberal elements, in the lower and upper House of Parliament, under the leadership of Count Heyden and M. Stakovich.

The Stain Is Wiped Away.

After 12 Years Captain Dreyfus Is Restored to Army.

French Supreme Court Gives Him Justice in a Complete Vindication—Victim of One of the World's Greatest Conspiracies Is Vindicated After Years of Suffering in Disgrace—His Modest Words of Thankfulness.

Paris, July 13.—The Supreme Court yesterday announced its decision, annuling the condemnation of Dreyfus without a retrial. The effect of the decision is a complete vindication of Dreyfus, entitling him to restoration to his rank in the army as though he had never been accused.

The decision of the court was read by the presiding judge, M. Ballot-Beaupre, president of the Court of Cassation. Among those present were Matthew Dreyfus brother of Alfred Dreyfus; Maitre Mornard, counsel for Capt. Dreyfus, and many others who have figured in the celebrated case. Capt. Dreyfus was not present.

An Impressive Scene.

The scene as the decision was pronounced was impressive. The court, consisting of 49 judges, gowned in flowing red robes, solemnly mounted the bench. Deep silence prevailed as the presiding judge read the lengthy decision, minutely reviewing the series of sensational events of the last 12 years and completely disculpating Dreyfus of all wrong doing, freeing him of the accusation of being the author of the famous incriminating documents, on which the entire charge was founded, and ordering the annulment of the judgment of the Rennes court-martial with the publication of the final announcement of his innocence in 50 newspapers, to be chosen by Capt. Dreyfus.

The reading of the decision lasted an hour and it was only at the close that the spectators realized the sweeping nature of the vindication.

Matthew Dreyfus hastily despatched a messenger to bear the good news to Capt. Dreyfus and Mme. Dreyfus.

Outside the court the crowds received the decision without making any demonstration.

Back to the Army.

The circumstances of Capt. Dreyfus' returning to the army have not yet been determined upon, but it is expected that he will take the grade of lieutenant-colonel of artillery, which he would have reached if his service had not been interrupted.

The Cabinet will hold a special session at the Elysee Palace to determine on the course to follow in view of the decision of the Supreme Court.

Silent, But Thankful.

In the course of an interview yesterday after the announcement of the Supreme Court's decision in his favor, Dreyfus said:

"This has been a long and terrible ordeal. I began to feel it would never end. It is clear that the decision restores me to my old place in the army, but I am not aware of the intentions of the Government concerning my advancement in rank.

"I have nothing to say against my accusers. Being again an officer, I am obliged to obey the army regulations of silence, but I am inexpressibly thankful to all who have assisted in the maintenance of truth."

A Celebrated Case.

Capt. Alfred Dreyfus of the artillery, member of a wealthy Hebrew family of Alsace, where he was born in 1859, was on Oct. 14, 1894, arrested on the charge of communicating French military secrets to a foreign power. Two months later he was tried by court-martial and found guilty, and Jan. 5 he was publicly degraded and deported to Devil's Island, near Cayenne, French Guiana, there apparently to spend the remainder of his life. The friends and relatives of Dreyfus, notably his wife, always believed in his innocence, and devoted all their energies to the work of proving that he had been unjustly condemned.

In June, 1899, a fresh court-martial of Dreyfus was ordered and the prisoner was brought back from Devil's Island to be retried.

The second court-martial of Dreyfus opened at Rennes, France, Aug. 7, 1899. It resulted in his again being convicted, and he was sentenced to ten years' imprisonment in a fortress. Later he obtained a full pardon from President Loubet and was set free. The friends of the unfortunate captain, however, were not contented. They obtained fresh evidence in his behalf and finally got the case before the Supreme Court.

Struck by Engine.

Napanee, July 13.—Dora Morden, 14-year-old daughter of E. Morden, section foreman of the B. Q. R., while attempting to cross the G. T. R. track yesterday forenoon, was struck by a light train and killed. She was riding a bicycle and had awaited for a ballast train to pass and did not notice a light engine coming on the opposite track.

Cornwall Man Killed.

Cornwall, July 13.—James McDonell, son of John McDonell, East Cornwall, was instantly killed Wednesday at Santa Clara, N. Y., where he had been working. As the train he was about to leave town on pulled out he attempted to board it, but missed his hold and fell under the wheels. The remains were brought to Cornwall.

Died at 104.

Brockville, July 13.—Robert Lipsett, born in Ireland in 1802, died here yesterday after a short illness. He came to Brockville from Montreal about 1840, and some time later established in business here as a retail merchant, and was continuously engaged as such until a few years ago. He leaves no relatives, his wife having predeceased him.

Resignation Accepted.

Toronto, July 13.—At a meeting yesterday of the university board of governors, the resignation of President James Loudon of the university was reluctantly accepted. President Loudon had been president of the university since 1892, succeeding Sir Daniel Wilson. He was born in Toronto in 1841.

GEORGIA BRYAN'S DEATH.

Warrant Out For W. H. Todd on a Murder Charge.

Winnipeg, July 13.—It is reported hree last night on reliable authority that the post-mortem on the remains of Georgia Bryan, whose body was found in W. H. Todd's room in the Imperial Hotel here Wednesday, revealed the fact that death was due to carbolic acid. There is suspicion that Todd had attempted a criminal operation, and a warrant is out for his arrest for murder.

An incriminating letter, written by him, which lured the unfortunate girl to his room, is now in the hands of the police.

Her home was originally at Three Rivers, Que., and a sister and stepmother now reside at Maple Creek, Assa.

The Truth About Mr. Bastedo.

Liberal journals of this province are working overtime with their megaphones, shouting about the alleged application of the "spoils" system in the case of Mr. Bastedo. Now, what is the truth in regard to the case in question? Here it is.: S. T. Bastedo has been removed from his position as deputy commissioner of fisheries because of proven instances of wrong conduct while in office. Investigation came as the result of charges made by a fellow employee in the department of fisheries. Mayor J. C. Judd, of London, was appointed a commissioner and found that Bastedo had used his office merely as a political instrument for the benefit of the Liberal party. It was shown that he had kept a private letter book, had mutilated official files, and had suppressed information called for by the Legislature. On one occasion a false return was made, from which about 65 documents were omitted, because of their political significance. The deputy commissioner swore that he was instructed by Hon. Mr. Latchford to make such a return. Mr. Judd in his report expressed his unwillingness to believe such a statement about Mr. Latchford. Whether this particular statement is true or not, is not particularly important, except as between Mr. Latchford and Mr. Bastedo. What is important is the revelation as to how the Liberals of Ontario worked the fisheries department as part of their election machinery. Mr. Bastedo's conduct was bad enough, but he hardly took the steps he did just out of friendship for the Liberal party. What he did was done because it accorded with the deliberate policy of the Liberal Government of Ontario.

Adventure and "Ad.-Venture.

No store in this city—none anywhere—has ever grown to its full stature, achieved real success, until its owner has yielded to the spirit of "ad.-venture," and has ADVERTISED MORE THAN HE COULD AFFORD TO!

Every successful man, in any line of human effort, has found it necessary, at times, to break every law in the "Code of Caution." If Peary finds the Pole it will be because he risked more than he could "afford to."

Modern conditions of life have developed in the race as great a love of "ad.-venture" as our fathers had for adventure—and the same tingle of the blood which came to the fathers in the victories of pioneering comes, nowadays, to the business man who has rescued his enterprise from peril.

It was the spirit of adventure which enabled the first Astor to establish a fur-trading station in the far and perilous Northwest—and it is the spirit of "ad.-venture" which induces the modern trader to try to establish a store in a field where competition dwarfs him. The dangers of a complex life are as great as of an unexplored country.

The storekeeper of to-day is often in competition with houses boasting "working capitals" larger than his entire assets. His chances are small—unless prosperity has somewhat dulled the enthusiasm of the big fellow—unless they imagine that they are big enough to omit advertising now and then. In such event the smaller merchant finds his tide at the flood—his opportunity not only ready to be grasped, but almost ready to grasp him.

On the day when the small merchant advertises more than he can "afford to," and the big merchant less than he should — less than he MUST, even to hold his place in the race — the small merchant has "taken a trick" in the game, gained a rung on the ladder, and is strengthened for the next trial of strategy.

It would appear that it is about time a few Twentieth Century methods were pounded into that fossilized and moss-backed body known as the Ontario Medical Association. The other day a doctor in Ontario advertised that he had a sure remedy for grip. The O. M. A. solemnly took up this awful case, which is defined as a breach of etiquette, and fired the doctor bodily who had dared to let the public know that he had a remedy which the said public very much needed and needs. Now that unfortunate doctor finds himself with his means of livelihood gone, and for what? For transgressing a rule which should have been abolished hundreds of years ago. Common sense rules in other professions, why should it not in medicine? The quicker the Ontario Government takes away the autocratic power now wielded by the Ontario Medical Association, the better.

The independent Hamilton Herald, which has given the Whitney Government no fair words which it could conveniently avoid, has this to say of the Bastedo case; "There is no doubt that Mr. Bastedo, as deputy commissioner of fisheries, acted as a partizan. His excuse that he did so under instructions is not a valid excuse. This plea would not serve to protect him from the consequences of criminal acts." There you are, in a nutshell.

THE LUCKY CHEESEMAN.

(Brockville Times.)

With cheese at 11 3-4 cents,—well, who wouldn't like to be the dairyman?. He is the lucky individual in this favored land. His expenses are comparatively light and his income is steadily growing. (N.B. – With cheese at 11 3-4 cents there is absolutely no reason why any of our thousands of rural subscribers should be in arrears with their little subscriptions.)

• • •

Brockville Times: Some esteemed contemporaries are full of wrath because the United States flag was flown from public buildings here and there in Canada on July 4th. What can they expect when this country is deluged with United States literature and when our Public Library reading-rooms are top-heavy with United States magazines? These Canadian reading-rooms should be the first to set an example in the fight against harmful foreign literature.

Correct. And to go further, what can we expect when the Prime Minister is on record as preferring the Yankee dollar to the British shilling, and looking forward to the time when Canada shall be independent. It may well be asked, what has become of Canadian patriotism? when not a British flag of any description flew over the Ottawa Parliament buildings on Dominion Day.

Why all this kow-towing to the Stars and Stripes? Let us ask ourselves fairly. Is it not because most Canadians have their telescopes up to their eye looking for Yankee money? Can it be that we are "a nation of shop-keepers," and our commercial instincts have gotten the better of our patriotism? Quien sabe!

Complaints are made of discourtesy, recklessness and too fast speeding on the part of owners of automobiles in this city. It is alleged that some of the runabouts, which make a noise like an over-grown sausage-machine, are enough to cause any self-respecting horse to climb a tree. Owners of such noise-producers, which are equal in nerve-racking powers to a cannon-cracker, should be compelled to adopt the most rigid precautions whereas, it is said, they go about whereas, it is said, they go about like evil-smelling autocrats, careless of whether they cause trouble or not. The authorities should get after these over-gay people.

Peterboro merchants agreed to give their employees a weekly half-holiday in July and August, and now, it appears, some of them are trying to back out. They shouldn't do that. A little chance for recreation does everybody good; money which is not spent one time will be spent another time, and there will be plenty of work after the Peterboro merchants are pushing clouds or shovelling coal — as the case may be.

Rather a good story is told us by a gentleman who was in Ottawa yesterday. It seems that flags were hoisted on the Parliament buildings in preparation for the prorogation proceedings, which were expected yesterday. The said prorogation was blocked by Senator Landry, as narrated in these columns yesterday, and the flags were taken down. Then the story got abroad that Laurier had ordered the flags hoisted in honor of the Twelfth of July, and that his French-Canadian colleagues had made him take them down. A good many people believed the story, but among them could not be counted anyone who knew the Premier very well.

Hard on Some of Peterboro's Boys.

"Church-Goer" writes as follows to the Peterboro Examiner. It is joyful to note that the letter does not (?) apply to conditions in this city:

Wanted.—About seventy-nine young men of all shapes and sizes, from the tall, graceful dandy with the baseball moustache (nine on a side) down to the little hump-back, carroty headed, weasled eyed upstart. The object is to form a gazing corps to be in attendance at the street corner each Sunday during the summer, before and after divine service, to stare at the ladies as they pass, and make delicate remarks upon their person and dress. All who wish to enlist in the above corps will appear at the various street corners next Sunday morning and evening, when they will be duly inspected and their names, personal appearance and quantity of brains registered in a book kept for the purpose and which will be published. To prevent a general rush, it might be as well to state that none will be enlisted possessing intellectual capacity superior to that of a well-bred donkey.

High Compliment for Prince Edward Cheese

Mr D. J. McKinnon, of Kingston, when asked what syndicate in Eastern Ontario makes in his opinion the best cheese said, I must say the laurel wreath goes to Prince Edward, there is a marked call in the Old Country markets for this cheese. And much of the praise for bringing Prince Edward cheese to its present high standard lies with Dr. C. A. Publow, for three years instructor for that syndicate. I would not be surprised to see cheese go to 13c, said Mr. McKinnon, if it goes down it will not likely go below 10c and then only for a week or two. Cheese is in great demand in the Old Country markets and to some extent through the exposures in canned meats, the local, Canadian and United States, consumption is increasing.

Advertising Talk

WHEN TO QUIT.

An English journal requested a number of its largest advertisers to give their opinions concerning the best time to stop advertising, and the following replies were received;

When the population ceases to multiply and the generations that crowd on after you and never heard of you stop coming on.

When you have convinced everybody whose life will touch yours that you have better goods and lower prices than they can get anywhere else.

When you stop making fortunes right in your sight solely through the direct use of the mighty agent.

When you forget the words of the shrewdest and most successful men concerning the main cause of their prosperity.

When younger and fresher houses in your line cease starting up and using the trade journals in telling people how much better they can do for them than you can.

When you would rather have your own way and fail than to take advice and win.—Newspaperdom.

A big advertisement may make a great splash, but the water soon gets smooth; it's the little ripples constantly moving that tell in the end.

It's a wise salesman who knows when to talk and when to stop talking. Cultivate tact.

Reiteration, perseverence, sticktoitiveness—these are the qualities which make success in business.

Advertising is the strenuous servant of a strenuous age. It is the power behind the success of every successful business enterprise. —Printer's Ink.

ANOTHER CITY TO ADVERTISE.

An advertising appropriation of $5,000 has been raised in Columbus, Ga., and will be spent in municipal publicity. Magazines and a few leading newspapers are to be used. The idea originated with the officials of the newly formed Columbus Power Co., which has acquired the magnificent water power of the Chattahoochee River north of Columbus. In the advertisement the fact that electric power is offered for sale at $15 per horse power per annum will be emphasized. It is claimed that no other manufacturing centre in America sells power so cheap.—Press and Printer.

ADVERTISING MOULDS PUBLIC OPINION.

Leaving out the question of the merits of the case, the efforts of the Atlantic Telephone company to obtain a franchise to operate an independent telephone system in New York City and the New York Telephone company to keep out this competition, bring to the fore the means which both the interested parties have taken to accomplish their object.

Both parties realize that to fulfil their ambitions they must have public opinion on their side and both have adopted the same method of obtaining it.

For several days the metropolitan dailies have printed advertisements of each company, varying in size from a tenth to a full page, in which each company has presented its case to the public. Both display and reading advertisements have been used profusely. The information contained in this publicity is of the most forceful sort, including testimony from mayors of cities all over the country, together with that of prominent business men in these cities.

It is an eloquent testimonial to the efficacy of advertising in general and of newspaper advertising in particular, for it shows that advertising does mould public opinion and that newspaper advertising does it in the shortest possible time.

It also shows to a nicety that all advertising whether used as in the above instance or to sell goods is an effort to mould the public opinion to the advertiser's way of thinking.—Schenectady, N.Y., Union.

What Sort of Husbands Do Women Want?

What sort of husbands do women want?

They don't know.

When a woman marries she takes a chance of landing a big angel and being joyfully happy or of picking out someone who isn't and being joyfully unhappy.

I wonder if a girl ever deliberately made up her mind to marry and then hunted up her ideal man?

If such a woman exists, I never heard of her.

But I've seen scores of girls fall in love with a man simply because he was always around and came in handy.

A woman ought to be pretty sure of a man she takes for keeps.

It's a mighty long journey before they part, and one's companion must be a good traveler and a sympathetic, kind and loving one, or the way will seem mighty rough and tiresome.

But she rarely is.

How well does the average girl know a man who has called on her 365 times in succession?

Not at all.

She knows only what she can see and hear. Only what he has been unable to conceal of his faults and the virtues he has displayed in the show windows.

If one views the question from the world's standpoint, money is the only thing that counts. If from society's viewpoint, position.

Not once in seventeen years is the question of true love or the man's real character considered.

One may make a very grand match in the eyes of the world, but in reality it may be poorer and more wretched than the marriage of a couple of beggars, rich in nothing but love for each other.

Money, titles, position, even fame itself, are worthless without love.

If a woman is not ready to go to a desert island with the man of her choice, then there is something wrong, and she will be wise not to go on with it.

What if the presents are already in the house?

Never mind, send them back.

Better to bear a little unpleasantness for a few weeks than a lifelong misery.

Have a pretty wedding, flowers, favors, brightness and happiness. Ask all your friends, your enemies too, if you like, but remember there is only one wedding guest that really matters.

He is not very big, he won't take up much room.

But if you have your wedding without him, you will be a miserable woman—the name of the guest is Love.

A Dog's Long Journey.

We have often heard of the remarkable sagacity and intelligence shown by dogs of various breeds, but we do not remember ever hearing of a dog which has ever accomplished such a wonderful feat as a collie dog owned by Wm. Davey, who recently arrived at Saskatoon, Alta., with a car of settler's effects from Meaford, Ont. When the car of effects was rolling over the C. P. R. some six hours' run from Winnipeg the dog jumped off the car, rolled over a few times faster than the wheels of the car were turning, shook the dust from his back, and started down towards the home from which he had so recently been taken and which he loved so well.

Nothing was heard of the venturesome canine until last week, when Mr. Davey received a letter from Meaford stating that the dog had arrived home in an exhausted condition. The letter did not state the day of the month on which the dog got back, but Mr. Davey has written to find out. From Winnipeg to Meaford the distance is 1,100 miles, and when it is taken into consideration that the dog, in order to reach home, had to travel over a line of railway which crosses several rivers and innumerable creeks, runs through tunnels and through a mountainous country, the feat seems so remarkable that it taxes one's credulity to believe it.—Bladworth Progress.

An Albury Wedding.

PEARN — WEESE.

A quiet and pretty wedding took place on July 9th, at 2 o'clock, at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Wesley Weese, when their eldest daughter, Miss Pearl, was united in marriage to Mr. L. Harold Pearn, of Bowmanville. The wedding took place in the spacious drawing-room in the presence of only the immediate relatives of the contracting parties. The bride looked charming, being dressed in gray silk voile, trimmed with cream lace. The couple were unattended, the ceremony being performed by Rev. R. M. Pope, of Belleville, late of Rednersville circuit. After the ceremony a reception was held. The guests then retired to the dining-hall, where a sumptuous repast was served, after which Mr. and Mrs. Pearn left amid a shower of rice and old shoes for a week's tour in the west.

CAUSE OF FALLING HAIR.

Dandruff, Which is a Germ Disease —Kill the Germ.

Falling hair is caused by dandruff, which is a germ disease. The germ in burrowing into the root of the hair, where it destroys the vitality of the hair, causing the hair to fall out, digs up the cuticle in little scales, called dandruff or scurf. You can't stop the falling hair without curing the dandruff, and you can't cure the dandruff without killing the dandruff germ. "Destroy the cause, you remove the effect." Newbro's Herpicide is the only hair preparation that kills the dandruff germ. Herpicide is also a delightful hair dressing.

Old Man Walks Many Miles.

Mark All, the old man of 78 who is attempting to walk 60,000 miles in seven years, is in London, after tramping from Canterbury, a distance of 56 miles, says the London Daily Mail.

All has been promised $2,500 if he completes his task. Up to the present he has walked 51,750 miles. He was given to undertake the walk because he was unable to find work at his trade of engineering on account of his age. When he started he weighed 11 stone 6 pounds, but he now does not draw the scale at ten stone. He gets very tired at the end of his day's journey.

His travels have been by no means devoid of incident. He has been lost in snowdrifts five times, he was struck down by lightning at Marseilles, and stoned and shot in Germany. All wears a Union Jack tied around his arm, and to it he attributes his ill-treatment in Germany. He has not got on so well since he lost his bull-dog, Business, three years ago. The dog walked 21,000 miles with him, and the old man felt his loss keenly.

"I lost my best friend when Business died," he said simply. "I carried him a day before I could bring myself to bury him. That was in Marseilles."

All has earned $900 at his trade in various places while on his walk, and has also received $225 in gifts. He has worn out 39 pairs of boots. He has toured the British Isles seven times, and has also been through France, Portugal, Spain, Holland, Switzerland, Italy and Germany. He hopes to be allowed to walk through Russia. All finds fish and mutton chops the best food to walk on, but when he cannot afford these he finds raisins the best thing to ward off the pangs of hunger. He has two meals a day. His drink is tea or cocoa, and he never takes cold water, which, he says, would be dangerous for him on a long walk.

SPORTING NOTES.

Joe Wright, stroke of the Argonauts, was presented with a handsome gold watch by the crew.

The Toronto Eastern Leaguers dropped another game yesterday. The team is playing very punk ball, and are getting all sorts of bouquets handed them by the local press. Here is a sample from The Telegram:

"Some say the ball team won't play for Barrow, but don't you believe it. They wouldn't play for anybody—in fact, they couldn't. The Boarders are about the worst collection of false alarms that have ever come into Parkdale. Give them a chance, you say. Well, haven't they had a good and plenty chance, and what have they done? Nothing, absolutely nothing. We are much too polite to say what the real trouble is, but Barrow should speed away from the ark and try and cop out a few live ones and get rid of his present aggregation of post-mortems who have been riding at anchor for the past eight weeks."

Want Commission to Govern Ottawa.

PROJECT OF MAKING THE CAPITAL AN INDEPENDENT DISTRICT WAS DISCUSSED.

Ottawa, July 12. — In the Senate last night Senator De Boucherville suggested that Ottawa should be established in a district separate from Ontario, as Washington was established in the District of Columbia. The present arrangement was an awkward one for men who had to come from other Provinces. They could not legally make their wills. The national capital should be in a national city in a national district.

Senator Edwards thought that under such an arrangement the whole country would take more interest in the capital.

Sir Mackenzie Bowell favored the idea. It would prevent any project for removing the capital from Ottawa ever succeeding. It might be found that the people of the West would want the capital removed.

Senator Frost described the work accomplished by the Improvement Commission, of which he was a member. More than $60,000 a year was required. The chairman of the Washington Commission, Senator Gallagher, was a Canadian by birth. He had told Senator Frost that the people of Washington greatly regretted their loss of franchise. That would be a bar to putting Ottawa under a commission. He advised the Government to increase the vote.

Col. Ponton Talks At London Congress

CANADIAN DELEGATES ARE ACTIVE AND BELLEVILLE DELEGATES QUITE HOLD THEIR OWN.

The Belleville delegates to the London Chambers of Congress, as might be expected, are taking an active part in the proceedings. As was noted yesterday, Mr. R. J. Graham spoke in favor of the Imperial preference resolution, which was carried by an immense majority. At yesterday's sessions Col. Ponton took a prominent part in different discussions, which is thus reported by the Canadian Associated Press:

J. F. Willis, Toronto, opened the proceedings by moving a resolution recording the opinion that the Government adopt rates of postage to encourage circulation of British newspapers and periodicals in all parts of the Empire, and thus promote trade unity. Mr. Ellis said Canada regarded the question as of great importance; they wanted English-Canadian literature rather than American. Reduced postage in Canada had been followed by a surplus in revenue.

F. H. Mathewson, Montreal, seconding, said Canada was inundated with American literature and advertisements, to the disaster of commerce as well as sentiment. The Canadian rate was one-sixteenth the British rate, yet it was farther from Halifax to Vancouver than Liverpool to Canada.

Col. Ponton, Belleville, seconding, said it would cost $184 to send a ton of literature to Canada, only $12 a ton for Canadian literature to England, yet the British post office showed a profit of five millions sterling. He made a stirring appeal on Imperial grounds.

General Laurie said the Postmaster-General stated that yielding to Canadian demands would mean a loss of four millions of revenue. Thus, although they might not wholly grant the demands, they hoped a material reduction would be made.

E. Parkes, M.P., Birmingham, said Hon. Sydney Buxton was sympathetic, and he expected a favorable outcome to the present negotiations with the Canadian Government.

The resolution was carried unanimously.

COMMERCIAL AGENTS.

Col. Ponton, Belleville, advocated a resolution recommending that the consular service of the Empire be supplemented by appointment of inter-colonial commercial agents. He thought the colonies should bear costs of agents, who could be vigilant sentinels at the disposal of all parts of the Empire. He suggested that daily consular trade reports be established giving completely the state of trade like that issued by the United States. In supporting the resolution Mr. Beardshaw said the colonials were fully entitled to services of the present consuls and were not fully availing themselves. The motion was carried. Another, presented by Stanley Machin, London, urged that the British Government appoint experienced commercial men as agents in the colonies in order to meet competition of numerous foreign agents. This was carried.

Col. Ponton, seconded by F. H. Mathewson, urged a resolution to bring Newfoundland and the West Indies into Canadian Confederation, making it United British North America. Delegates from New Zealand, Australia and the West Indies objected that it was beyond the functions of the Congress. It was withdrawn.

By the following it will be seen that Mr. J. W. Johnson has been speaking on his favorite subject, education:

Sir Albert Rollitt's resolution, to take steps to promote technical and commercial education, was supported by J. W. Johnson, of Belleville, who told of the progress made in Canada, and suggested that schools of languages be established in Berlin and Paris, under British auspices, to permit colonial students to acquire modern languages, now so valuable.

Died in Madoc.

Madoc Review: Although not unexpected, the announcement of the death of Mrs. C. Fraser Aylesworth, jr., came as a great shock to our citizens last week. The deceased was taken ill in February last with heart trouble, which developed into dropsy, and despite the best nursing and medical attendance she gradually declined until relieved by death on Friday night last, 29th of June. Mrs. Aylesworth was the youngest daughter of the late John Deans. Besides her husband, she leaves two children, Misses Gracie and Gladys. She was 41 years of age. Particularly sad features in connection with her death are the facts that her husband, Mr. Fraser Aylesworth, jr., was unable to be present at her death or funeral as he has charge of the Government survey in Northwestern Manitoba and telegrams failed to reach him in time; and her mother, Mrs. J. G. Deans, has been laid up with a paralytic stroke since about the same time the deceased was taken ill, and was also unable to be present. Two sisters survive, Mrs. W. A. Hungerford, of Belleville, and Mrs. A. F. Huffman, at present travelling in the United States. The funeral took place on Wednesday afternoon, service being conducted by Rev. Dr. McDiarmid, assisted by the other ministers of the town. General sympathy goes out to the bereaved children and absent friends of the deceased.

A Sensible Suggestion.

A suggestion made some time ago in these columns on the subject of wedding presents now comes from another quarter. The defects of the present system are obvious. There is multiplication, sometimes to a ludicrous extent, of the same article. There is waste of money on ill-chosen and valueless offerings. There may sometimes be opening for invidious comparison. The multiplication of the same article is said to have gone so far that there was a store in New York at which people disposed of their wedding gifts. Instead of individual gifts suppose we introduced the plan of co-operation. Suppose all the friends were to pool their subscription for the purchase of one really good and valuable gift, the names of the subscribers being given but not the amounts of the several subscriptions. The gift would then be a real memorial and an heirloom. Perhaps if love chanced ever to grow cold, it might be a gentle reminder of the wedding day. — Bystander, in the Weekly Sun.

The Orphan's Picnic.

Picton Times: The biggest bunch of kids ever seen in a wagon was when the children of the Orphans' Home passed through town on Thursday morning, last week, en route to the Sandbanks in Mr. H. S. Wilcock's big "North King" wagon, drawn by a three horse team, with Court Rankin as captain and general superintendent of the lines. The big van was profusely decorated from stem to stern and the children waved flags and sang the Maple Leaf as happy as though they had never known a care. Were they happy, well you may guess so, for this is the one day of the year on which they will get to the Sandbanks, and it was through the kindness of Mr. Wilcocks that they were afforded the treat.

Push has made American men what they are to-day. It is the great American spirit condensed into a monosyllable Hand in hand with push goes publicity as a motive power toward success. The two are so close that it is difficult to know them apart. The man of push is a champion of publicity. If he has a good thing he wishes the public to know about it. If he has goods to sell there must be push and publicity if he would convert those goods into income. What is the use of having the goods to sell if no one knows of them? How are the buyers to be found? Push and publicity are the antidotes of stagnation and starvation.

The Laurier Government idea of putting a tax of five dollars a head on every man who came into the country to work looks peculiarly ridiculous, even for a Laurier idea, in view of such a situation.

The playing of golf on Sunday where other games are forbidden is defended on the ground that golf is a quiet man's game while other kinds of ball knocking tend to provoke noisy demonstrations. This, says the Montreal Gazette, may go well with the few on the links. GAMBLERS' LUCK.

A Joke Which Brought a Fortune to Its Innocent Victim.

Having lost every cent of his ready money at the gaming tables, an English visitor at Monte Carlo wired a pathetic appeal for help to a friend in England. Two days later he received a letter addressed in the friend's handwriting which on being opened revealed a five pound note.

Without pausing to read the letter, the plunger hastened to Ciro's, the famous restaurant in the Galerie Charles III., and changed his "fiver" into French money. From Ciro's he went straight into the Casino, where, experiencing an extraordinary run of luck, he not merely retrieved all his previous losses, but gained a substantial increase into the bargain.

Weary of play, he retired with a few cronies to Ciro's again to celebrate the occasion. The usually genial M. Ciro met him at the door of his establishment with a flood of reproaches and upbraidings. The five pound note was bad! He waved it angrily in the plunger's face—mais oui, it was false, this five pound note!

The plunger took the guilty "fiver" and scrutinized it carefully. It was one of the sham bank notes issued by Sir Augustus Harris and bore on its face an advertisement of the Drury Lane pantomime. The English friend, himself as "broke" as the Monte Carlo plunger, had posted him the flagrantly worthless note as a joke—a joke which had the plunger taken the trouble to examine the "fiver" or read its covering letter he would have seen only too clearly himself. It was fortunate that he did not do so. He merely paid Ciro his £5 and, inviting the pacified restaurateur to share in the champagne, pretended that the whole affair was an intentional witticism.

The conceit of a croupier, who fondly imagined that he understood the English language, was instrumental in presenting another and far less experienced Britisher with 1,000 francs. This gentleman, handing a 1,000 franc billet to the croupier in question, asked for plaques in exchange for it. Plaques are the large five louis gold pieces peculiar to Monaco. The croupier, fancying that the player had said "black" and was requesting him to place the note on the "black" compartment of the cloth, did so unobserved. Black duly turned up, and the croupier politely handed 2,000 francs to the surprised Britisher.—Ward Muir in Chambers' Journal.

An Ancient Dog Story.

A delightful dog story has been exhumed from the misty past and is now preserved in the records of an old court at Southampton, England. It dates from 1587 and must be told in the quaint terminology of the period: "Item we present yt at the tyme of our syttіng ther hath ben complaynt made of another dogg, betwene a masty & a mungerell, of Peter Quoyte's which hath stronng qualyties by himselfe, which goying lose abrode doth many times offend the neyghbors & wyll fetch out of ther howses whole peces of meate, as loynes of mutton & veal & such lyke & a pasty of venison or a whole pownde of candells at a tyme, & wyll not spoyle yt by the way but carry yt whole to his masters howse, which being a profytable dogg for his master, yet because he is offensyffe to many yt is not sufferable, wherfor his master hath forfeyt for every time 3 shillings 4 pence [83 cents]. And be yt comaunded to kepe him tyed or to putt him away upon payn to forfeyte for every tyme he shal be found in the streets 3 shillings 4 pence."

Mrs. Barnett, without protest, and when Louis came stealing into the room in awe and love his heart went out to the boy as to a brother.

"Hello, younker!" he called. "You needn't walk so soft voiced. I'm worth a dozen dead men yet."

The boy's face shone. "I thought you were asleep. Can I do anything for you?"

"No; only come and sit down and talk to me. What have you been doing since you came back to the Springs?"

Louis took a seat. "Nothing of any consequence, except to make some drawings of the ranch. It's dull here. I want to go into the mountains."

"You're a wonderful youngster. Wait till I'm able to travel, and we'll go up into the high country together."

Louis clapped his hands. "Won't that be glorious? I'd rather do that than anything else in the world."

"How is your sister?" asked Raymond, with abrupt change of tone.

"She is well. She's always well. We just came in from a drive. That's the reason I wasn't here to help you. Did it hurt you going upstairs?"

"Not a bit. The boys handled me as tenderly as a side o' pork. Let me see your drawings, will you?"

The boy's face glowed. "Well, you just wait." And he rushed away to get them.

Mrs. Barnett upon meeting Ann said, with deep feeling: "Rob's illness has transformed him. He said to me a few moments ago: 'If you can find the man who shot me, reward him. He has done me a great service. I am lost in a dream of luxury.' He asked after you with emotion and said he would like to thank you for your service to him."

Ann, listening intently, remained coldly impassive of face. "Mrs. Scribbins was the really efficient person. I have a horror of sick people, and as for wounds"— She shuddered for lack of words.

Mrs. Barnett went on: "I like to do for him, he's so grateful and so obedient. He says just the right thing always. There must be good breeding back of the man, although he never mentions his family. There's some love affair to account for his being here. He's too handsome not to have had entanglements. Don't you think so?"

"He insisted not," replied Ann. "He begged me to consider that his life had been quite commonplace."

"I don't believe it. He couldn't be commonplace. He said to me just now, 'Sometimes a man must hear the wash of the river of death to realize how futile he has allowed his life to become.' His gratitude toward you is pathetic."

Ann frowned. "It's worse; it's oppressive. I did so little, and that little was not done with a gracious spirit. I didn't enjoy it then nor in retrospect."

"You mustn't let him know that. His worship of you positively irradiates his face, and he's very handsome. He insists that you were heroic."

Ann grew a little petulant. "I wish you wouldn't try to make mountains out of molehills. It was a most unpleasant experience, and I wish to forget it, not to have it dinned in my ears forever. My going was folly, and my stay in that ghastly place was a torment. Please allow me to put it out of my memory."

Ann had a moment of bitter homesickness, a feeling she had never known before. This mad trip into the west with a reckless and supersensitive boy grew each moment more disastrous. At the moment she fairly hated her cousins and all the guests at their table and longed, with unspeakable hunger, for the roll of carriages on Fifth avenue and the glitter and tumult of Broadway. The stony, uninterested stare of her mother was better than this prying, this overstrained interest on the part of Jeannette.

As for Raymond, he had been momentarily interesting as a cowboy, and when he was lying at the brink of the grave he had assumed tragic value, but now that he was on the way to recovery he ceased to interest. "He is merely one of the thousands of other commonplace young eastern men who have tried their fortunes in the west and failed," she said. "Why should I be burdened with any further care of him?"

At dinner Don told again for the fortieth time the story of Raymond's shooting and in spite of Ann's protests put her in as the heroine, which reinfuriated her almost to the point of leaving the table. The "Ah's!" and "Dear me's!" and "By Jove's!" volleying from the listeners were quite insupportable. One lady said, "Poor fellow!"

"Not at all," said Dr. Braide. "He was a lucky dog. I'd be shot any day to get such a nurse."

Jeannette saw the angry flush on Ann's face and hastily turned the conversation into less personal channels.

Thus every influence swept her toward a dislike of the wounded man's very name, and thereafter she ignored his presence in the house, his being in the world, as though he did not exist. She neither asked after his health nor replied to any report or question made by her brother concerning him.

Louis brought to Raymond one day a small limp book in red leather, which he proffered with the air of giving a gem.

"What's this?" asked Raymond. "Your diary?"

"No; my father's. He was out here before I was born, when the Indians were here."

Raymond opened the volume with languid interest, but soon realized that he was looking into the past through the eyes of a poet. Part of it was written in ink very legibly, but in a fine running hand, while other of the pages were hastily scribbled in pencil and not to be easily deciphered. Plainly the record had been made under great disadvantages and in the field. The inks were of various colors, some watery blue, some dusty black.

Louis opened the book at the front, wherein the picture of a slender, smiling, handsome young fellow in sombrero and hunting clothes had been pasted.

"He enjoyed his new hat, didn't he?" said Raymond, to whom the essential incongruity of the refined face and border ruffian toggery first appealed. "You're the image of your father?" he added, looking keenly at the boy. "He don't look much older in this picture, taken at Sylvanite. Well, Sylvanite was a wild town in those days. Is there much about it in the book?"

"Ten pages. He wrote a page of fine script every day, but I don't care so much for that—these stage rides, and the big canyons, and crossing the rivers, and the Indians—he saw lots of Indians—the Utes—these are what interest me."

Raymond became profoundly interested in this book. There was an appeal in the closing entry which touched him profoundly. The entry was headed "The Last View" and closed with these words: "I love my home and my friends in the east, but this primeval world has laid its spell upon me. I shall come again next year."

"Did he come again?" asked Raymond.

"No," answered Louis sadly. And it was soon evident to Raymond that the lad knew very little of his father beyond the message in the worn little book.

"Leave this with me, Louis. I want to read it all," he said. And the boy was glad of this interest.

Mrs. Barnett came in later and asked, "What are you reading?"

"It is a journal kept by Louis' father. Did you know him?"

"Oh, very well! He was my favorite uncle."

"Tell me of him. Who was he—how did he come to make this trip?"

Mrs. Barnett took a comfortable seat. "I don't know where Uncle Phil got his streak of sentiment. He was one of six brothers, all successful business men; keen, practical—you know the kind. But Phil—well, he was the odd sheep—he always seemed a boy to me. He worked in the bank, but his mind was on other things. I don't remember how they came to send him out here, but I can recall perfectly the effect he had on me when talking of his trip. He glorified this country. He saw the mountains as the old time landscapists pictured them. When I first came I wept with disappointment, the range seemed so prosaic by contrast. He talked of nothing else for a year. Then he married and gradually ceased referring to his experiences."

"He never came again, Louis tells me."

"No. His wife was not the kind of girl to go west. I don't want to say anything severe about Alicia, but she made Phil very unhappy. When Ann was born Phil wanted to call her Hesper, in memory of his trip to the west, but Alicia cried out against it. It was an odd name, but it was pretty, and there was no reason why the father shouldn't have had his wish, but that was her way. She was cold and selfish even in her honeymoon. I never saw such a girl. Phil went with her to every fashionable resort in Europe, but she not merely refused to make a trip into his Hesperian mountains, but she wouldn't let him go. He used to get up into the Adirondacks now and then, I remember, but only for a day or two. Oh, how exacting she was! After Louis was born she grew worse. She became morbid. I never could see that she had a particle of maternal affection. If Ann isn't like her it is because Phil's blood is in her veins. Louis is exactly as Phil was, as I recall him when I saw him first."

"You say the father called her Hesper?" pursued Raymond, acutely interested in all that concerned Ann.

"It was his pet name for her. Few people knew it. I don't think Louis knows it, for Ann considered the name absurd as she grew older and never refers to it. I think it is a pretty name, don't you?"

"SWISS FOOD"

"Yes. It is beautiful." His eyes took on a musing look.

Hesper! Somehow the name expressed the poetry of the father's conception, and with little else to do the wounded man gave long hours to recalling and relieving his experiences with her as his nurse.

He longed with a great longing to see her again, but to his curious shyness had been added the humility of one who feels himself unworthy to ask any favor, and the troubled look which came now and again into the lines of his face made Louis sad. The boy idealized him, made of him a wonderful being, better worth serving than any monarch, and in this strain he talked to Ann till she impatiently begged him to stop.

"You say the father called her Hesper?"

But in her secret heart Ann admitted that she, too, had been touched by the indefinable charm of Raymond's voice and manner, but the question of how best to check his growing power over her brother's life had become a very serious problem, for as the days wore on he put her aside as completely as she ignored his hero.

Together Raymond and the boy read the little red book, mapping the points described as best they could—a task of some difficulty, for the traveler had purposely given mythical names to the towns, rivers and peaks. It had all been a wonderland to Philip Rupert, and he took care to have no stupid or vulgar name mar the perfect effect.

There was something in all this which refined and softened the young rancher. Joined with his love for "Hesper" (as he loved to call Ann in secret), this boyish father's enthusiasms transmuted every reckless, bitter impulse into stern resolutions to enter upon a new life—a life with purpose and devotion in its course.

CHAPTER VIII.

At last there came a day when the doctor permitted his patient to be clothed and seated in an easy chair, and, calling Mrs. Barnett to him, Raymond asked, "Do you think Miss Rupert will see me now?"

"I will ask her," replied Jeannette, with due appreciation of the romantic situation.

Ann rose to comply, with a little thrill of unpleasant excitement. She did not want to see him, and yet she could not decently refuse.

At the door of the sitting room Mrs. Barnett stopped, and the girl walked in alone, her face set in lines of cold disdain.

Raymond sat in a big, padded chair, with his back to the window and the sunlight streaming over his head. He wore a handsome gray dressing gown, and the linen at his neck and wrists was spotlessly clean. His hands were refined—almost delicate in effect—and his clean shaven face and his well brushed, abundant brown hair gave evidence of a most careful toilet. Something mystically solemn and sweet was in his eyes, and his lips trembled as he greeted her. "This is very good of you. Pardon me, won't you? I am forbidden to stand."

"I beg you, do not think of it."

"Dare I ask you to be seated? I want to thank you more suitably than I have been able to do for what you did for me."

"Please don't, Mr. Raymond. I assure you I deserve no credit. I went out there under compulsion, and what I did was determined by pressure of circumstances. I'm not a bit of a heroine, and I do not like praise."

He was chilled by her tone and for a moment hesitated. "A sick man may be forgiven some things," he began to say at last. "I may as well confess that I have been longing to see you. I have been trying for many days to rise and dress in order that I might have you come in. You must let me ask your forgiveness for the rude way in which I received you that day. All that I did seems incredible to me now, like the action of another man."

A gleam of amusement crossed Ann's face. "I didn't blame you. I'm willing to admit that your position was trying."

He was too exalted of mood to respond to her quizzical tone. "I had lived for years quite apart from any—from association with cultivated people, and besides I had begun to feel that I was wasting my life and had become irritable. I went to the ranch to pay off a debt, and I—well, I had fallen into a groove. You recalled me to better things."

"I and the bullet," she said rather flippantly, for she was becoming apprehensive of the trend of his confidences.

He ignored her interruption, or, rather, he plowed across it with something like his old time resolution. "It is due to you to know—or at any rate I desire you to know—that I am not a fugitive from justice. Baker thought he was being funny."

"I am not so dull as you think, Mr. Raymond. I understood him perfectly."

"I am glad you did. It is true I am estranged from my family, but it is not due— My faults have never been criminal."

"Please do not feel it necessary to explain," interrupted Ann. "It is painful to you, and—and it is wholly unnecessary. I beg you to desist. I hope you will understand that I am in no sense doubting you."

A shadow of pain crossed his face. Somehow the reality of their meeting was not as he had imagined it.

She, on her part, was angry and displeased with herself and resentful of his implied social equality, and yet he looked the gentleman, and his face was very handsome, very moving in its clear pallor. Suffering had infinitely refined its lines, but she could not forget his services as cook and cowboy, and, besides, she hated being perturbed. She resolutely changed the subject.

"Dr. Braide says you are getting on splendidly and that you will soon be returning to the ranch."

Checked and chilled by her manner, he plainly abandoned all further thought of confiding in her and answered, wearily and sadly: "It will be a long time before I return to the life on the ranch. I have other plans now."

Ann half regretted her action and as she rose said, with a smiling assumption of easy, friendly interest which hurt him worse than anything she had hitherto spoken: "I think it wonderful the way you are coming on. We will see you at dinner in a few days."

"Thank you. I shall be down at the earliest moment," he quietly replied and leaned back in his chair, white and suffering, his eyes closed, his lips quivering.

Ann was well aware that she had not lived up to her higher self in this interview and that she had been cruelly unresponsive and distant with him. "And yet I don't see how I could have acted differently," she argued with her better self. "He must not go on thinking me more deeply interested in his life than I really am."

Mrs. Barnett was impatiently waiting for her return.

"What did he say?" she breathlessly asked. "I'm dying to know."

Ann answered with evasive indifference. "He thanked me again for my heroic action and begged pardon for his rudeness, all of which he might have spared himself the trouble of repeating."

Mrs. Barnett was on the scent for romance. "What else?"

"Nothing else."

"Poor fellow! He has been struggling toward this event for days. Only the doctor's express orders kept him from getting up ten days ago. He has been all the morning dressing for it, and now you tell me in that supercilious tone that nothing happened."

Ann fired into anger. "What could happen? You needn't speak in riddles, Jeannette. What do you think should have happened? Come, now, you silly, romantic thing!"

Some note in her voice touched Mrs. Barnett, and she slowly replied: "Ann Rupert, you are the coldest, cruelest creature I ever knew. I know what you did to that poor fellow. You unmercifully snubbed him; you froze his gratitude on his lips. Of course you are infinitely his superior"—she became weakly sarcastic at this point—"but you are not justified in stabbing a sick man to the heart."

"You're quite mistaken. I was very nice to him."

"Nice! I've seen you nice to young men before. Oh, I'd like to see some man crush you! I'd enjoy seeing you crawl!"

Mrs. Barnett went immediately to Raymond's door and knocked. At his word she entered. He sat where Ann had left him, but Louis was beside him, showing him a new drawing.

"Isn't that wonderful!" said Raymond, holding the sketch in the air, his eyes aglow with pride in the boy. "If I could do that I would never be lonesome or restless. I wish I knew my use in the world as certainly as Louis does."

The young artist flushed with the pleasure. "It's just as wonderful to ride the way you do and throw a rope and all that. I'll teach you to draw if you want me to."

Raymond turned to Mrs. Barnett with a look in which amusement and a certain sorrow met. "I'm long past such instruction, lad. I haven't sense enough to keep out of mischief. You draw, and I'll do the posing. I'm a good poser. Don't you think so, Mrs. Barnett?"

"I don't know what you mean," said she, feeling vaguely his pain and discouragement—his disillusionment.

"I posed as a farmer and deceived good Don Barnett. I made up for a cowboy and fooled Baker and the rest of the squad. And now I'm posing as an invalid when I ought to be out on the ranch again. It's time I rode away to a new range."

Mrs. Barnett was alarmed at the undertone of bitterness in his words. "You must not think of even walking downstairs for a week."

"But I can't sit here and sink deeper and deeper into obligation to you," he answered. "What rights have I in this room? I'm only a poor, wandering ne'er-do-well, and your beautiful home makes me ashamed—more than ashamed—it fills me with a sense of guilt. I can walk now, and I ought not to stay another day."

Mrs. Barnett knew very well that his mood was due to Ann's icy disdain, and she realized, too, how difficult the task of diverting his mind from this foolish purpose would be. She said gently: "You were injured in our service, Robert, and it is our duty to look after you. You must not utter another word of this sort of talk to me or I will call Don, and then you will hear a voice that will make you quake. I tell you frankly I will not listen to your walking out of this room for a week."

Louis, who had been sitting in some wonder, trying to catch the undercurrent of this talk, put his hand on Raymond's knee and said: "When you go, I go too. Remember that."

It was interesting to Jeannette to observe that evening dress changed Ann's estimate of Raymond's character. The girl had to admit that he looked surprisingly well as he came slowly into the library just before the little Chinese chime sounded for dinner. Every trace of the cowboy, the man of sun smit, wind swept plain, was gone. He was pale, languid, but self contained and wore his dinner suit with easy grace.

His manner toward Ann was that of a polite acquaintance merely, and her fear of something—she hardly knew what—instantly vanished. His bearing during dinner and throughout the evening made her forget the kind of person he had hitherto seemed to her, and she began to study him in his true character. He dropped all his ranch life phrases and, putting aside his reserve, talked with entire intellectual freedom, showing a knowledge of books and of communities remarkable in any man. Once or twice as she encountered his glance a mysterious movement ran about her heart and her breath quickened.

As they rose from dinner and while he stood to allow her to pass he said: "You are very beautiful tonight. Mountain air has done wonders for you."

"You are very courteous," she responded, and her eyes fell exasperatingly, and she walked away with a sense of having revealed a weakness.

He came into the drawing room half an hour later to say good night to his hostess, looking very tired and pale, and when he took Ann's hand his eyes were burning with deep inner passion. "Good night," he said, "and forgive me for any impertinence." She scarcely had time to reply, to ask his meaning, for Mrs. Barnett ordered him instantly to bed.

No voice responded to Louis' knock at Raymond's door next morning, and, hurrying to Barnett's room, Louis called excitedly, "Cousin Don, have you seen Rob?"

Barnett, splashing in his tub, shouted: "No. Can't you find him?"

"He isn't in his room."

"He's gone down to breakfast, then. Hurry along and keep him company. Don't let him go out."

Louis rushed into the breakfast room, but found it empty. The maid said: "Are you looking for Mr. Raymond? He came down very early and said he was going out for a walk."

The boy hurried outdoors, filled with dismay. "He shouldn't be out alone. He might get dizzy and fall." He ran round the block, eagerly seeking Raymond, who was nowhere in sight. When Barnett entered Rob's room he found two letters lying on the little desk. One was addressed to Don and one to Ann.

Barnett broke the seal and read his note almost at a glance:

> Dear Barnett—I'm sorry to pull out in this way, but I am afraid it's my only way. I have been very uncomfortable because of my growing indebtedness to you and Mrs. Barnett, and so I have cut loose. Please don't think me ungrateful. It is because I feel so deeply your kindness that I go. Don't look for me. I'm going to hole up for a few days till I get strong. If you happen to get any clew to where I've gone, don't tell the boy. I can see that his sister does not approve of his fondness for me, and she is quite right. I'm not a proper companion for a boy of his sort. I inclose a check, which squares us so far as money can, but your kindness in other ways, and especially Mrs. Barnett's care and assistance, I am in despair of ever paying. I slide out because it would be difficult and painful to say goodby, and, besides, I feel that I must cut loose from the boy.

Raymond's note to Ann was short, almost curt:

> Since my thanks are a burden to you, the least I can do is to take myself out of your life and beg pardon for having entered it. Had I attended to my duties that night of the fire, you would not have been troubled by me. I stayed because you were beautiful, and that is the whole truth. It is not the first time a man has neglected his duties for a woman, and the pain I now suffer in giving up all hope of meeting you again is a just punishment for my presumption. I am sorry to go without saying goodby to Louis, but it is best. I know you do not like his growing regard for me, and you are quite right.

Louis came to her door and cried out dolefully, "Ann, Rob has gone away!"

"I know it. Come in."

He entered with troubled, tearful face and in deeply aggrieved tone said: "He went without saying goodby. I want to go hunt him and bring him back, but Uncle Don says that we must respect his wish. All the same, I like him, and I want him back. No, I don't—I want to go with him."

"And leave me?"

His resentment, long smoldering, burst forth: "Yes, I would! Don't you suppose I have seen how you treated him? You think because you're from New York you can snub a man like Rob, but you're not up to him. You're not half as good as he is."

Ann listened in astonishment to this outburst from her brother and then cuttingly remarked:

"One would think I had taken away some plaything of yours. Go out of my room and stay out till you can treat me with respect."

"I'm going, and you'll never see me again. I'm going to follow Rob. I don't care what you say." With this defiant cry he rushed from the room.

A keen ache of jealousy ran through the proud girl's heart. The one soul of vital interest in her life, her sweet little brother, seemed about to pass from her hands to that of an adventurer. Her resentment of his influence blazed hot within her. "I will defeat him with his own weapons," she said. "I will win him back to me. I will go wherever he wishes to go."

But Louis did not return to lunch, and she was greatly troubled. He did not appear at dinner, and at last, openly alarmed, Ann told Mrs. Barnett of Louis' bitter accusation and of his threat that he would never return.

"Don't worry. Don will find him. He'll get tired of it and come back. These boyish tantrums don't last."

"It scares me to think of that poor, innocent lad spending the night alone in a big, wicked western city. I wish Don would hurry home. Can't I go down to his office?"

"Oh, no; there's no need of your going. I'll telephone him at once."

When Barnett returned, Ann, white with anxiety, poured out her story. He comforted her by saying: "You take it too seriously. I will notify the police at Cinnabar and Mogalyon. They'll locate him in an hour."

They did not find him, and Ann passed a miserable night, imagining all sorts of ill adventures into which Louis might be led, and would have accompanied Barnett on his quest next day but for his firm command: "Don't be absurd. I can find him alone much quicker."

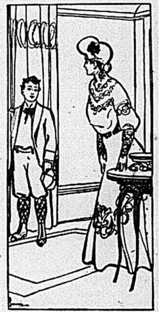
"Bring him back if you have to use force!" she cried. And then, with a knowledge of Raymond's power, she added: "If you find Mr. Raymond please tell him to send laddie home. Say I wish it."

With these words in his ear Barnett took his way to his office. At lunch he was more concerned. "He's not in Cinnabar nor any of the surrounding towns. He may have gone back to the ranch. I will wire out there this afternoon. Did he have any money?"

"Yes. I had just given him his allowance. He must have had nearly $200."

Don whistled. "A smart boy can hide out a good while on that. However, he'll come back when his pet wears off."

Even though Raymond had taken himself bodily out of her life, his power to disturb and thwart Ann's will remained. She began to fear him a little. He was bigger, more powerful, than she had thought him. Could she have found him in the days which followed—days of increasing unrest and anxiety—she would have humbly asked him to find the runaway and bring him back to her, but he had disappeared as utterly as if he had never been.



"You're not half as good as he is."

CHAPTER IX.

Meanwhile, during Raymond's days on the ranch, while the cattle were withering away on the plains and the long trail from the south was filling with grass, a most notable settlement had been forming like some new kind of parasitic growth on the westward shoulder of old Mogalyon, the mighty peak to the west.

In the midst of the mountains, in the lap of two smooth, grassy domes, old Philip Le Beau established a cow camp in the early seventies and called it Belle Marie, after his wife. This, however, proved to be too fanciful for his cowboy neighbors, who promptly called it "Le Beau's Hole," and in the end it was known among cattlemen as Bozle Creek.

Just west of Le Beau's camp, and sentinel to the valley of the Loup, stood a symmetrical peak which some missionary to the red people had called Mount Horeb. About the year 1870 some persons not missionaries planted gold in the soil in convenient places at the base of this hill and raised a mighty shout over the discovery of a new El Dorado. A rush took place, and to the outside world the region became known as "the Mount Horeb mining district" and was alluded to with deep seated resentment, with curses.

But there were miners whom neither the dogmatic opinions of geologists nor the tricks of schemers could turn aside from a faith that somewhere on the mighty slopes of Mogalyon lay veins of

NEW YORK DAIRY MARKET.

New York, July 12.—Butter — Steady, unchanged; receipts, 10,051.

Cheese—Steady, unchanged; receipts, 6753.

Eggs—Firm; receipts, 13,910; state, Pennsylvania and nearby fancy, selected, white, 23c; do., choice, 21c to 22c; do., mixed, extra, 21c; western, firsts, 17c to 17½c; do., seconds, 16c to 16½c; southerns, 14½c to 15½c.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Cables Are Firmer—American Markets Are Quietly Firm.

London, July 12.—Cattle are quoted at 10¼c to 11¼c per lb.; refrigerator beef, 8c to 8½c per lb.; sheep, dressed, 13½c to 16c per lb.

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

Toronto, July 12.—Receipts of live stock at the City Cattle Market since Tuesday last, as reported by the railways, were 74 carloads, composed of 855 cattle, 1056 hogs, 1206 sheep and lambs, and 220 calves. The quality of fat cattle was much the same as on Tuesday.

Exporters.

Few were offered, and few wanted, trade being dull. The few that were offered sold at from $4.60 to $4.90 per cwt. Export bulls sold at $3.50 to $4.25.

Butchers.

Best butchers' cattle sold from $4.50 to $4.70 per cwt.; medium to good loads of heifers and steers $4.12½ to $4.37½; fair to good cows at $3.50 to $4; common cows at $2.50 to $3.25

Feeders and Stockers.

Trade in stockers and feeders has been light, with prices easy at following quotations: Good steers, 900 to 1050 lbs, at $4 to $4.25; good steers, 800 to 900 lbs, at $3.90 to $4.10; light stockers, $3.25 to $3.60; medium stockers, $3 to $3.25; common stockers, $2.75 to $3.

Milch Cows.

About 40 cows were offered and sold on Wednesday and Thursday at prices ranging from $25 to $54 each, several bringing the latter price. The sales and prices reported would indicate that a better class of cows were offered, and there certainly were some fine milkers amongst the lot.

Veal Calves.

Over 200 calves weer on sale. The quality, generally, of the veal calves offered on the Toronto and Junction markets does little or no credit to the farmers of Ontario. The demand is so great and prices are so high that farmers cannot, or at least do not, wait to feed and properly prepare them for the market. The prices of milk, butter and cheese being high this season, probably has much to do with the selling of calves before they are properly fitted for slaughtering. The demand, as usual, was good, and prices to-day ranged from $4.50 to $6.50 per cwt. Prime veals are still worth $7 per cwt.

Sheep and Lambs.

There was a fair run of sheep and lambs, over 1200 all told. Trade for sheep is easy at about $4.20 per cwt., for the general run, with the probability of them going down to $4 per cwt. at an early date. Lambs were in good demand at prices ranging from $4.50 to $5.50 each, or in other words, $6.50 to $7.25 per cwt. All offerings were readily taken at these quotations. Unless there should be heavy deliveries of lambs, the probabilities are that prices for them will remain firm. Sheep and lambs are scarce in the United States, and farmers may be on the lookout for buyers from over the line for sheep for breeding purposes.

Hogs.

The run of hogs was again light, and prices were quoted 10c per cwt. higher by Mr. Harris. Selects, fed and watered, are quoted at $7.70 per cwt., and lights and fats at $7.45 per cwt. Drovers from all over Ontario report finished bacon hogs as being scarce and hard to buy at even the present quotations.

EAST BUFFALO CATTLE MARKET.

East Buffalo, N. Y., July 12.—Cattle—Steady to strong; prime steers, $5.50 to $5.85; shipping, $5 to $5.40; butchers', $4.80 to $5.25.

Veals—Receipts, 250 head; active and steady, $4.50 to $7.50.

Hogs—Receipts, 1700 head; active and 5c to 10c higher; heavy, mixed, Yorkers and pigs, $7.25; a few, $7.30; roughs, $6.25 to $6.50; dairies, $7 to $7.20.

Sheep and lambs—Receipts, 800 head; active and steady; unchanged.

NEW YORK LIVE STOCK.

New York, July 12.—Beeves—Receipts, 299; all for slaughterers except 3 cars; feeling steady.

Calves—Receipts, 88; steady; trade limited for lack of stock; veals, $3.50 to $8; culls, $5.

Sheep and lambs—Receipts, 6785; sheep, steady; choice lambs, slow but about steady; others, 25c to 75c lower; sheep, $3.50 to $5.50; culls, $2 to $3; lambs, $7.25 to $9.50; general sales, $7.75 to $9; culls, $5.50.

Hogs—Receipts, 1161; one car mixed western on sale, and sold at $6.65 to $6.70; market higher; state hogs would sell at $7.35 to $7.50.

Cannot Be Saved.

Sydney, C. B., July 13.—The Angola cannot be saved. The ships which went to her aid could not help her for fog and sea and have returned to port.

Mr. Carscallen Ill.

Hamilton, July 13.—Henry Carscallen, K. C., M. P. P., is seriously ill.

AUTHOR LE CHIEN D'OR

PASSING OF A MAN WHO ENRICHED CANADIAN LITERATURE.

Wm. Kirby, Who Wrote Its First Great Historical Romance — A Loyalist Poem In Twelve Cantos—Also Wrote Three Plays — Romance of Manuscript of His Greatest Work—Praised by Tennyson.

After combatting for over a year the disease which finally proved fatal—a naturally rugged constitution permitting him to bear up surprisingly under the disabilities of old age and sickness—William Kirby, the noted journalist, novelist and poet, passed away peacefully at Niagara-on-the-Lake on Saturday, June 23, in the 89th year of his age.

Whatever Canadian novelists may do to enrich the writing of fiction in Canada for the future, there can be no question that when William Kirby wrote "The Golden Dog," he made for Canadian romantic fiction an honorable and memorable beginning.

It was the great achievement of his life, which was a long, happy, and useful one; and his former fellow-citizens may feel sure that to be remembered as one who gave an early and lasting impulse in the direction of making Canadian literature pure, elevated and ennobling, was Mr. Kirby's final and most satisfying choice at the end of his life.

Sketch of His Career.

William Kirby was born at Kingston-upon-Hull, on the 13th of October, 1817. His mother was a Miss Watson, of a family who belonged to that place and his father a descendant of an old Yorkshire family, the Kirbys of Kirby Wiske. Mr. Kirby's poem, "The Bells of Kirby Wiske," first published in 1832, now forms part of his "Canadian Idylls," published six years later.

Coming to Canada with his parents in 1832, Mr. Kirby received part of his education in Cincinnati, Ohio, in a school kept by Mr. Alexander Kinmont, a Scottish educationist. After spending a short time in Montreal, Mr. Kirby removed to Niagara in 1839, and was for twenty years editor and publisher of The Mail newspaper of that place. He was appointed Collector of Customs for Niagara in 1871, a position which he kept until his retirement from public service in 1895.

Poem In Twelve Cantos.

Mr. Kirby's imagination found a singular attraction in the history and tradition connected with the Loyalist settlement in Canada, and it is to this circumstance that we owe his first book, "The U. E.," published at Niagara in 1859, a poem in twelve cantos of Spenserian stanzas, which consists of a series of pictures of the people and the life of Loyalist times.

Its chief merit is to be found in its graphic description and in a certain sweet nobility and purity of character which belonged to everything that Mr. Kirby wrote. The opening stanza represents the artistic level of the whole poem very fairly, and may be taken as indicating the character of all Mr. Kirby's poetical work:

"In lone Canadian woods I raise my song.
Where lingering suns the summer days prolong.
And rugged oaks, their lengthening
shadows fling,
Athwart the sunshine of the silent
spring,
While blue Ontario, sparkling through the trees,
With grateful breezes fans the hour of ease."

Selected For Royal Society.

A complete list of Mr. Kirby's prose, as well as poetical, writings, may be found in the bibliography of the members of the Royal Society of Canada, which is included in the twelfth volume of their proceedings. He was one of the twenty original members of the English section named at its formation by the Marquis of Lorne.

Besides "The U. E.", "The Golden Dog," and "The Canadian Idylls," a collection of his short poems named above, Mr. Kirby's chief prose publications were, "The Memoirs of the Servos Family," and the "Annals of Niagara."

Mr. Kirby was for several years president of the Niagara Historical Society, and took a deep interest in everything connected with the preservation of historical monuments and scenes. This interest was notably manifested in a letter which he wrote with his own hand while confined in bed during an illness last year, and addressed to Miss Carnochan, president of the Niagara Historical Society.

Also Wrote Three Plays.

Mr. W. D. Lighthall, of Montreal, is authority for saying that Mr. Kirby was the author of three unpublished plays, "Beaumanoir," "Joseph in Egypt," "The Queen's Own."

But it is as the author of that romantic story, "The Golden Dog," that Mr. Kirby will be long remembered by the rest of the world, as well as in Canada. An account of the origin of the novel is given by the author himself in a letter written to Sir James Le Moine in 1879. "I happened to be in Quebec in 1865, my business being to attend to a bill then pending in Parliament. I bought one of your 'Maple Leaves,' and the account you gave of the Chien d'Or took my fancy very much. Sulte and I were sitting in the window of the St. Louis Hotel one day, and I spoke to him about the story, and wanted him to write it out and jestingly said that if he would not write a novel on it, I would. Sulte did not take the fancy, and I thought no more about it until my return home, when I found the Chien d'Or sticking like a burr to my imagination . . . and I wrote the story as I got the time."

Manuscript of Book Mislaid.

The manuscript was sent to a London publishing house, and mislaid for several years. Finally it was discovered in the Grand Trunk station at Toronto, and the author, after having remodelled it, gave the story to Mr. John Lovell, of Montreal, by whom it was published in 1877. A French translation appeared seven years later.

The merit of the book was slow in being recognized at first, but it gradually took a strong hold on the attention of those who loved a fine romance, and travelers at Quebec began to ask for the whereabouts of the stone with a rude drawing of a dog gnawing a bone which had been set over the door of the Bourgeois Philibert's door in the Rue Buade. It is now built into the Quebec postoffice which replaces the house of the Bourgeois.

Praised by Tennyson.

Mr. Morgan, in his Canada Men and Women of the Time, says that Lord Tennyson wrote to Mr. Kirby saying that few novels had given him more pleasure, and that he would like to write a poem on the subject.

The lovely and good Amelie De Repentigny; her brother, the unfortunate Le Gardeur; the wicked and beautiful Angelique des Meloises; the Bourgeois' son, Col. Philibert; Caroline de St. Castin, who kept Bigot's heart, although even her fate could not altogether soften it; the infamous La Corriveau; as long as Quebec lasts, these shades, partly historical, partly of the imagination, are likely to be recalled by anyone who loves the beauty of the city and its association with romance; nor as long as they are remembered is there any likelihood that the name of William Kirby as a Canadian novelist will lack the honor which is so rightly his due.

BELLE ISLE NOT CANADA'S.

Belongs to Uncle Sam—There Is No Doubt About It.

There will be no dispute between this country and the United States as to the ownership of Belle Isle, in the Detroit River. There isn't room for any.

Louis Sands, chief of the Chippewa Indians on the Walpole Island reservation, in the St. Clair River, is reported to be in possession of an old chart showing Belle Isle, which the city of Detroit has turned into a magnificent public park at an expense of millions of dollars, to be in Canadian waters. The island, according to this story, together with several smaller islands in the American waters of the St. Clair River, was never legally transferred from the British to the American Government.

This story was brought to the attention of James White, Dominion geographer.

"There is no question about it," said Mr. White unhesitatingly, "and can be none. Fortunately all that has been definitely settled."

The geographer produced charts and memoranda showing how and where the international boundary was fixed under the treaty of Ghent. He traced a line drawn from down near Cornwall up through Lake Ontario and Lake Erie, and through the Detroit and St. Clair rivers. This line was drawn from actual surveys in the making of which the representatives of the two countries were engaged for eight years. The line follows the channel of the river and is drawn to the southeast of Belle Isle—Hog Island it was called in those days—thus giving that island to the United States. Proceeding, the line turns to the west of Isle a la Peche, giving that island to Canada. The decision in regard to this section of the boundary was finally reached in June, 1822. The division was so clearly made that it has never since been the subject of dispute between the two countries. Canadian Government officials laugh at the idea of their being any question about it now. The disposition of the islands in the Detroit River is not only shown plainly by the charts, but is specifically laid down in the text of the agreement between the United States and Great Britain.

Belle Isle is not for Canada.

An Interesting New Ontarian.

One of the most interesting men of New Ontario is Major J. R. Gordon, C. E., now of Cobalt, but formerly of Sudbury. Major Gordon is one of the few who are privileged to read their obituaries. Years ago, and before the days of the C. P. R., a canoe supposed to be his was found on the banks of the French River, and based on this a report that he had been drowned found its way into the newspapers. This caused a fruitless search and great anxiety to his family and friends, but a few days later Major Gordon returned from an expedition into New Ontario, and had the curious experience of reading an obituary notice of himself. Major Gordon was one of the pioneers of the Sudbury district and of New Ontario, which he has thoroughly explored. His recent feat of engineering in the Cobalt district has attracted widespread attention as the result of a profound study of the mineralogical character and geological conditions of the district. He concluded that a large vein of silver ore ran under Clear Lake, in the Township of Coleman. In a most skillful and ingenious fashion he attached a diamond drill, operated by a gasoline engine, to a scow hastily constructed on the lake, and succeeded in piercing the vein within a few inches of the point calculated on, at a depth of about seventy feet. Major Gordon received his scientific training at the School of Practical Science, Toronto, which has produced so many successful engineers. His father was a distant cousin of Gen. Gordon, known as "Chinese" Gordon. Robertson Smith was a relative on his mother's side. One of his brothers is "Ralph Connor," and another, Dr. A. R. Gordon, is a distinguished member of the professoriate of the University of Toronto.

Thirty Years In One Pulpit.

On Dominion Day, St. Paul's Church, Peterboro', was the occasion of the celebration of the thirtieth anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. S. F. Torrance, D. D. St. Paul's is remarkable in the fact that, although seventy-three years old, it has only had two pastors, the late Rev. J. M. Roger and Dr. Torrance. A native of Montreal, the son of the late David Torrance, the founder of the Dominion Line of steamships, the doctor is a graduate of McGill, of the Presbyterian Church School of Edinburgh, and of the Presbyterian College of Montreal. Soon after his graduation he was actively identified with the mission work of D. L. Moody in Scotland, and in 1876 was called to St. Paul's, Peterboro', where he has since remained. He received the honorary degree of D. D. from Knox College in 1894, and is, in truth, a doctor well beloved by all who know him.

CLUB LIFE ECONOMIES

POOR MEN IN THE SWELL ORGANIZATIONS OF NEW YORK.

A Democracy Where All, Regardless of Income, Are Equal—Membership In a First Rate Club Regarded as a Profitable Investment.

A good many country visitors are disappointed when they learn the sober truth that New York has no clubs composed exclusively of millionaires. It is harder still to make country folk believe that hundreds of men join the so called swell clubs in large part from motives of economy.

There are scarcely three clubs in the city that do not include a considerable number of poor men in their membership. The average income of the whole membership of the ten best known clubs in the city is probably nearer $10,000 a year than $50,000 a year, and almost every one of these clubs includes some scores of men with incomes well below $10,000 and a good many with incomes well below $5,000.

There is a real democracy of New York club life. Youths in their early twenties and just beginning their careers on very moderate salaries frequent truly palatial clubhouses, breakfast in rooms such as few princes ever use and lounge before fireplaces that are to be matched only in the most splendid buildings of Europe.

The poor man's credit at the club is as good as the rich man's, and both are impartially posted when they neglect to pay their bills in good season. There are a good many instances also in which the monthly bills of the poor man are higher than those of his rich fellow member, for the frequenters of clubs are apt to be the poorer rather than the richer members.

Many a man of small means regards his membership in a first rate club in the light of a profitable investment. Such a man, if a confirmed bachelor, has probably lived for twenty years within half a block of the club, paying a few hundreds a year for a small bedroom and finding all his luxuries in the apartments of the clubhouse.

Without being in the least mean he makes of the club a money saving institution for himself. Its comfortable lounging rooms save him annually from $300 to $1,000 a year in rent, according to the location in which he has his modest lodgings. After that he saves a fair percentage on everything he eats and drinks at the club.

His simple breakfast costs him perhaps 10 per cent less than it would cost at any restaurant he would be likely to frequent, and the same is true of his dinners. If he takes three-fourths of his meals at the club he saves annually about $100 in tips.

If he drinks wine at dinner he saves from 10 to 25 per cent upon every bottle. If he permits himself the luxury of a cab he saves a handsome percentage by ordering it through the club and avoids all possibility of a row with the cabby over the amount of the fare. Many a man writes all his letters of a social character and some of a business character at the club, and thus saves from $15 to $40 a year in stationery.

He need buy no books, nor need he subscribe to a library, for there is the club library free for his use. He never need buy a periodical or even a newspaper save when he travels, for all that he reads are freely supplied by the club. And the enjoyment of all these things imposes upon him no considerable expenditure for extravagant luxuries. He is sure, especially in the college clubs, to find plenty of men with like modest incomes and simple tastes as himself, and he may sit for hours with cronies over the cafe table without spending money that he cannot afford and without giving offense to the servants of the house committee.

Most club members probably do not keep a debit and credit account with the club, but the man of modest means and moderate habits would find the examination of such an account a matter of great satisfaction. Such a man, paying $250 as an entrance fee and $75 a year in dues, is likely to find himself at the end of twenty years a long way ahead of the game. The club in twenty years has cost him rather less than $2,000 for entrance fees, dues and contributions to the Christmas box, and his savings by reason of the club have been from $10,000 to $16,000.

A Sister's Love.

A Boston clergyman whose work takes him among the poor of that town tells a pretty story of sisterly love existing among the humble and unfortunate. One day a pale and ragged girl of about ten years was seen going along the street carrying on her back her crippled brother, nearly as old as she. A stranger stopped her by saying that she was overexerting herself. "He is too heavy for you to carry," he said. The child of the ghetto looked up at him reproachfully, saying: "He ain't heavy. He is my brother."

Capsicine.

The active principle of capsicum, or red pepper, is a volatile oil known as capsicine. It is so exceedingly acrid that a quarter of a grain exposed to the air in a room will diffuse itself throughout the apartment and cause all present to cough and sneeze as though the pepper had been taken into the mouth or nostrils.

The Height of Fame.

Superlative fame is where a man has not only forced his name into everybody's mouth, but has kept it there until the first class newspapers are spelling it the same way every time they mention it.

Don't refuse to tell or show the apprentice what to do, for you once had to learn all that you know.

THE BUCKET SHOPS.

Description of Their Business and Their Method of Pursuing It—A Popular Error Corrected.

On the subject of reckless speculation public opinion may not always be enlightened, or may not exactly square with public practice, but it is generally sound. If a plebiscite were taken as to the moral character of ventures of the get-rich-quick order there are few voters who would hesitate to put their mark opposite the word "bad" on the ballot-paper, though at that particular moment the majority might have their earnings staked on some "wild cat" enterprise. Especially is the lure of the "ticker" an evil against which the mass of the people are forearmed by their consciences, if not by their intelligences. Millions of adults to whom it is a mystery denounce it as an iniquity, but somehow more or less of "the public" always makes its way to the market and stays there.

A Popular Error.

Reckless speculation has no peculiar haunts. It is carried on in the marts of conservative business as well as in the resorts of the gambling fraternity. The "ticker" is heard alike in the legitimate broker's office and in the bucket shop, and plungers are to be met with in both places. In the one, as in the other, there is trading on margin. Fixing on these points in common, and being uninformed as to the points of difference, the undiscriminating but righteous public condemns both, and, worse than all, seizes on the term "bucket shop" as a convenient name for both. The recent raid in Toronto was sufficiently sensational to be the talk of the town, talk in which the error often cropped up that "bucket shop" was a slang term embracing all brokers executing orders for stocks, bonds, or produce on margin. Many people otherwise well versed in the ways of business, and not without experience of stock-dealing, show themselves to be unaware of the distinction.

The Broker.

The legitimate broker buys and sells shares, bonds and produce, taking and making delivery of the actual property for his customers. If a client orders 100 shares of C. P. R. common stock at a stated price the broker gets it for him if it is obtainable at that price. Another service the broker very commonly renders. He obtains for the customer a loan of the money, over and above the latter's margin, that is required to pay for the stock, the stock itself being pledged as collateral for the borrowed funds. But there is an actual purchase of the stock, an actual payment of the purchase sum, and an actual delivery of the script. The business is facilitated if the broker belongs to a stock exchange, that is to say, a market place in which commission dealers meet at specified hours to bid and offer for securities that are to be bought or sold according to the varying orders of clients. The business of a great stock exchange, such as that of New York, is vast. For the purposes of this trade a tremendous mechanism has come into existence.

Bucket Shops.

Bucket shops are parasites that have fastened on the regular stock exchange and produce exchange business. There could be no bucket shops if there were not legitimate trades in securities and produce. The buying and selling, so-called, in these places is altogether fictitious. They take a customer's order exactly the same as it is taken in the legitimate broker's office, only they do not execute it, though they give him a memorandum in which a purchase or sale on his account at the price of the moment is recorded. If the price goes up, and he is insistent enough to have the stock then sold, he will have a profit to his credit. This, of course, cannot have come from the payment made by a purchaser, for there was no purchased. The difference between the price of the lot when the so-called buying was done for the customer and when the so-called selling was done for him, comes out of the pocket of the bucket shop proprietor. The latter has bet that the price would not go up and had lost. As the frequenters of such places are usually speculating for a rise, if there is a bull market the bucket shop eventually gets "cleaned out" by its customers, or to save his money its proprietor closes up.

Profit by Dealers.

In times of falling prices the clients of the bucket shops cling to the "bull" side as they do in days of prosperity, and then it is the bucket shop man who wins the bets. On the reaction of three years ago the bucket shop people made rich hauls. At other times, when there is neither a "bull" nor a "bear" market, but what is called a traders' market, that is, when prices are up and down, the bucket shops usually do very well. In such times their daily letters are full of warning to customers to hold on, as a big rise is coming. The customers who heed that advice generally experience a smart setback which wipes out their slender margin and turns it into the coffers of the bucket shop man. All the manager's arts must be plied to keep a customer from selling when the latter has a profit in sight, and to accelerate his selling when the market has declined. In other words, while it is the policy of the legitimate brokers to have his clients make money so that they may increase their business with him, it is necessary to the existence of the bucket shop proprietor's business that his clients lose money. Among his clients there are usually some who know the condition of the actual market and are able to keep their margin good. To find money to pay their winnings and to make profits for himself, the bucket shop keeper must shake his weaker customers out. This is one reason why the business was placed under the ban of the Criminal Code.

Origin of the Term.

The bucket shop got its name and its start in Chicago. On the Board of Trade there grain is dealt in lots of 5,000 bushels. Operators who bid for broken lots, as 1,000 bushels, were spoken of disdainfully as buyers of wheat by bucketfuls. These buyers segregated in what is known as the open exchange, and their places of business were called bucket shops. The name extended to dealers in broken lots of securities. Then slender margins became a distinguishing feature. Finally the term became specialized to its present sense.

A Lure For Cock Robin.

Two coins clinked together give so good an imitation of the robin's metallic note that this device has long been employed in England to attract the welcome "harbinger of spring." Formerly male robins were snared by the clinking of two copper-pennies near a dummy bird. The dummy was perched on a twig smeared with bird lime, and cock robin, attracted by the sound and suspecting a rival, flew at him with blood in his eye. This is in violation of the bird laws in the United States, and no one who lives where robins make their home in confidence is likely to give the odd trick so unpleasant a finale. The clinking coppers serve a much more agreeable purpose as a means of rendering cock robin sociable.

A Fortune In a Song.

Song writing is one of the most lucrative of occupations, provided one has the knack of appealing to the popular taste. The average writer stands a better chance of making money by producing pathetic rather than so called "comic" songs. "The Lost Chord" has made three or four fortunes. It has been the most lasting success on record, and for years Sir Arthur Sullivan, as composer, and Madam Antoinette Sterling, for whom it was specially written, received a royalty amounting to 12 cents each on every copy sold. It was a gold mine to the publishers too.

Glorious Twelfth Fitly Celebrated.

AT TRENTON AND MANY OTHER PLACES IN THIS DISTRICT YESTERDAY — A FINE DAY AND MANY FINE FEATURES.

The Glorious Twelfth of July was splendidly celebrated in this district, and from all points the same story comes, plenty of enthusiasm, but nothing to mar in any way the enjoyment of those taking part or the traditions of the day.

5000 VISITORS AT TRENTON.

As our readers know, the local brethren went to Trenton, to take part in the splendid celebration held there.

Trenton was truly en fete for the occasion, and Dr. Jacques, the mayor, estimated that fully 5000 visitors were in attendance.

The decorations were fine, and the good old town of Trenton never looked better.

The procession started about 2 p. m., and was a goodly sight to see, Twelve lodges of Orangemen, True Blues and 'Prentice Boys were in the parade and they marched proudly, to be sure. Four brass bands were in line, also many fifers and drummers. There was, as usual, no lack of music in the Twelfth of July parade.

The procession was formed at the post office and marched all over the town. It was very hot, and many of the boys, no doubt, would cheerfully have taken a dip in the Boyne water if they had been near that historic stream yesterday afternoon.

The oratory happened near the Town Hall, where a platform had been erected.

Mayor Jacques was chairman of the meeting and was very gracious in his speech of welcome to the visitors. Brief but fervent and impressive speeches were made by Rev. Mr. McMullen, Methodist minister, of Trenton; M. B. Morrison, M.P.P.; Mr. Wellington Boulter, of Picton; G. Ostrom, ex-M.P.P., of Trenton; Mr. W. I. Cole, of this city, and Mr. F. M. Clarke, Grand County Secretary, of this city.

The speeches were intently listened to, and the sentiments of the speakers liberally applauded.

At the conclusion of the meeting the visitors started to return to their various homes.

The contingent from this city was accompanied by Mr. Thomas Wills, past Grand County Master, who stated that, 50 years ago, he attended a similar demonstration in Trenton. Few Orangemen in this district today can say that.

BIG CELEBRATION AT MARMORA.

It isn't easy to get the start of the Orangemen and their hosts of admirers at rising on "The Twelfth," as the writer found when he went to Marmora yesterday. Half-past four, he thought, would beat them all, but bless you he wasn't in it. He believes now that they don't go to bed at all, that they began celebrating at midnight. For while he was yet yawning and getting the sleep out of his eyes, he met the brethren, their wives and children and the lads and lasses—"every mother's son of them" already, all travel stained on their way to "the walk" at that enterprising northern burg, Marmora. For miles and miles, long before he reached there, the roll of the drums were heard and every road was crowded with vehicles of all kinds drawn by horses that can't be excelled anywhere. Had it not been for the all-pervading smell of the extensive lumber yards of the Pearce Co., the river and a few other landmarks, he would have thought he had been dropped down in the wrong place, so great was the metamorphosis from the aforetime Marmora. Arches, flags, banners, streamers, crossed and recrossed every street, and on either side of the main aisle the houses could scarce be seen for the display of bunting and evergreens. The day is not long past when "high water pants" were a necessity in the junior sawdust town, so deep was the mud on its thoroughfares; now not only granolithic sidewalks abound, but granolithic crossings of the latest and most improved style have been put down by the enterprising council, and electricity lights streets and homes.

Marmora L.O.L. No. 31 — Brother Thomas Warren, worshipful master, had its work cut out for it, when it undertook to welcome all the lodges at the gates of the city, for the lodges arrived by various roads about the same hour, and they felt like the man does who tries to see, at the same time, what's going on in the rings of a three-ringed circus. The gathering of the clans was at the fine agricultural park. Here an immense tent had been pitched to be used for a dining-room, where every man and woman loyal to the cause, ate, drank and were merry, or, if they needed not anything as substantial as dinner, refreshments booths abounded. Every shekel went into one coffer, the treasury of 319, for your Orangeman of North Hastings counts he has only half done his duty if their demonstrations do not contribute to the erection of some church, or to help some needy brother's family, or towards the erection of an Orange Hall. What they were after this year was paying for the new Orange hall for 319, which was erected last year, and, will you believe it? they accomplished it. And no wonder, for every lodge around them contributed materials for the dinner, and the brethren of 319 went away down deep in their pockets to get rid of debt. One of the speakers in the afternoon said that from forty years' knowledge of what the Orangemen of North Hastings had done by their 12th of July and 5th of November demonstrations, they had been the means of contributing over $75,000 for church, charitable and Orange purposes.

At one o'clock the procession was formed, and a magnificent one it was. Not only were there mounted District Marshals, but every lodge had its marshal on horseback. It was a good horse show; what fine prancing steeds they were, and how well they were ridden! What fine-looking men! was the general remark, and as nearly all of the lodge members were dressed in white and had uniform regalia they were most attractive. The procession consisted of 14 Orange Lodges and the Loyal True Blues of Marmora, arranged as follows:

Central Hastings District No. 1.
Worshipful Master — James McComb; Marshal, H. J. Boyd.
Lodge 172—Master, W. W. Dracup; Marshal, W. H. Scole.
Lodge 319—Master, Thos. Warren; Marshal, Wm. Gray.
Lodge 412—Master, Robert Craig; Marshal, M. N. Sweet.
District No. 3.
Worshipful Master—Robt. Woods; Marshal, Wm. Tanner.
Lodge 110—Master T. Montgomery; Marshal, Wm. Montgomery.
Lodge 509—Master, A. Burnett; Marshal, Thos. Tanner.
Lodge 285—Master, J. M. Rupert.
District No. 4.
Worshipful Master—George Connelly; Marshal, John Morton.
Lodge 104—Master, John Newton.
Lodge 1094— Master, A. Wright; Marshal, Thos. Henthorne.
Lodge 1289—Master, George Connelly; Marshal, Wm. Morton.
County of East Peterboro.
Lodge 520—Master, John Downs, Cordova.
Lodge 1255—Master, John McFaul, Blairton.
County of Northumberland.
Lodge 620—Master, S. H. Arthur, Wooler.
Lodge 1338—Master, D. H. Brown, Stanwood.
County of South Hastings.
Lodge 240—Master, Clement Armstrong, Frankford.

An excellent brass band from Wooler led the procession and each lodge had the traditional fifes and drums.

After marching through the principal streets the procession returned to the Agricultural Park, accompanied by a throng of about five thousand.

Shortly after, Mr. T. C. McConnell, of Springbrook, Past County Master, and now Deputy Grand Secretary of the Provincial Grand Lodge of Ontario East, who was chief engineer of the day's proceedings, called the large audience to order and made a most capable chairman. What proved to be a highly interesting meeting was opened with prayer by the Rev. W. G. Clarke, B.A., of Stirling, and addresses were made by the chairman; Rev. E. A. Powell, Coe Hill; Rev. W. G. Clarke; Messrs. B. B. Ostrom, Frankford; P. P. Clarke, St. Ola; James White, Madoc; Wm. White, Tweed; Wm. Johnson and E. Guss Porter, M.P., Belleville.

The speeches were interspersed by suitable selections by the Wooler band.

At the close cheers were given for the King and for Orangemen all over the world.

The absence of Mr. A. Carscallen, ex-M.P., and J. W. Pearce, M.P.P., through illness, was regretted.

AT MADOC.

Madoc, Ont., July 12.—The 12th of July celebration here to-day was one of the largest and most successful in the history of this part of the County of Hastings. In all about fifteen lodges took part in the procession during the afternoon. Madoc Lodge No. 160, was awarded the first prize for the largest and best appearing lodge in the parade.

SCAFFOLD WAS OVER CROWDED.

AND SIX RAWDON MEN GOT A BAD SHAKING-UP LAST SATURDAY—JOHN GAY BADLY HURT.

On Saturday last an accident occurred at Mr. James Spencer's place, Rawdon township, which might easily have caused fatal results. It appears that a barn was being raised when the scaffold fell, precipitating six men to the ground. One of the number, Mr. John Gay, had his collar-bone and three ribs broken. The unfortunate man is doing nicely and no serious results are anticipated. We are informed that two other men were severely shaken up, but had no bones broken. The men fell a distance of upwards of 20 feet. Evidently too many upon the scaffold at one time was the cause of the accident.

Horse Frightened By Automobile.

Last evening Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Lavelliere, who reside near Glen Miller, in Sidney township, were driving along Bridge street west, when their horse becaama frightened at an approaching automobile. The horse did not ran away, but in manoeuvring about caused Mrs. Lavelliere to be thrown out of the vehicle. Although the lady required medical assistance, she was not seriously injured.

FIRE BRIGADE WERE BUSY LAST NIGHT AND THIS MORNING

Shortly before 7 o'clock last evening the Fire Brigade were called out to extinguish a blaze which originated in a small barn belonging to Mrs. S. O'Toole, situated on Station road. The damage done did not exceed $10.

The brigade had another run this morning at 8.45, and for a few minutes had quite a blaze to contend with. The fire was in Mr. Wm. McGie's barn, on Foris street, and before the blaze was extinguished about $200 damages had been sustained. The structure is in every respect up-to-date, and the roof is covered with iron sheeting, which broke out in the upper storey and got between the sheeting and the woodwork. How the fire originated is not known. Mr. McGie was in the barn about half an hour before the fire occurred and he saw no indication of fire. The loss sustained is covered by insurance.

HOLDS UP PROROGATION

Senator Landry Again in Role of Obstinate Objector.

Protests Against the Repeal of Ex-Ministers' Pensions, But Finally Bill Goes Through, But Winding Up of Parliament Is Delayed 24 Hours—The Commons Calls on Imperial House to Protect Labor Market.

Ottawa, July 13.—Senator Landry is under the limelight. He was prominent years ago when as a Conservative he moved a vote of confidence in Sir John A. Macdonald's Government. The motion was so drawn that it had to be voted down. Very soon after Mr. Landry, M. P., became a Senator.

Last year he threatened to block prorogation by talking against time on the trading stamp bill. Yesterday he postponed prorogation for 24 hours, protesting against the repeal of the pension bill.

Prorogation Postponed.

Wednesday night the bill came to the Senate. It was read a first time and yesterday morning it was pressed for a second reading by Hon. Mr. Scott. Hon. Mr. Scott said he had intended and thought he had last night moved that the bill respecting the pensions of Privy Councillors should be read the second time yesterday. He moved the suspension of the rule requiring notice in order that the bill might be read the second time.

Senator Landry objected to the suspension of the rule.

The Speaker said he could not put the motion as unanimous. Consent was required to suspend a rule.

In spite of persuasion by many Senators, Senator Landry persisted in his objection, and Senator Scott announced that prorogation was postponed.

Finally the bill was passed without division.

House of Commons Was Ready.

With a very slim order paper, and a still slimmer attendance of members, the House of Commons met yesterday morning.

Mr. Boyce (E. Algoma) called attention to the unsanitary and unsatisfactory condition of the postoffice at Copper Cliff. People desired an improvement in accommodation, and Mr. Boyce also asked for the dismissal of the postmaster, who, he stated, was connected with the famous "Minnie M." excursion, but had been retained in office.

Mr. Lemieux replied that his attention had not previously been called to the matter, and promised it attention as soon as the session closed.

Concurrence.

The Senate amendments to the bill respecting Senators and members of the House of Commons were concurred in. The bill prohibits members and Senators from accepting fees for promoting bills before the House of Commons, or transacting business with the departments of the Government.

On motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the resolution of Mr. Ralph Smith (Nanaimo), requesting the Imperial Parliament to pass an act providing penalties for inducing persons by false representations as to the condition of the labor market to emigrate to Canada, was called up and adopted.

Having exhausted the order paper so far as Government business was concerned, the House took a recess until 2.45 p. m.

Not a Quorum Present.

The House reassembled about three o'clock with five or six members present. It is doubtful if twenty members can be mustered for prorogation.

The Lord's Day bill is ready for the royal assent.

CHAMBERS OF COMMERCE.

Resolutions Passed In Busy Day's Session in London—Postage From Britain—Parcel Rate Uniform.

London, July 13.—(C. A. P.)—With the hope of concluding last night, the Congress of Chambers of Commerce proceeded briskly to business yesterday morning. The Canadians were the most active delegates in attendance. It is a notable fact that, of the 46 subjects on the program, 21 were initiated in form by the Canadian chambers.

A message was received from Mr. Chamberlain, hoping that the deliberations of the congress would result in promoting the welfare and union of the empire.

Postage From Britain.

J. F. Ellis of Toronto opened proceedings by moving a resolution that "In the opinion of this Congress the British Government should adopt rates of postage such as would encourage the circulation of British newspapers and periodicals in all parts of the empire, and thus promote trade unity." After discussion, the resolution was carried unanimously.

Uniform Rates For Parcels.

J. A. Ballantyne, South Scotland, moved a resolution recommending that colonial postoffices throughout the empire adopt uniform rates for parcel post, the same as now exist between Great Britain and New Zealand. The motion was carried, Toronto and South Africa delegates dissenting.

A motion by J. W. Keogh, Riveria, that universal penny postage be endorsed as promoting the development of international relations, was seconded by C. H. Cattells, Montreal.

Colored News.

R. Wilson Smith, Montreal, moved to request the Imperial Government to devise means whereby cable and telegraph news to and from all parts of the empire might be furnished entirely through imperial channels. He directed attention to a pamphlet issued by the Ottawa Government on a proposal for an imperial intelligence service, and said he did not want to create a monopony of cable news, but to devise methods by which the news from different parts of the empire would come uncolored with foreign views.

Sir Sandford Fleming spoke emphasizing the arguments on the pamphlet and the motion passed unanimously.

Fast Steamship Service.

A resolution in favor of a fast steamship service for mails and trade between the colonies and the mother country was carried unanimously.

Tax On Travelers.

B. S. Taylor, Birmingham, referred to Quebec in moving the abolition of taxes levied by certain colonies on commercial travelers. The motion was carried.

The place of the next meeting has yet to be decided. Three places were voted on—Sydney, Australia; Cape Town, South Africa, and Victoria, B.C.

Removal of Embargo.

By 29 to 24, a resolution favoring the removal of the cattle embargo was defeated. The majority took the view that the congress was not competent to deal with the question.

R. I. Copeland, Toronto, moved that steps be taken to establish uniform patent, copyright and insolvency laws throughout the empire.—Carried.

A motion asking for a change in the naturalization laws, was declared lost.

Sir Albert Rollitt's resolution, to take steps to promote technical and commercial education, was carried.

R. J. Graham, Belleville, placed on record a resolution recommending the railways of Canada being for the general advantage of the empire, should receive imperial consideration in any plan of imperial federation and defence.

The principle of arbitration for the settlement of international, commercial and labor disputes was endorsed by a resolution by Sir Albert Rollitt and R. S. Fraser of London.

The congress concluded its business shortly after 6 o'clock.

LESSER FIGHTING FORCE.

War Secretary Haldane Would Reduce It By Many Battalions.

London, July 13.—War Secretary Haldane in the House of Commons yesterday announced the Government's plans for a more economical administration and a more efficient maintenance of the army. William J. Bryan was among those present in the House. The War Secretary proposes:

Expeditionary force of 150,000 men available for war, with a territorial organization capable of expanding the forces abroad.

Reduction of forces by seven battalions of infantry abroad and three battalions at home. No reduction in India, but colonies will have 25 instead of 30 battalions.

Mobilization of 63 batteries of artillery out of a total home establishment of 99 batteries, leaving 36 batteries for training purposes.

Expeditionary force will be 5,000 men stronger than any army Great Britain has ever organized for foreign service.

Well Upholstered Furniture.

When Paradise Corner organized its woman's club it was determined that everything should be done in the most businesslike way. "My husband makes so much fun of women's meetings," said one of the youngest members. "He says women never remember to say 'Mrs. President' or speak of 'the chair' or 'the secretary'—that is, he says they are liable to forget at any time and mention names instead, but I told him we shouldn't, any of us.

"Why, as I told him, we are so particular that when we had that extra meeting at Miss Lowden's, and it was so hot and Miss Ransom looked about baked in her new coat, Miss Lowden feels so strongly that we mustn't ever run to careless ways of speech that she said, 'Wouldn't it be wiser for the chair to remove its coat, though it is so awfully becoming to it?' And it really did sound a little queer till you thought it over."—Youth's Companion.

Unfeeling.

Mother (angrily)—The brute! He has dared to scold you? Newly Married Daughter (sobbing)—Not so bad as all that, mamma. I scolded him from the house five minutes ago, and the unfeeling brute hasn't come back yet!

The left side of the face is usually considered by artists to be more beautiful than the right.

THE WATERLOO MUTUAL

President and Manager Differ on Investments.

Go Afield, Says One; Keep Money at Home In Canada, Says the Other—Graveyard Insurance Is Explained to Commission — Company Is Against Rebating — Manager Says Mutual Life Has Original Ideas.

Waterloo, July 13.—The Insurance Commission was graced yesterday morning by the presence of two women policyholders of the Mutual Life. They sat out the longest session held yet, and appeared anxious to see the affairs of their company laid bare.

Robert Melvin, president and only survivor of the first board of directors of the Mutual Life Co., was called. The salary list was the first point taken up. Witness commenced on $3,500 per year, but was now getting $8,500. In 1905, $13,600 was paid to the president, vice-president and directors. T. E. Bowman, the first president, held office until 1897, when witness was elected. Hon. Justice Britton as a director gets $1,000 per annum in fees and expenses. Mr. Melvin said that many policyholders attended the annual meeting, but he wished a great many more would attend. The meeting was well advertised.

Mutual Loans.

Speaking of loans Mr. Melvin, as president of the Guelph and Ontario Loan, put through a deal whereby the Mutual borrowed $90,000 to purchase bonds of the Berlin and Hespeler and Galt Railway. The Mutual paid 1 per cent. for three months. In December, 1903, the Mutual Life had anticipated revenue to a considerable extent by making loans and taking investments. The Mutual had bought some Richmond debentures, which was the occasion of an overdraft, but to avoid having the overdraft appear in the annual statement the Molsons Bank came to the rescue. The bank held the debentures for a few days at the end of the year, and resold them to the Mutual. The whole board were wise to the proceeding.

Manager Geo. Wegenast was called. He began in 1880 as junior and rose to manager in 1898 at $3,000 a year. He succeeded Mr. Hendrie who was given a retiring allowance under the guise of salary as consulting actuary.

Agents on Board.

In 1891 a Belleville policyholder elected Agent Burrows a director, but as he could not hold both positions he resigned in favor of the agency. An Ottawa barrister also got proxies together and elected himself to the board for a year only. To-day the officers of the company hold a large number of proxies. In March, 1906, 3,400 proxies were held by the company. There were 26,519 policyholders and at the last annual meeting 8,453 votes were cast, or about 32.7 per cent. Thirty-five policyholders were present, of whom 27 were agents. The total vote cast was practical proxies had by the company. In fact, witness admitted that the president and manager had nearly all the proxies and practically controlled the affairs of the company.

Western Mortgages.

The executive committee dealt with all investments. Mortgage loans in the west were the chief investments which were put through by the agents, an inspector and a solicitor. Loans were also made in Western Ontario, but at no time have directors received commissions for putting through deals. The average rate of interest was 6.14 per cent., and fully half of the company's investments were in the west.

To Mr. Langmuir Mr. Wegenast said that the company had no trouble in placing their money out at interest, but that he was in favor of broadening the scope of investments in such a way that Canadian companies should be able to invest in foreign bonds, but stock should be eliminated entirely.

Melvin Contradicts.

Mr. Melvin jumped up and said that he was not in favor of letting a cent of the Canadian policyholders' money go out of Canada. Canadian money should be kept in Canada.

The Mutual Life had premium income amounting to $1,542,969.56 last year.

The investments of the Mutual were gone into in detail by the Dominion counsel. The witness explained how certain western loans had been secured, told of the purchase of thirty different blocks of real estate in the City of Toronto, Toronto Street Railway bonds and Springbank Navigation bonds. Money was not lost on any of these investments, although the Toronto property did not realize a great deal.

Graveyard Insurance.

Mr. Tilley took up the profit and loss statement. This showed that the actual death losses were $20,000 more than the expected death losses for the year 1905, and Mr. Wegenast said that that included "graveyard insurance for $10,000."

"What is graveyard insurance?" asked counsel.

Mr. Wegenast said that it was insuring a man at the point of death. This policy was put through by the medical examiner and the agent with the express purpose of deceiving the company.

Mr. Tilley discussed this question at length, and tried to make witness admit that insurance was procured in a careless way through brokerage firms.

The Mutual increased their business a half a million a year. Mr. Tilley thought it might be in the interests of the policyholders to let the business rest in these days of high expense, but witness said that competition was so keen a company could not afford to hold on the job for a second. The expenses for first year's business last year amounted to $173,082.

To Commissioner Kent, witness said that mortality of the Mutual Life was fairly uniform throughout the country.

Rebating.

Mr. Wegenast made it clear that no rebates were given for business obtained at head offices. "We don't recognize rebating at all," he said.

Mr. Tilley ~~took two~~ ordinary life policies for comparison. The premiums differed. Mr. Wegenast said that the company had not used their own rate in one case. They had lowered it to compete with a Toronto company. These were the only two specials that were issued.

New Non-Participating.

Non-participating insurance was just started in 1898. Mr. Tilley thought it did not come under the Mutual's charter. Witness said that the solicitor had discussed the matter with the board and told them to go ahead, and explained what he understood by the terms "mutual principle" in section 3.

The Mutual Life kept their policies on the card system, but a separate account for defined dividends for each policy in the ledger.

Annual Method.

Witness did not favor the annual distribution of policies which did not work out satisfactory. Quinquennial periods were better as profit earning chances were greater.

Mr. Tilley wanted to know what "reduced" policies were.

"The principle," said Mr. Wegenast, "is to make a policyholder loan of 20 per cent. of ordinary premium, which is treated as a debt against the policy and subject to payment only from profits."

Policy loans are about our safest security, said the manager.

Mutual Has Original Ideas.

"We have some original ideas," said Mr. Wegenast, and Mr. Tilley took up a policy loan agreement which he put in as an exhibit.

"Five per cent. gold bond is really a misnomer?" asked ~~Mr. Tilley, referring~~ to a certain class of policy, but witness said he had never had a policyholder write to him complaining that the term was misleading.

The Mutual had issued endowment policies to missionaries in foreign countries at regular rates because being missionaries they take care of themselves and don't work very hard.

R. G. Geary took up certain complaints against the inner working of the company, and the commission adjourned to get the train for Toronto.

8 OUT OF 34 KILLED.

Nearly All the Others Injured In Motor Bus Runaway.

London, July 13.—Owing to the brakes failing to act a motor omnibus running from London to Brighton dashed down a steep hill, near Crawley, yesterday morning and was overturned. Eight of the passengers were killed, and a score were badly hurt, some of them probably sustaining fatal injuries.

There were thirty-four passengers on the omnibus, mainly merchants of Orpington (10 miles from London), and all were either killed or injured.

The omnibus dashed down the hill at a terrific speed and collided with a tree, which was smashed to fragments.

ALMOST A LYNCHING.

Strathroy Crowd Had a Rope Ready to String Up Fiend.

Strathroy, July 14.—A tramp who attempted a criminal assault on the nine-year-old daughter of Frank Iver and was frightened away was threatened with lynching yesterday before the police sent him to London for safe keeping.

The little girl, Williston Iver, was crossing the bridge, when she was stopped by a man, who produced a bottle from his pocket and forced her to drink part of the contents, telling her if she did not do as told, or if she made any outcry he would kill her.

He carried her beneath the bridge, but fortunately a grocer's rig appeared and the man ran off.

The little girl jumped up and ran to her grandfather's, where she fell exhausted on the lawn.

The alarm was at once given, and Chief Wilson soon arrested the man in Moore's barber shop, where he went to have his appearance disguised.

When searched the fiend had a bottle labelled "paregoric" and a bottle of vaseline on him. He admitted his guilt and was sent to London at 1 o'clock.

The little girl's clothes were partly torn and soiled and she was terribly frightened.

The news soon spread around town and there was great excitement for a time, as it was expected he would have a hearing before Police Magistrate Noble before going to London, and a crowd had a rope ready for a lynching.

Toronto, July 14.—At the meeting of the Cabinet yesterday, it was decided that the four normal schools, for which provision was made at the last session of the Legislature, should be located at Peterboro, Hamilton, Stratford and North Bay, conditional in each case upon a proper site being furnished by the municipality.

Parliament Is Prorogued.

Few Hear His Excellency's Speech From the Throne.

Earl Grey Notes the Passing of Several Acts of Great Public Utility—Speech Records the Fact That Canada is Enjoying a Period of Prosperity Rarely Equalled in the History of Nations.

Ottawa, July 14.—The second session of the tenth Parliament of the Dominion of Canada was prorogued at 12 o'clock yesterday by the Governor-General. There was a slim attendance to witness the closing ceremonies. The Princess Louise Dragoon Guards supplied the escort for His Excellency to and from the Parliament Buildings, and the Governor-General's Foot Guards had a guard of honor drawn up in front of the main entrance. The usual salute was fired from Nepean Point. His Excellency the Governor-General delivered the following:

Speech From the Throne.

Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate:
Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

In relieving you from further attendance in Parliament I desire to thank you for the care and assiduity exhibited in the discharge of your laborious and exacting duties.

Invitation to the King.

Your invitation to His Majesty the King to visit this part of his dominions was duly forwarded to Buckingham Palace. That it would be a source of great rejoicing in Canada if His Majesty would favorably entertain the invitation is confirmed by many similar addresses adopted in the several provinces, cities and towns, all expressing the hope that His Majesty may honor us with another visit.

The Continuance of Prosperity.

It is very gratifying to note that Canada continues to enjoy a prosperity rarely equalled in the history of nations. The volume of exports and imports during the year just closed exceeds that of any previous record. The revenue also shows a remarkable increase, the receipts on account of consolidated fund having doubled in the last ten years.

Stream of Immigration.

The large number of private bills that have received their approval, having for their object the incorporation of railway and other industrial enterprises, affords additional evidence of the general prosperity prevailing over the Dominion. The stream of immigrants seeking homes in the western provinces continues to flow in increasing volume, and owing to the favorable conditions now existing in Alberta and Saskatchewan their vacant lands are being rapidly taken up.

Some Notable Measures Passed.

Several acts of great public utility have been added to the laws in the session now drawing to a close. Among the number I am glad to note:

An act for the better observance of the Lord's Day.

An act in restriction of usury.

An act to secure the better marking of fruit.

An act requiring that certain articles containing a proportion of gold and silver when offered for sale should be honestly marked.

An act relating to immigrants and immigration which, among other provisions, will enable the authorities to deport undesirable persons.

Preservation of the Forests.

It is earnestly to be hoped that your example in passing the act setting apart large areas for forest reserves will be followed by those Provincial Legislatures having jurisdiction over their public domain, and that a system of reforestration may be adopted in all parts of the Dominion, thereby preserving the uniform flow of our rivers and of our valuable water powers.

Revised Statutes Held Back.

In view of the many important acts passed and of the numerous amendments made to existing laws during this session it has been deemed expedient to stay the issue of the volume of the revised statutes, in order that the recent legislation may be embodied.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I thank you in His Majesty's name for the supplies you have so liberally voted.

Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate:
Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

A copy of the convention regarding commercial relations between Japan and Canada has now been received. The treaty has been duly ratified and exchanged, thereby giving Canada material advantages in our trade with Japan.

I now beg to express the hope that on your return to your several homes you will find evidences that the coming harvest will be a bountiful one, thus assuring another year's prosperity throughout the Dominion.

Manslaughter Charge.

Hamilton, July 14.—Alex. McDonald, a youth of 17, was yesterday morning committed for trial on the charge of manslaughter. It is charged that he annoyed a fellow-workman, Andrew McGarvey, at the Morton Manufacturing Co. by shying pieces of tin at him, and when McGarvey remonstrated, McDonald knocked him down and kicked him in the face. Blood poisoning sot in and McGarvey died.

Premier Whitney Off For England.

Toronto, July 14.—Premier Whitney leaves town to-day, en route for New York, whence he sails on Tuesday night by the Caronia for England. He will return from Liverpool on Sept. 1 by the Campania. He will be accompanied on the voyage over by Hon. Dr. Pyne. During the Premier's absence Hon. J. J. Foy, Attorney-General, will be acting Premier.

Salisbury Victim Dying.

Salisbury, Eng., July 14.—The bulletin posted at the infirmary here yesterday morning announced that Edward W. Sentell of Brooklyn, one of the passengers injured in the railway disaster of July 1, was sinking.

Scaffold Falls With Six.

Belleville, July 14.—At a barn-raising in Rawden Township, a scaffold fell, with six men on it. They were all badly bruised, but John Gay broke his collarbone and three ribs.

Memorial to Alexander Muir.

Toronto, July 14.—An Alexander Muir memorial fund was organized at a meeting of representative citizens at the city hall last night. The movement will be made a national one, and every mayor, reeve and warden from the Atlantic to the Pacific is to be invited to become a member of a national committee.

A Specimen "Graft" Merwin's "Rake Off."

AN EXAMPLE OF THE WAY THE PUBLIC CHEST IS BEING PLUNDERED.

Merwin's Profits Averaged 52 Per Cent.—He was a General Merchant and Manufacturer's Agent, Seemingly — A Real "Get-Rich-Quick" Scheme — Who Shared the Spoil With Merwin?

Ottawa, July 10. — It will be some years before the name of George D. Merwin is forgotten in Canada. This gentleman, who comes from the United States and is still in his early prime, has figured somewhat extensively in the Public accounts and in Parliamentary discussion. In the Marine Department accounts one easily and often finds Mr. Merwin's name. Also the name of F. L. Brooks, which is a Merwin firm. It is said that Merwin is the chief business partner of other contracting firms which have received a good deal of money from the Canadian Treasury, always without tender.

THE AUDITOR ENQUIRES.

In the Auditor-General's report of last year there is a letter from the Auditor of the Deputy Minister of Marine wanting to know why large purchases made from certain firms had been made without any evidence of public competition. Among the items in this criticism was one of $9930, paid to F. L. Brooks, one of $124,065, paid to George D. Merwin, and one of $428,298, to the Canadian Fog-Signal Company. (A. G. Report E page 208, 1905.)

A THIRD OF A MILLION.

Replying to Mr. Northrup on May 16th, the Minister of Marine stated that from the 1st of July, 1905, that is after the date of the Auditor-General's report, his Department had paid Mr. Merwin $104,521, and had one account of $362 to settle. Also the Department had paid to F. L. Brooks & Co., which is also Mr. Merwin, $69,613, and had still to pay him $32,062. (Hansard 1906, page 3411.)

We have something over $350,000 paid to Mr. Merwin in less than two years But this is only a portion of his receipts under the various firm names and agencies in which he appears.

A GENERAL DEALER.

There is a great variety in the goods bought from Mr. Merwin. He supplies gas buoys, cement, pumps, lathes, derricks, chains, pintish gas equipment, capstans, engines, boilers, cranes, and much of the ordinary merchandise of commerce. For some reason which ought to be discovered before the case is closed, the Department of Marine has chosen to buy from Merwin at second or third or fourth hand the ordinary machinery made in this country or elsewhere which could be bought first hand at from one-third to two-thirds of the price. There was a perfect infatuation for Merwin. If a boiler made in Galt was wanted the Department scrupulously avoided the manufacturer who was ready to sell it say for $600 and purchased from Merwin the same article from the same shop for $975.

MERWIN ACCOUNTS IN PARLIAMENT.

All through March, April and May after the accounts were down, Members of Parliament were insisting that these prices were outrageous. Over and over again George Taylor, M.P., Dr. Reid, M.P., and Mr. Northrup, M.P., who has a very good idea of what was going on about the Government Depot at Prescott, brought up the matter in the House. They produced offers from manufacturers showing the correct prices. They offered to submit evidence to show that there must have been a rake-off of somewhere about fifty per cent. in engines, boilers, pumps and other apparatus.

All these charges and statements were practically contradicted by the Minister and his supporters. Dozens of members supporting the Government protested against these criticisms. They argued that the prices mentioned by the critics were impossible. They found fault with their inquisitiveness. They defended everything.

IN THE COMMITTEE.

In spite of all the Opposition Members of the Public Accounts committee pressed the enquiry. Mr. Northrup had Mr. Merwin on the witness stand and examined him closely up to a certain point. Then Mr. Merwin failed. He refused to tell what the machinery cost him, and was supported by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Marine in his refusal. It was contended that the committee ought not to know the business secrets of business men.

Meanwhile it was discovered where Mr. Merwin bought some of his goods. It was shown by correspondents where the boilers were made and at what price two of them were sold by the manufacturer. Finally Mr Merwin, whose refusal to testify was to be brought up in the House announced that he would appear and make reply. Finally Mr. Merwin did appear but a change had come over him. He absolutely refused to give the original price of anything sold by him to the Government. For himself he said he had no objection, but the New York partner would not hear of it. There are many doubts about the existence of the New York partner but Mr. Merwin insisted that he was alive and that he was kicking.

ANOTHER WITNESS SUPPRESSED.

Meanwhile Mr. Wilson of Montreal from whom Mr. Merwin had made considerable purchases had been summoned and arrived at Ottawa with the accounts of these sales. But before he reached the witness stand, Mr Merwin had seen him and convinced him of the impropriety of disclosing their business. Whereupon Mr. Wilson declined to produce the accounts or to give the statements required unless the consent of Merwin should be obtained.

So the matter stood until Mr. Northrup and others announced their intention of carrying the case to the House, where a record would be made of the whole proceedings, and where members would have to stand up and vote for investigation or suppression. Mr. Northrup stated that he would also move in the House a resolution declaring that no more money be paid to Mr. Merwin while he refused to testify.

BROUGHT TO THE POINT.

The matter became so awkward that Mr Brodeur concluded that the question should be answered. It took a long time to get Brodeur to this point, for it was a good many weeks since Merwin's first refusal. When he did reach it the Minister suggested that Merwin try to get his partner's consent to have the facts revealed, so far as related to the few purchases from the Wilson firm of Montreal. In the suspiciously short time of an hour Mr. Merwin returned to the room announcing that he had obtained by telephone the consent of the obdurate partner. There was nothing then in the way of Mr Merwin making his statement.

SOME FACTS DISCLOSED.

Fifteen articles, costing the country $18,112 or about one twentieth part of the purchases from Merwin by the Government were mentioned in Wilson's testimony. He began with the boiler bought in Galt by Wilson and shipped thence to Prescott where it was delivered to the Government. The Wilsons took their profit and sold the article to Merwin for $660 and Merwin sent in his bill to the Government for $975. In August the Wilsons sold a Sturtevant engine to Merwin for $265, which he sold to the Government for $550, a little more than double the price. And so it went on through the list which is here presented in convenient tabular form with the product and percentages of profit.

	Merwin paid Wilson	Gov. paid Merwin.	Merwin's Profit.	Per cent.

ONLY A FRAGMENT.

It will be noticed that these are for the most part articles of common sale and use, largely of Canadian production. They could have been bought by the Government at the price that Merwin paid. Better than that they could have been bought at the price that was paid by the firm who sold him the goods. The favored contractor got his 52 per cent. not only on the manufacturer's price but on the profits of the wholesale firm, allowing the Montreal jobber the modest profit of ten per cent. We have $10,523 as the price for which the Department could have bought the machinery instead of $18,012. This is $7227 or 67 per cent. excess in the fifteen items. The Government bought twenty-five times as much and probably a great deal more from Mr. Merwin. On the other classes of goods he had much larger opportunities.

MERWIN'S GREAT CHANCE.

For the above is only gathering pebbles on the shore. A great ocean of adventure and exploitation lies beyond. Hundreds of thousands have been paid to Merwin for articles of which he claims to be the sole local agent. He makes a pretense that these appliances could not be got in any other way. If this were true Merwin will have a much better chance to deplete the Treasury than in plain common engines and boilers. For the purposes of making money the statement is true, since the department of marine has chosen to buy gas buoys, spar buoys, lighthouse lanterns, signalling apparatus, and various pintsch gas apparatus from Merwin at his own prices.

MAGNIFICENT PRICES.

And astounding prices they are. For instance there is one bill amounting to over $22,200 (A.G. Report B. 57.) It includes twelve spar buoys at $1600 each, ten lanterns at $300. Then on page B. 98, there is an order of $65,405 including 25 lanterns at $295 each, 1 gas buoy at $2700, 180 gas receivers at $95 each, 18 spar buoys at $875 each. In addition to the large sums mentioned above $25,000 had been paid to Merwin as an advance the year before.

Again on page 101 there are 20 more spar buoys at $1600 each, two bell buoys at $2500; 5 light ships at $650 each, 30,107 ft. of cable, $70,070; 5 sub-marine signal shore stations at $8000 each. The bill on that page reaching $68,540.

This catalogue might go on much longer before giving a complete idea of the opportunities of a Government contractor in the favored class who is equal to the task of claiming 187 per cent. profit on a common engine. How many hundred per cent. he claims on these spar buoys will not be known. He tells the committee that much of this apparatus is made in Germany. We may well imagine that when one half to two thirds of the whole payment revealed in the blue books finds its way to the pocket of Mr. Merwin.

WHO GOT THE MONEY?

How it is divided afterwards is another story. Mr. Merwin has come into sudden prominence. He did not start out with any part claim. There is no family connection known which explains the matter. One is forced inevitably to the conclusion that there is some division of profits among people who are influential on Parliament Hill.

TIMELY TOPICS.

BALLAD OF VEGETABLES.

A potato went out on a mash,
And sought an onion bed;
"That's pie for me!" observed the squash,
And all the beets turned red.
"Go 'way!" the onion, weeping, cried;
"Your love I cannot be;
The pumpkin be your lawful bride—
You cantaloupe with me."

But onward still the tuber came,
And lay down at her feet;
"You cauliflower by any name
And it will smell as wheat;
And I, too, am an early rose,
And you I've come to see;
So don't turnip your lovely nose,
But spinachat with me."

"I do not carrot all to wed,
So go, sir, if you please."
The modest onion meekly said,
"And lettuce, pray have peas!
Go, think that you have never seen
Myself, or smelled my sigh;
Too long a maiden I have been
For favors in your rye!"

"Ah, spare a cuss?" the tuber prayed;
"My cherryshed bride you'll be;
You are the only weeping maid
That's currant now with me?"
And as the wily tuber spoke
He caught her by surprise,
And giving her an artichoke,
Devoured her with his eyes.

The white man's trouble with the native in Natal is apparently, in part at least, due to the fact that white men are large holders of land which they do not cultivate, some having many thousands of acres. Their revenue is derived from a "hut tax" paid by native squatters, and the ideal of the owners seems to be to keep the country as the preserve of a white aristocracy resting on a basis of quasi African slavery. If this description, drawn from Natal sources of information, is at all correct the late native uprising may prove a blessing in disguise, should it bring home to the community the need of better land laws.

Certain architects in Toronto have confessed to taking bonuses from contractors. The charges made are more general than the confessions, and the statements imply that something of the kind is looked for. This is a revelation that calls for a very public investigation, one that will protect the honest from so heinous an offence, alike against the employing public and against the honest architect. The architect's position is one of trust. He is employed, and heavily paid, to see that the work is well and truly done. How can an architect bring a contractor to book who gave him a present "out of pure goodness of heart" after his last job with him, "out of pure goodness of heart" after the present job is finished? The proceeding is nothing short of criminal, and there ought to be a public investigation into it.

Temper may be a troublesome thing, but you never mend matters by losing it.

Talks on Orange Meat

(THE PURE FOOD)

Oven Perfection.

If you are a woman, you would revel in the huge ovens that cook Orange Meat. Much of the crisp deliciousness of Orange Meat is due to their matchless baking.

After the wheat has been cleaned, steam cooked, malted and flaked—the moist flakes are conveyed by automatic carriers to the ovens.

Endless steel screens carry the flakes back and forth, toasting each flake to a rich, golden brown—the final stage in our peerless process of converting a grain of wheat into the most perfect food known to science.

As the major part of every meal for thin people—dyspeptics—"bloodless" folk—those whose systems are "all run down"—and especially for children—Orange Meat has a place that nothing else can satisfy.

A lady in Walkerton says:—"Orange Meat is very wholesome. My brother at 81 years old, has taken a great liking to it, and I am glad, as it seems such a light wholesome food. I would recommend to those afflicted with stomach trouble."

At all grocers in 15c. and 25c. packages. Every 15c. package contains a coupon, good for premiums. 25c. or "Jumbo" package contains 2½ times the quantity of 15c. size. Write "Orange Meat, Kingston," for new premium catalogue.

To-morrow's International Sunday School Lesson.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN—GOLDEN TEXT IS: "BLESSED ARE THE MERCIFUL, FOR THEY SHALL OBTAIN MERCY."

Luke 10; 25-37. Memory verses, 33, 34. Golden Text—"Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy."

Jesus continued in Galilee for a few weeks after our last lesson, with the exception of a visit to Jerusalem at the time of the Feast of Tabernacles, Oct. 11-18. Late in October or early in November he made his final departure from Galilee. Jesus had now completed his work in two of the three Jewish provinces. (1) Judea (nearly a year); (2) Galilee (a year and nine months); and there remained but (3) Perea (about five months), where he had a work to do on his way to Jerusalem, and the final crowning effort to save the nation, and the great atonement on the cross.

Perea ("Beyond") was the country lying east of the Jordan from the Sea of Galilee to the Dead Sea. It was in the early part of this ministry that the incident of this lesson took place. Jesus was teaching and preaching as usual on his journey, when a certain lawyer. Lawyers in the New Testament were students and teachers of the Jewish law. They interpreted and explained the law and the many Jewish regulations derived from it. The distinction between a lawyer and a scribe is very indefinite; as a future historian might find it hard to define the distinction between a D.D. and a Rev., as applied to modern ministers. Stood up. Rose to indicate his purpose of a discussion. This implies that Jesus was in some house, perhaps discoursing on this very subject of eternal life. And tempted him. Rather, tested or tried him as to his teachings, whether they were wise and good, and accorded with, or differed from the teachings of the scribes. He tested him by some of the controverted questions of the day. Saying, Master, or teacher—equivalent to Rabbi of Rabboni. Jesus was an acknowledged teacher, as the lawyer was. What shall I do to inherit eternal life? How can I as a child of God inherit from my heavenly Father, and so have possession of, eternal life? Eternal life cannot be earned nor bought, but only inherited.

26. He said unto him. Jesus did not himself quote the commandments as in the case of the rich young ruler (Luke 18: 18-20), but as it was the business of this scribe to know the Scriptures, and as he acknowledged their authority and taught them, he referred the question back to them. What is written in the law? He thus avoided all carping criticism, and all opportunity for fault-finding with his teaching. How readest thou? The usual rabbinical formula when Scriptural evidence was wanted.

27. And he answering said, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God. This is the first duty of all God's creatures. He is worthy of love. He is lovable and attracts love. With all thy heart. Heart denotes in general terms the affection and will; affectionate choice, "the love of conscious resolve, expressed with will, which must at once become a second nature." And with all thy soul. Soul is the individual existence, the person himself, the seat of the will, dispositions, desires, character. The two words are united to teach that the entire undivided person must share in that which it has to perform with the heart. With all thy strength. The whole power of the man must go into this love. With all thy mind. True love has its intellectual and reasonable side. It is not blind. All love always exalts the mind and enlarges the intellect. And thy neighbor as thyself. This love is the principle in the heart from which flows the Golden Rule in practice, and the perfect keeping of all the commandments which refer to our duties to our fellow-men.

28. Thou hast answered right. For he had taken, not tradition, but the Scriptures for his authority. Hence, his answer agreed with the teachings of Jesus. The condition of salvation is the same in the Old Testament and the New, and in the eternal nature of things. This do, and thou shalt live.

29. The Jewish scribe willing, i.e., desiring, to justify himself, because he was not so sure that he lived up to the standard, and possessed this love which was eternal life. Said unto Jesus, and who is my neighbor? The lawyer apparently thought that by certain limitations as to who were meant by his neighbors, "Jews spelled large," he might still feel some assurance that he was possessed of eternal life.

30. A certain man went (was going) down from Jerusalem to Jericho. "The road was a path — very dangerous, lying much of the way in a deep ravine, through soft rocks in which caves and chambers abounded. It is still necessary to have an escort in passing over that road. And fell among thieves. Highway robbers, banditti. Forty thousand workmen were dismissed from work on the temple of Herod at this time. Some of these may have turned to robbery for a living. Stripped him of his raiment, implying that he was despoiled of everything he had. And wounded him, by inflicting blows upon him.

31. A certain priest. Jericho was one of the residences of the priests, who took turns at ministering in the Temple. He passed by on the other side of the ravine, as far as possible from the wounded man. There was possible danger from the same robbers. The priest was doubtless in haste to reach his home, and did not wish to spend the time and money and disagreeable labor that caring for the wounded would entail.

32. And likewise a Levite. A Levite was one of the tribe of Levi; a priest was of the family of Aaron in that tribe. The Levites performed the humble services of the temple, as cleaning, carrying fuel, and acting as choristers. Came and looked on him. This translation gives the impression that the Levite did more than the priest; but in the Greek the verb is the same. They both alike came and looked, and passed on.

33. But a certain Samaritan. The Samaritans were a mixed race, descended from a commingled ancestry of Jews and heathen at the time of the captivity of Israel (2 Kings 17-24). They accepted the Pentateuch only as their Bible. They were greatly despised by the Jews who "have no dealings with the Samaritans." (John 4-9.)

Note. It will add interest to this lesson to recall that the present Samaritan High Priest, Jacob, son of Aaron (presiding over the little remnant of less than 200 Samaritans), came from Shechem to Jerusalem and addressed in Hebrew the great Sunday School convention there in 1904. His address was interpreted by a Christian Jew, concluding thus:

"As representatives of one of the most ancient though indeed at present the smallest of the four monotheistic forms of religion, we, priests and laymen of the Samaritans bid to you a hearty welcome to the Land of Promise.

"In this representative assembly we recognize a fulfilment of the Divine precept, 'Rejoice, O ye nations, with his people' (Deut. 32-43)—and we seize this opportunity in order to record our knowledge and appreciation of the fact that the Founder of Christianity and all sincere disciples of his have always evinced a deep sympathy with our people, a reverence for Sacred Books, and an interest in our history.

"May the God of Israel bless you in your coming in, and in your going out, from this time forth and forever. Amen."

34. Bound up his wounds, requiring personal care and gentleness, pouring in (rather "on them," R.V.) oil and wine, the usual remedies in the east, and commended by Greek and Latin physicians. Set him on his own beast, while he himself walked beside him. His care must have consumed considerable time, and exposed him to danger from robbers. Brought him to an inn, more like our hotel than the common khan of Luke 2:7. And took care of him. Gave him his personal attention, which is more costly and more blessed than all our money.

35. And on the morrow . . . he took out two pence (denarii) from his girdle, worth about 16 cents each, but the usual pay for a day's labor (Matt. 20:2), so that it was equivalent to $3.00 or $4.00 in our day. Whatsoever thou spendest more, etc. He did all he could, consistently with his other duties.

36. Which now of these three . . was neighbor unto him? Ask yourself, not whom you are bound to love and aid, but whom you would wish to love you and aid you if you needed it, and you will know who is your neighbor.

37. Go, and do thou likewise. Then you will know that you have eternal life. The question with him now was no longer one of understanding the law, but of obeying it; not, who is my neighbor, but, do I love him? "The lesson is still more strongly taught by making the helper a Samaritan. Perhaps, if Jesus had been speaking in America, he would have made him a negro; or, if in France, a German; or, if in England, a "foreigner." It was a daring stroke to bring the despised name of "Samaritan" into the story, and one sees what a hard morsel to swallow the lawyer found it, by his unwillingness to name him after all.

THE HEART OF THE PARABLE.

The test of our love to God is our expressed love to our neighbor, because that is the outward visible fruit of love to God. "By their fruits ye shall know them." We may be mistaken as to our feelings. "Exquisite emotions may evaporate like waste steam, instead of being sett to drive wheels." We may not know the extent to which our high principles and ideals are really a part of our characters. But what we do, what we put into action toward our fellow-men shows our real character.

In Leigh Hunt's poem, "Abou Ben Adhem," when the angel appeared to him with his book, in which were written "the names of those who love the Lord," asked that his own name might be written as "one who lives his fellow-men." The angel appeared again—

"And showed the names whom love of God had blessed,
And lo! Ben Adhem's name led all the rest."

Compare the conditions given in the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew, where the good deeds enjoined are not substitutes for faith, and prayer, and love, and honesty, but are the proofs of a right heart, from which all virtues grow.. The fruits of the Spirit are the proofs of the Spirit. Flowers and fruit are not substitutes for seeds and culture, and the life of the tree. All these are the means by which flowers and fruits may be gained

Jesus Christ himself was the best type and example of the Good Samaritan. The human race had fallen among thieves, and had been robbed of hope, character, happiness, heaven. But Jesus came from heaven because he had compassion. He bound up man's wounds at infinite cost. He brought him to the inn, His Church, the company of His people, the "palace beautiful." He cares for him to the end, never leaving him, never forsaking him, till he is perfectly restored to his home, the Kingdom of God.

Professor Drummond speaks of a boy who asked; What does God do all day? Well, he is acting the Good Samaritan, all day, all the year, all eternity.

President Roosevelt said the other day that our true motto is "All men up, and not some men down. Every generous impulse in us revolts at the thought of thrusting down instead of helping any such man."

Illustration. "When Abraham sat at his tent door, according to his custom, waiting to entertain strangers, he espied an old man stooping and leaning on his staff, weary with age and travel, coming towards him, who was an hundred years of age. He received him kindly, washed his feet, provided supper, caused him to sit down, but observing that the old man ate and prayed not, nor begged for a blessing on his meat, asked him why he did not worship the God of heaven. The old man told him that he worshipped the fire only, and acknowledged no other God; at which answer Abraham grew so zealously angry that he thrust the old man out of his tent, and exposed him to all the evils of the night, and an unguarded condition. When the old man was gone, God called to him and asked where the stranger was; he replied, 'I thrust him away, because he did not worship thee.' God answered: 'I have suffered him these hundred years, though he dishonored me; and couldst not thou endure him for one night, when he gave thee no trouble?' Upon this, saith the story, Abraham fetched him back again and gave him hospitable entertainment and wise instruction. Go thou and do likewise; and thy charity will be rewarded by the God of Abraham." "This story," says Stanley, "was apparently told by a Jewish prisoner at Tripoli to the Persian poet, Sadi, whilst working as a slave, thence copied by Grotius, thence by Taylor, thence appropriated by Franklin."

MARTYRDOM DESCRIBED

Kingston Man Tells How He Suffered and How He was Released.

"For years a martyr," is how Chas. H. Powell, of 105 Raglan Street, Kingston, begins his story. "A martyr to chronic constipation, but now I am free from it and all through the use of Dr. Leonhardt's Anti-Pill.

CHAS. H. POWELL

"I was induced to try Anti-Pill by reading the testimony of some one who had been cured of constipation by it. I had suffered for eighteen years and had taken tons of stuff recommended as cures but which made me worse rather than better. Doctors told me there was no cure for me. Dr. Leonhardt's Anti-Pill cured me."

TIMELY TOPICS.

Parliament tried to prorogue on the 12th, but a factious Senator made them wait till the 13th—and Friday, too. There's bad luck coming for Laurier.

• • •

Again the result of the entrance exams in this city is forced upon our attention. As our readers know, in Belleville only 33 1-3 per cent. of the candidates passed. In Peterboro nearly 60 per cent. passed, and in Guelph over 91 per cent. of the candidates were successful. How is that? We refuse to believe that the boys and girls of other places are brighter and cleverer than the boys and girl of this good city. What is the reason? Can anyone tell us? We positively refuse to accept the sinister suggestion of the man on the next block—that it was because nearly all the examiners were Grits.

• • •

It is whispered that some of the local principals are very sore (to use a colloquialism) on one of the examiners, who, 'tis said, simply slaughtered the candidates in a certain subject. They claim that he used neither rhyme nor reason in his wholesale "slaughter of the innocents." Looking at the percentage of those who passed in this city and those who passed in other places one is forced to the conclusion that there must be something in this "grouch." Belleville, as before stated, has just as bright boys and girls as other places, why should they not achieve the same results?

• • •

Discussing this matter, a member of the Board of Education was outspoken in the belief that the High School is, after all, only a useless bill of expense for the abstract taxpayer The very large majority of Public school pupils quit when they pass the entrance. Why should their parents, who perhaps can ill afford it be compelled to help pay for the upkeep of the High School, to which, for the most part, only the sons and daughters of well-to-do people go? Looked at in this light, the High School is a luxury, pure and simple, and those who want luxuries, the speaker thought, should pay for them. The same gentleman said his own boys had gone through the High School, and had not received, so far as practical benefit was concerned, five cents worth of good. The above theory, it may be remarked, is not a new one; still, when a member of the Board of Education expresses himself in that way, it shows that iconoclastic ideas are abroad in more directions than one.

• • •

The old boys will be here a week from to-day. Will the committee which arranges for their entertainment kindly cut out anything in the line of an indoor meeting? The weather is too warm for long speeches. Let everything be on the al fresco plan.

• • •

It rather seems to us that what the old boys and girls would enjoy best of all would be an entire absence of formality. A chance to shake hands with their old friends and talk over old times—with necessary irrigation facilities, of course, thrown in.

• • •

A couple of our esteemed fellow-citizens have stopped us to commend warmly the suggestions made about necessary repairs to the old Dundas St. burying ground. They think that, with the assistance of a landscape gardener, the forlorn old place could be made to look quite attractive. No doubt, providing the bric-a-brac were up-ended and the cows driven out. But really, with the hot weather upon us, we hardly feel equal to tackling that momentous question again, after wrestling with it tooth and nail a few years ago. We feel, just now, like turning the job over over to the Ladies' Aid.

• • •

By the noise the Belleville delegates are making in London at the Congress of Chambers of Commerce, the English people will think Belleville is as big as Montreal, at least.

• • •

A New York clergyman denounces the summer hotel, declaring it responsible for "ruined homes, broken hearts, destroyed hopes, crushed affections, reputations blasted, dishonored lives, tormented souls, cheerless graves and an undone eternity." But what would that dissatisfied man expect summer visitors to do—camp out?

HAIR SOFT AS SILK.

New Scientific Treatment Kills Dandruff Germs, and Makes Hair Soft.

It is an accepted fact, a proven fact, that dandruff is a germ disease; and it is also a demonstrated fact that Newbro's Herpicide kills the dandruff germ. Without dandruff falling hair would stop, and thin hair will thicken. Herpicide not only kills the dandruff germ, but it also makes hair as soft as silk. It is the most delightful hair dressing made. It cleanses the scalp from dandruff and keeps it clean and healthy. Itching and irritation are instantly relieved, and permanently cured. There's nothing "just as good." Take no substitute. Chicago census takers were paid one cent per name for all children located. A Tiny Engine.

The current issue of the American Machinist contains the cut of a miniature steam engine which is about the size of a house fly. The engine weighs four grains troy, which is about the weight of an ordinary match. It was made by Thomas H. Robinson, watchmaker, of Toronto, and is manufactured of gold and compressed steel, being run by compressed air. The fly wheel makes 6000 revolutions per minute. The bore of the cylinder is 3-100 of an inch and the stroke 1-32 of an inch. The engine is on exhibition in the window of Mr. Robinson's store at 526 Yonge St., Toronto.

THE FARMER WAS TOO CONFIDING.

GAVE NOTE ON FANNING MILL TRANSACTION AND APPEARS TO BE MIXED UP WITH A SWINDLE.

A few weeks ago a man giving his name as M. K. Tremaine called upon a farmer who resides in Sidney and represented that he was an agent for the Manson-Campbell Company, of Chatham, who manufacture fanning mills and other farming machinery. Tremaine took an order from the yeoman in question for a fanning mill and it is alleged that the agent induced the farmer to sign a note for $13, payable on the 1st day of July. As the day approached for the payment of the note the yeoman received a letter from Tremaine, from Bowmanville, stating that the fanning mill was being sent and that he had better send him the $13 for the face value of the note, which was about due. A registered letter, containing the amount of the note, was sent to Tremaine at Bowmanville. A few days later the farmer was surprised to receive a letter from Tremaine, which bore the post mark of Baden, Ont. The letter in effect was as follows;

"The registered letter received O. K. I am not an agent for the Campbell Company, and you ought to know better than do business in that manner. My name is not Tremaine.

"Yours, etc.,
"X.Y.Z."

The party who had thus been taken in consulted Police Magistrate Flint in reference to the matter. The Magistrate wrote to the Campbell Company at Chatham about the affair and this morning received a reply, which stated that Tremaine was in no wise connected with their concern, but that a man by that name had done some business for Mr. E. E. Miller, of Wiarton, who is an authorized agent at that place for the Campbell Company. Tremaine no doubt secured the note in this way, with which he worked his game, and may possibly have succeeded in inducing others to sign similar notes.

A Definite Proposition

If you are ailing you may take the most highly recommended pills, tinctures or elixirs, but you have to take chances on deriving any benefit. If you take FERROL, however, you take no chances; you must receive benefit, for the simple reason that FERROL contains in palatable and easily digested form the essential elements that go to the production of health, vim and energy. If you burn coal you get heat; if you take FERROL you get increased weight, strength and energy with just as great certainty.

FERROL

is phosphorized Oil and Iron. It is suitable to all seasons and all conditions. It is just as readily digested and just as much required in hot weather as in cold. It is taken with advantage to every one at every stage of life from infancy to old age.

To those who are threatened with lung trouble, who are suffering from coughs, colds, bronchitis or any kindred trouble or whose system is run down or weight impaired FERROL is a prime necessity, because it is the only preparation which can be absolutely depended upon to effect a permanent cure.

Picton Minister Takes a Bride.

At Cobourg, Ontario, the marriage took place this week of Miss Marianne Beatrice, daughter of Rev. A. H. Reynar, M.A., LL.D., professor in Victoria University, to Rev. William Leslie Armitage, vicar of the Anglican Church, Picton. The wedding took place at the home of the bride's parents. Rev. N. S. Burwash, Chancellor of Victoria University, officiated. The rooms were decorated with daisies. The bride, who was given away by her father, wore white net over silk with veil and orange blossoms. She was attended by her sister, Miss Constance Reynar, wearing pink flowered organdie over pink silk. Rev. and Mrs. Armitage left on the evening train for the west on their honeymoon trip and later will reside in Picton.

Opposed Appointment Of Christian Scientist.

Kingston, Ont., July 13.—There were murmurings at the Board of Education meeting last night over the recommendation of the Management Committee that Miss Eva Gilbert, a Christian Scientist, be appointed to the teaching staff of the Public schools.

"I'll oppose that appointment," declared Mr. W. H. Godwin. "That young lady holds peculiar religious beliefs and should not be permitted to teach in our Public Schools. I'd rather appoint a Roman Catholic."

Mr. J. D. Thompson said that he did not think that a girl who belonged to a sect that had no sacraments and did not believe in the divinity of Jesus Christ was capable of instructing the school children in the Christian religion.

The appointment, however, was made, as the young lady was one of those recommended by Inspector Kidd, who was satisfied that she would carry out the necessary religious instruction.

CAN THEY SUE?

Coates, Son & Co., Give Government Notice of Their Intentions.

Toronto, July 14.—That memorandum whereby Hon. Richard Harcourt, when acting for the Provincial Treasurer, agreed, as they understood, to allow Coates, Son & Co., the financial agents of London, England, to float the permanent provincial loan to redeem the bills issued in connection with the T. & N. O. Railway, promises to attain still wider publicity than it acquired in the House last session.

The English firm recently wrote to the Provincial Treasurer, pressing their former claim for brokerage at one-quarter of one per cent. on the $6,000,000, or about $15,000.

The claim was again disputed by Hon. Mr. Matheson, in accordance with the decision of the Cabinet. He reminded them that they had on two occasions had the opportunity of tendering for the new loan. Both times their tenders were so low they could not be considered.

The Messrs. Coates regretted the decision of the Cabinet and placed the matter, as they notified the Government, in the hands of their Toronto lawyers, Barwick, Aylesworth, Wright & Moss.

As the Government cannot be sued without the consent of the Attorney-General, some delicate negotiations may be anticipated.

BOLT HITS ORANGE HALL.

One Man Killed and Over 100 Rendered Unconscious By the Shock.

St. John, N. B., July 14.—During the severe electrical storm which passed over this section of the province early Thursday morning lightning struck the Orange Hall at Wellsford, while members of the lodge were celebrating the 12th.

One man, Ludlow Nase, was instantly killed; a young woman was terribly burned, and over a hundred rendered unconscious by the shock. The hall was badly damaged.

A panic ensued, and for a time it was feared that many would be crushed to death as the lights were cut off and the hall was left in darkness. Most of the people who were stunned by the shock recovered after a few minutes, but in some cases the action of the lightning was most marked.

Lightning struck several houses in this city, and the whole fire department was called out to save valuable buildings in the north end.

Justified by Merit.

As you know, it is an uncommon proceeding on our part to so emphatically endorse any remedy as we have endorsed Bu-Ju.

But the more we know of it, the more earnest we are. All we say is, Bu-Ju can help anyone suffering from kidney trouble, as no other remedy can. It works for itself—shows more plainly than words its real use to all who seek a cure.

If it is not just as represented, you can have your money back. Fifty cents a box.

ELOPED WITH MARRIED MAN.

Maidstone, Ontario, Girl Goes Away With Farm Hand.

Detroit, Mich., July 14.—Mr. and Mrs. Brady, farmers, of Maidstone Township, Ont., are looking for their 20-year-old daughter, Stella, who eloped on Thursday with George Burling, 38 years of age, who was employed by the Bradys.

Burling already has two wives living, each with children. His home is at Cottam, Essex, Ont. Fifteen years ago he eloped with a Pontiac, Michigan, girl, took her to Cottam; lived with her ten years, then ran away. His wife was glad to have him go, and took no steps to punish him.

Three years ago he eloped with a Cottam girl, lived with her in Windsor until lately, when he left her. The Bradys were advised to consult with Crown Attorney Rodd of Windsor.

Toronto, July 14.—The following statement was communicated to the press yesterday afternoon:

"President Loudon, having peremptorily resigned the position of president, and the exigencies of the board of governors requiring the filling of the office of president without delay, and Principal Hutton having stated to the board that he was not a candidate for the position of president of the University of Toronto, and the board, being most desirous of procuring the benefit of the services of one skilled in the details of the work of the university, unanimously appointed Principal Hutton to the position of president of the University of Toronto until a permanent appointment be made.

HAMLIN GARLAND

gold; and these continued to chip and to dig and to hammer.

Valley Springs was becoming known as a pleasant health resort, and the waters of its springs were being bottled and shipped to the eastern cities. Each year a larger number of stricken ones came to find respite, if not recovery, in its gloriously bright sunlight and pure air. For years it remained a village and its business men merely shopkeepers and resident ranch owners, but as its fame spread families of wealth and social position in the east began to settle along the bank of the Bear and to build homes into which the sunlight streamed with healing magic, and the men of these families began to look about for business and for investment, and not a few of them were in the mood to listen when rough bearded men began to plod down the trail from Bozle Creek bringing sacks of promising ore.

Returns from these samples, sent away to be assayed, started a flight of golden eagles east and west. Again the adventurous youth, the skilled prospector, the gambler and all the uneasy and shifting elements that follow such lures poured into the valley and toiled over the trail to the grassy hills of Bozle.

At first, though short of breath by reason of the altitude, two full miles above the sea, some of these incomers laughed and some were angry. "Gold! In these grassy hills? Impossible!" And they went away again with bitter words. It was Mount Horeb repeated on a large scale.

But the assayers, the men of learning, persisted and in their little mortars brayed the ore and in tiny portable furnaces smelted for many a sturdy miner minute buttons of shining metal. The gold was there, and at last even the most skeptical believed.

Then the inflow began in earnest. The trail was beaten smooth by swarming feet. It became a stage road. A great railroad sent surveyors toiling up each of the deep and winding canyons in the attempt to reach the mighty camp whose fame was beginning to shine throughout the world. The beautiful grassy hills were blotched with eruptions of red earth. Paths appeared leading from burrow to burrow like runways in a town of prairie dogs.

The main street of Bozle was 10,000 feet above the sea, but at last, on the top of Pine mountain, a vein of ore running $2,000 to the ton was discovered, and another town arose—full 11,000 feet above sea level—the highest town in all America, and this became at once celebrated above all others and was called Skytown.

In the end Skytown dominated the whole camp and gave name to it. Bozle, Grass Mountain, Pin Gulch, Hoffman, all were subordinate in fame as they were topographically, and the press alluded to the region as the Skytown mining district.

In those days the barroom of the Mountain House in Bozle was the central stock exchange of the whole camp. It swarmed of an evening with business men from Denver, Kansas City, Chicago, Salt Lake City, San Francisco and New York. Every great newspaper had its representative there, alert and indefatigable, seeking the latest word of strikes and sales.

At the time when Raymond entered it Skytown was the busiest, most vital and in some ways the most picturesque mining district in the world. It was at its height as a poor man's camp. New territory was being opened up each day. Each evening brought stories of strikes—scores of them.

The streets of Bozle were graceless and grassless, but Valley Springs was a bower of trees and growing vines. The houses of the peak were tents, slab shacks and cabins of aspen poles, and remained so, while splendid stone palaces had already appeared in the valley, and every comfort and nearly every luxury of the east was obtainable, almost common.

Skytown was the cupola of Sky camp. It surveyed the whole field, dominated only by the glittering crest of Mogalyon, which rose nearly 4,000 feet higher into the thin and fleckless air. Bozle and Hoffman and Indian Creek and Eureka and a half dozen other villages lay below.

This was the town, the camp, toward which Raymond had been gazing in longing and irresolution for two years and to which he directed his steps as soon as he was able to walk with something of his old time vigor.

For a week he did nothing but stroll slowly up and down the streets of Bozle, studying his surroundings, listening to all that was said and asking searching questions of every man who seemed to know anything of mining matters. The altitude at first troubled him greatly, but he ate well and slept well, and day by day his strength and native resolution expanded within him, and he began to definitely seek a place whereon to try his hands at labor.

One night as he sat toasting his shins before the big fire in the hotel he became immensely interested in the grand physical proportions and easy, unstudied grace of a middle aged miner who stood with his back to the fire replying to the rapid questions of a young reporter whose head was bent absorbedly above his notebook and pencil. The prospector satisfied every requisite of a mountaineer. His massive head, covered with grizzled hair; his handsome, weather beaten, smiling face; his worn laced boots, spattered with mud; his rusty brown jacket and his broad hat, worn with careless yet unfailing grace, made him easily the most picturesque figure in the room, and when some one clapped him on the back and called out, "Hello, Kelly!" Raymond realized, with a pleasant warming of the heart, that he was looking upon Rocky Mountain Kelly, who knew the ranges of the west as intimately as the lines on the palm of his hand.

Seeking opportunity, he touched the big man on the shoulder. "Are you Matthew Kelly?"

Kelly turned his keen gray eyes on his questioner. "I am, sir. What can I do for ye?"

"I've heard you're a good natured man," began Raymond.

Kelly slid his hand into his pocket. "How much is it?"

Raymond laughed. "Do I look like that?"

"You look like a sick man," replied Kelly, scrutinizing him. "And a hungry man."

"I'm neither," Raymond smilingly replied. "I've just eaten the supper they serve here, and I'm fairly comfortable, but I want to ask your advice about a business matter. If you had a little money and wanted to break into mining, what would you do?"

"Take out a lease," answered Kelly promptly.

"Do you know of a promising property to lease?"

"I do."

"Will you show it to me?"

"I will."

Raymond was amused by the crisp succinctness of these replies. It was plain that the prospector was sizing him up, and favorably.

Kelly indicated a chair. "Sit down, man; ye look like a citizen with a lung faded. Where are ye from?"

"I'm a rancher from the plains."

"And ye want to mine?"

"Yes."

"It's ninety-nine chances to one ye lose y'r wad."

"I know it."

"Have ye a wife?"

"I have not."

"Any one dependin' on ye?"

"No one."

Kelly relaxed, and his eyes began to gleam friendlily. "Very well, then, I consent to rob ye. I'm the owner of one mine into which I've put me last dollar, but I know a dandy proposition which I'd like to display. I'll take ye with me over the hills when ye're a little better acquainted with me, and when ye've seen the mine we'll talk the terms of partnership. The bankers all know me, and the faro dealers likewise, the more shame to me." A smile of singular charm curved his handsome lips. "But never mind that. Matt Kelly never tuck advantage of any man, and that, I think, ye'll find me neighbors agreed upon. I'll not say I like the looks of ye—that would sound like blarney—the truth bein' I'm seekin' a partner, but in a day or two I'll lay me scheme before ye."

Putting aside business, they talked of their personal affairs, Raymond guardedly, Kelly with entire freedom and some humor. Kelly was married and had two little boys, for whom he was now living. "Since Nora came," he said, with tenderness, "I drink no more, but gambling is in me blood. I play no more with cards or dice, but with lodes and shafts. I'm always taking on new chances. I load meself up with 'good things' till me back is broke and me hands fall empty."

There was something winning in the humorous glance of his big, gray eyes, and Raymond sat with him long. His vast experience, his indomitable good nature, his physical pride, all appealed to the rancher with such power that he left him with a distinct exaltation. "Here is the man to help me make my fortune, and I can be guide to him," he added, and he went to sleep that night with greater confidence in his future than at any time since taking Barnett's ranch. He set his teeth hard in the determination to win, and though he had put Ann quite out of his plans for the future, she remained an inspiration and a lure.

His feeling of confidence in Kelly was deepened by his ride with him next day.

Turning from the gulch road, Kelly led the way up the side of Pine mountain, along a trail which braided itself upon a grassy slope like a purple brown ribbon. The air was keen, the sky a fleckless blue hemisphere. Raymond's blood leaped with the joy of it and with a sense that his feet were set at last on the road to fortune.

All about him the miners were climbing, each his special way, swinging a tin bucket which sparkled like glass in the morning sun. Great wains loaded with ore rolled creaking on their downward course, while others of their kind, piled high with lumber and machinery, crawled slowly up the curving roads. On every side men were tunneling into the hillsides, trenching in gullies and toiling at windlasses whose joints cried out resoundingly as the heavy ore boxes rose. The whole scene set forth buoyant activity and hope. Each man had either struck ore or hoped to do so at any moment.

Here and there on the slope a tall and shapeless shaft house rose, with heaps of orange and blue gray refuse rock close beside it. The whole camp was as yet disorganized, formless and debatable. Not one in a hundred of the mines was a paying property; all the others were mere prospects.

As they left Baldy and turned to climb Pine mountain the dwellings thickened. They were nearly all built of the smooth, straight trunks of the aspen, but nearer the summit were of fir, and a few of them stood in picturesque nooks amid the rocks. Toward one of these, more homelike than the

IS COMING TO BELLEVILLE!

WE take great pleasure in announcing to the people of Belleville and all this surrounding country that we have engaged Dr. Wm. E. Montgomery, expert "shadow test" Specialist to teach us his new and wonderful system of sight testing. Our object in bringing this Specialist to our store is two-fold. We wish to perfect ourselves in this new system of sight testing, originated and taught by Dr. Montgomery, of Toronto, and also we wish to give the people of this section the opportunity to consult free of charge with Canada's most gifted optician. This special optical campaign will begin at our store on—and continue for seventeen days, closing on Saturday, August 4. Dr. Montgomery comes to us from PETERBORO where he has been engaged teaching and practicing for the past month, and where hundreds called to consult with him. Our invitation is broad——come every eyesight sufferer—come every headache sufferer—Parents bring your children, all who will may know of this wonderful new way of "looking into the eye" and measuring the defect, be it great or small. Do not delay or put it off. We are now booking appointments—his services are free to the public—those requiring glasses pay for material only. Yours to serve.—

DISEASED KIDNEYS.

MADE SOUND AND STRONG THROUGH DR. WILLIAMS' PINK PILLS.

"Two doctors told me that I was incurable, but thanks to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills I am a well woman to-day." This strong statement was made by Mrs. Ed. Rose, of St. Catharines, to a reporter, who hearing of her remarkable cure called to see her. "A few years ago while living in Hamilton," continued Mrs. Rose, I was attacked with kidney trouble. The doctor lulled me into a state of false security, while the disease continued to make inroads. Finding that I was not getting better I consulted a specialist, who told me that the trouble had developed into Bright's disease and that I was incurable. I had dwindled to a mere shadow and suffered from pain in the back, and often a difficulty in breathing. Insomnia next came to add to my tortures and I passed dreary, sleepless nights and felt that I had not long to live. In this despairing condition my husband urged me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and to please him I began to take them. After using several boxes I felt the pills were helping me and I continued taking them until I had used some twenty boxes, when I was again restored to perfect health, and every symptom of the trouble had disappeared. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills certainly brought me back from the shadow of the grave, and I have since enjoyed the best of health."

Every drop of blood in the body is filtered by the kidneys. If the blood is weak or watery the kidneys have no strength for their work and leave the blood unfiltered and foul. Then the kidneys get clogged with painful, poisonous impurities, which brings aching backs and deadly Bright's disease. The only hope is to strike without delay at the root of the trouble in the blood with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They make new blood. They flush the kidneys clean, heal their inflammation and give them strength for their work. Common kidney pills only touch the symptoms—Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure the cause. That is why they cure for good, and at the same time improve the health in every other way. But you must get the genuine pills, with the full name, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, on the wrapper around each box. Sold by all medicine dealers or direct from the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50.

Want Thanksgiving Day Date Changed

The Eastern Passenger Association has decided to circulate petitions praying the Government to change the date of Thanksgiving Day from a Thursday in November to the fourth Monday in October.

It is thought that such a change would ensure better weather, would be a benefit to commercial travellers, and would increase the railway travel, as Monday holidays are more popular than others, owing to the opportunity they afford for two or three-day trips.

It was also remarked that the change of day would be an improvement as regards the religious aspect of the holiday, as added significance would be given to the Thanksgiving services on the previous Sunday.

Stomach Troubles

Mrs Sue Martin, an old and highly respected resident of Faisonia, Miss., was sick with stomach trouble for more than six months Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets cured her. She says: "I can now eat anything I want and am the proudest woman in the world to find such a good medicine." To be had at R. Templeton and Co.'s Drug Store. Sample free.
